In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err by allowing co-defendant and witnesses to testify that he stated that defendant needed money to pay his probation officer as any prejudice from admitting the testimony did not substantially outweigh the probative value of allowing the testimony to establish defendant's motive and intent for the murder. Howell v. State, 860 So. 2d 704 (Miss. 2003), cert. dismissed, 543 U.S. 440, 125 S. Ct. 856, 160 L. Ed. 2d 873 (2005).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a witness to testify concerning an incident with the victim where the incident was just one more incident fitting the pattern of defendant's behavior, was not unduly prejudicial to defendant, and did not confuse the issues. Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

It is contrary to the spirit of Miss. R. Evid. 404 to hold an appellant barred from raising an issue on appeal because of citing the wrong subpart of the correct Rule. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

If an accused objects to Rule 404(b) evidence and the trial court, after conducting a Rule 403 analysis, finds that the probative value of the evidence outweighs the prejudicial effect, the trial court must treat the objection to the admissibility of Rule 404(b) evidence as a request for a limiting instruction. Webster v. State, 754 So. 2d 1232 (Miss. 2000).

Even when other-crimes evidence is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, it must pass through the ultimate filter of Rule 403. Jasper v. State, 759 So. 2d 1136 (Miss. 1999).

In the context of the admissibility of other bad acts evidence, the rule makes no distinctions between prior and subsequent acts. Fielder v. Magnolia Bev. Co., 757 So. 2d 925 (Miss. 1999).

The determination of "prior bad acts" testimony is a dual test encompassing both Rule 404(b) and the prejudice test of Rule 403. Kelly v. State, 735 So. 2d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Proof of another crime is admissible where the offense charged and that offered to be proved are so connected as to constitute one transaction, where it is necessary to identify the defendant, where it is material to prove motive and there is an apparent relation or connection between the act proposed to be proved and that charged, where the accusation involves a series of criminal acts which must be proved to make out the offense, or where it is necessary to prove scienter or guilty knowledge. Watts v. State, 717 So. 2d 314 (Miss. 1998).

Evidence of prior offenses committed by a defendant, not resulting in a conviction, is generally inadmissible either for impeachment purposes or as a part of the state's case in chief. Underwood v. State, 708 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 1998).

Proof of another crime is admissible where the offense charged and that offered to be proved are so interrelated as to constitute a single transaction or occurrence or a closely related series of transactions or occurrences; such proof of another crime is also admissible where it is necessary to identify the defendant, where it is material to prove motive, and there is an apparent relation or connection between the act proposed to be proved and that charged, where the accusation involves a series of criminal acts which must be proved to make out the offense, or where it is necessary to prove scienter or guilty knowledge. Underwood v. State, 708 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 1998).

Evidence of specific acts of the deceased toward third parties are not admissible to show bad character of the deceased or non-conformity therewith. Russell v. State, 607 So. 2d 1107 (Miss. 1992).

Even if exception under M.R.E. Rule 404(b) is invoked, a trial court is still required to conduct balancing analysis under Rule 403, to determine whether probative value of evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Lockett v. State, 517 So. 2d 1317 (Miss. 1987).

Bad acts.

Petitioner inmate was not denied the effective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to object to evidence of the inmate's alleged bad acts; evidence that a jacket the inmate brought into the house had been stolen from a vehicle was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and counsel did not render ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to object to admissible evidence. Manning v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120719 (N.D. Miss. Dec. 29, 2009).

Trial court properly employed the two-part analysis for admissibility under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) and the balancing test required by Miss. R. Evid. 403 in admitting evidence of defendant's acts prior to the murder; the challenged testimony was relevant and probative, establishing that defendant and the victim were together less than half an hour before the victim's body was discovered and placing the murder weapon in defendant's hands shortly before the shooting. Welde v. State, 3 So. 3d 113 (Miss. 2009).

Accident victim's testimony that she heard a neighbor say that the defendant driver had previously been speeding was admitted in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because it was evidence of a prior act that was offered to create the inference that, because the driver had sped in the past, he was speeding on the day of the accident. Washington v. Kelsey, 990 So. 2d 242 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

When the state introduced evidence of a struggle between defendant and police officers in a pool hall, where a bag of marijuana fell out of defendant's sleeve, the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because the evidence showed intent, motive, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, absence of mistake or accident, or opportunity, and the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative, under Miss. R. Evid. 403. Williams v. State, 962 So. 2d 129 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err in admitting victim's testimony that defendant said he was going to rape the victim and her daughter as the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) as it went to defendant's intent to hurt the victim and her daughter. Hampton v. State, 910 So. 2d 651 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

It was implicit in the trial court's statements that it found evidence that defendant had not paid a customer for several loads of timber cut from his land more probative than prejudicial, and the court could not find that the trial court had abused its discretion in admitting the evidence during defendant's trial for larceny of lumber. Pollard v. State, 932 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Testimony that one of defendant's victims was involved in an insurance scam with defendant was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because the trial court conducted an appropriate Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing analysis, and the trial court was not obligated to give a sua sponte limiting instruction on evidence pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Rubenstein v. State, 941 So. 2d 735 (Miss. 2006).

In a burglary of a house conviction, since the victim's vehicle was stolen during the commission of the burglary of the house, the admission of testimony about the stolen car was necessary for the jury to get a full and complete picture of the facts. Therefore, the trial court did not commit reversible error by allowing testimony about that bad act into evidence. Harris v. State, 907 So. 2d 972 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 910 So. 2d 574, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 453 (Miss. 2005).

Court rejected defendant's claim that evidence of prior bad acts were improperly admitted in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because defense counsel never objected and the prior bad act evidence was admitted in rebuttal after the defense opened the door to defendant's character. Also the court rejected defendant's claim that the prior bad act evidence was not relevant to any of the statutory aggravating factors enumerated in Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-101(5) because § 99-19-101(1) did not limit the evidence that could be presented at the sentencing phase to evidence relevant to the aggravating circumstances, but rather the State was allowed to rebut mitigating evidence through cross-examination, introduction of rebuttal evidence or by argument. Hodges v. State, 912 So. 2d 730 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 546 U.S. 1037, 126 S. Ct. 739, 163 L. Ed. 2d 579, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 8670, 74 U.S.L.W. 3322 (2005), remanded by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 214 (Miss. Apr. 20, 2006).

Where defendant was tried for murdering his wife, having 2 out of more than the 20 witnesses who testified at trial briefly mention that the victim had bruises at various times prior to death did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(1). Defendant never objected to the substance of the testimony, but only asked that the State show a time frame in which the bruises had occurred; the State did so and the trial court properly found the testimony was relevant and admissible. Ross v. State, 883 So. 2d 1181 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 883 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant adopted son testified that he had never engaged in any kind of homosexual conduct with defendant father; thus, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), evidence that he and and defendant father engaged in homosexual activities while incarcerated was admissible to impeach his testimony and the probative value of that testimony was not substantially outweighed by the dangers espoused in Miss. R. Evid. 403. Moreover, the jury was specifically instructed that it could consider the witness's testimony for the limited purpose of determining the truth and veracity of the defendant son's testimony. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was proper where his objection to admission of other wrong or criminal acts was untimely; even if the trial judge had wrongly admitted such testimony, defendant's objection was untimely under Miss. R. Evid. 103(a)(1) because a full six pages in the transcript fell between the testimony and the objection. Ball v. State, 845 So. 2d 736 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a rape and simple assault case, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) did not play any part in the issue of the admissibility of letters that defendant had apparently written to the victim, his estranged wife, because the act of writing a letter was not a prior bad act similar in any way to the act of rape. Williams v. State, 868 So. 2d 346 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not improperly limit defendant's testimony when it sustained an objection by the State to defense counsel's invitation to defendant to proceed with particulars about why defendant believed, through talking with others, that a prison correctional officer was violent; while in a self-defense case, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2), the reputation of the victim, in this case the officer, was relevant when there was a claim that the victim was the initial aggressor, the defense was not truly based on such a claim, and defendant did not submit a proffer that gave greater details as to exactly what defendant understood about the officer's violent behavior, and pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 103(a), the court failed to find that a substantial right of defendant's was affected by the trial court's ruling. Sheffield v. State, 844 So. 2d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not improperly limit a defense witness's testimony when the trial court sustained an objection by the State to the witness's attempt to begin talking about a prison correctional officer's alleged sexual improprieties with a female inmate; while in a self-defense case, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2), the reputation of the victim, in this case the officer, was relevant when there was a claim that the victim was the initial aggressor, the defense was not truly based on such a claim, and an allegation of sexual misconduct did nothing to show a propensity for unprovoked violence on the part of the officer. Sheffield v. State, 844 So. 2d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not improperly refuse to allow a defense witness to testify about an incident in which the witness was allegedly assaulted by a prison correctional officer; while in a self-defense case, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2), the reputation of the victim, in this case the officer, was relevant when there was a claim that the victim was the initial aggressor, the defense was not truly based on such a claim, and absent a showing that defendant was aware of the alleged prior incident, there was no basis for defendant's claim that defendant attacked the officer preemptively to avoid injury. Sheffield v. State, 844 So. 2d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's objection to "other acts" evidence was properly denied, as defense counsel's cross-examination questions "opened the door" for the State's questioning on redirect examination. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

In a capital murder prosecution, evidence of the child victim's vaginal abrasions and unexplained bruising after defendant moved into her home was properly admitted to rebut his theory that the death was accidental. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting statement that defendant had threatened the victim the day before she was killed as it was highly probative of motive and intent, and evidence of an earlier bad act can be admitted when it is so interrelated to the crime that it shows a continuing occurrence. Anthony v. State, 843 So. 2d 51 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 842 So. 2d 578 (Miss. 2003).

In defendant's murder trial, while defendant's dealings with a witness did constitute evidence of prior bad acts, the evidence was admissible to show motive, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge and absence of mistake or accident, and also because the probative value of the evidence outweighed any possible unfair prejudice, and an instruction was given to the jury on the limited purpose for which the evidence was being allowed. Adams v. State, 851 So. 2d 366 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 849 So. 2d 899 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where defendant shot victim in both legs, trial court did not err in prohibiting defense counsel from delving into victim's prior criminal history. McNair v. State, 814 So. 2d 153 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Subsequent bad act evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) where the other crime evidence showed defendant had essentially the same plan and preparation to kill a man for life insurance proceeds as she did when she conspired to murder the victim in the instant case. Leedom v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 213 (Miss. Aug. 30, 2001), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 796 So. 2d 1010, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 241 (Miss. 2001).

The theory of the law as found in Rule 404(b) that bars the jury from considering unrelated bad acts does not apply with the same force to bad acts that are inextricably intertwined in the criminal event being tried; thus, in a prosecution for robbery, it was not error for the court to permit the introduction of evidence that the defendant threatened to rape one of the victims and committed two acts of sexual battery upon her. Weathersby v. State, 769 So. 2d 857 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Bias and veracity.

In a prosecution for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute arising from the discovery of the defendant in his mother's home in possession of more than eight ounces of marijuana, it was not error, during the cross-examinaton of the defendant's brother, for the court to allow the prosecution to ask hypothetically if there had been any marijuana found anytime in the house before or after the incident at issue and if that would change his mind about whether the defendant would have tolerated marijuana in his mother's home since such question was asked to show the defendant's brother's bias and veracity, rather than to elicit inadmissible character evidence. Fox v. State, 756 So. 2d 753 (Miss. 2000).

Cautionary instructions.

Defendant moved for a mistrial after the improper testimony of a police officer during defendant's trial for sale of cocaine; however, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the mistrial because after defendant's counsel objected, the trial court quickly admonished the jury, and the prosecutor did not intentionally elicit the witness' testimony. Yarbrough v. State, 911 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2005).

Character of victim.

In a manslaughter case, defendant's right to a fundamentally fair trial was denied because the trial court refused to allow the admission of the testimony of two police officers under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2) where there was sufficient testimony to create a jury issue as to whether the victim was the aggressor in the incident that led to his death; the officers' testimony was relevant to show prior incidents so that the jury could have placed itself in defendant's shoes at the time of the incident. Miller v. State, 956 So. 2d 221 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err in excluding evidence proffered by defendant's ex-wife that defendant had been a chaperone for their children's high school activities and she did not believe he would harm a young person, as the bases for the ex-wife's opinions were events that had occurred nine years earlier. Thus, the events were too remote in time to be relevant. Ladnier v. State, 878 So. 2d 926 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2)(b) was appropriate because the testimony provided by the victim and another dispelled the argument in support of allowing testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2) to prove a character trait for violence on the part of the victim; the evidence at issue failed to demonstrate that the victim was the initial aggressor during a prior incident. Gates v. State, 936 So. 2d 335 (Miss. 2006).

In a murder prosecution, the trial court properly excluded reference to an altercation between the defendant and the victim two months before the shooting, in which the victim allegedly beat the defendant with an iron pipe, since the victim was not the aggressor on the day he was shot but rather, the defendant went to the victim's place of business armed and looking for the victim. McGilberry v. State, 784 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for sexual battery characterized as a "he said, she said" case, the defendant was improperly precluded from introducing evidence of the reputation for truthfulness of the complaining witness. Vaughan v. State, 759 So. 2d 1092 (Miss. 1999).

It was not error for court at murder trial to exclude victim's criminal records, because victim's prior drug conviction and probation were simply not at issue. Davis v. State, 684 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1170, 117 S. Ct. 1437, 137 L. Ed. 2d 544 (1997).

Wife's propensity for violence with a butcher knife was admissible as a character trait, where husband's defense at murder trial rested on justifiable homicide. Heidel v. State, 587 So. 2d 835 (Miss. 1991).

Confession.

Defendant's confession to a contemporaneous burglary was properly admitted during a trial for armed robbery because it showed identity, and the two crimes were so interrelated that they were part of the same transaction or occurrence; exclusion under Miss. R. Evid. 403 was not required because the confession was highly probative. Weaver v. State, 852 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Construction.

When defense counsel objected to the mention of prior crimes, wrongs, or acts, the trial court committed reversible error when it failed to weigh the prejudicial and probative value of that evidence. Robinson v. State, 735 So. 2d 208 (Miss. 1999).

Drug offenses.

Testimony of defendant's prior cocaine sales was properly admitted as the trial court did a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test and gave the jury a limiting instruction. Long v. State, 33 So. 3d 1122 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's convictions for possession of more than 500 grams but less than 1 kilogram of marijuana with the intent to distribute within 1,500 feet of a church, and possession of more than 10 grams but less than 30 grams of cocaine with intent to distribute within 1,500 feet of a church were proper because an officer's testimony that a confidential informant went to an address identified as defendant's residence and purchased narcotics from defendant was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) to demonstrate the intent element of both counts of possession of narcotics with intent to distribute them. Furthermore, the circuit court issued a limiting instruction to the jury and consequently, defendant did not suffer undue prejudice due to the admission of the testimony at issue. Thompson v. State, 33 So. 3d 542 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

As the marijuana and the cocaine were in the same container within appellant's purse, the discovery of the marijuana led to a deputy's discovery of the cocaine at issue in the second trial; further, appellant's admission that the marijuana was hers demonstrated that it was more likely that the cocaine was also appellant's as she had control of the container in which both drugs were discovered. Even if the marijuana showed evidence of a separate crime, its introduction at trial was necessary to provide context for the deputy's ultimate discovery of the cocaine; accordingly, there was no abuse of discretion by the circuit court judge in allowing this evidence to be introduced to the jury. Field v. State, 28 So. 3d 697 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Evidence of defendant's prior convictions for selling drugs was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) at defendant's trial on a charge of possession of marijuana with the intent to sell, transfer, or distribute to establish defendant's intent; the admission was not prejudicial where the admission of the prior conviction evidence was accompanied by a limiting instruction indicating that the jury could only consider the evidence when considering the intent element of the charged offense. Tarver v. State, 15 So. 3d 446 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 398 (Miss. 2009).

Although a state's witness testified as to other prior bad acts in defendant's trial on drug charges, defendant had opened the door to this testimony. Alexander v. State, 875 So. 2d 261 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's drug paraphernalia fit the enumerated exceptions to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) where the possession of the objects was relevant to show defendant's participation in the drug culture; the drug paraphernalia was highly relevant to show defendant's intent, preparation, knowledge, and absence of mistake in possessing methamphetamine, and the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's drug paraphernalia. Flake v. State, 948 So. 2d 493 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of the sale of methadone and one count of the sale of morphine were appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) and Miss. R. Evid. 403 because testimony from a witness about his prior narcotics dealings with defendant was admissible for purposes of proving intent, motive, and in completing the story of the charged crime. Palmer v. State, 939 So. 2d 792 (Miss. 2006).

Although evidence of defendant's prior drug offense was improperly admitted by the trial court, the admission was harmless error, because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming, including DNA evidence tending to show that defendant raped the victim. Williford v. State, 820 So. 2d 13 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

In a prosecution for possession of marijuana, a prior out-of-state misdemeanor conviction for possession of marijuana was properly introduced in order to show knowledge where 117 pounds of marijuana was found in the trunk of a rental car driven by the defendant and he claimed not to have known that the marijuana was in the trunk despite a strong smell of raw marijuana inside the passenger compartment. Harrison v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 44 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 8, 2000), affirmed by 800 So. 2d 1134, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 223 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, it was not error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of two prior drug sales by the defendant in order to show intent to distribute, even though those sales occurred almost 10 years prior to the date of the commission of the crime at issue; however, such evidence alone was insufficient to prove that the defendant intended to distribute the cocaine found in his possession. Mitchell v. State, 754 So. 2d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to sell cocaine, the court properly permitted a witness to testify to prior similar drug sales by the defendants since such testimony constituted circumstantial evidence of the charged offense. Harris v. State, 731 So. 2d 1125 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for conspiracy, arising from the defendant's arrest in connection with the transportation of marijuana on an airplane flight, the court properly permitted the defendant's co-conspirator to testify concerning the defendant's assistance in transporting marijuana five times before the date of the crime at issue since such testimony was relevant to intent. Smith v. State, 716 So. 2d 1076 (Miss. 1998).

Drug transactions.

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine and his enhanced 40-year sentence were both proper under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) where the trial court properly denied defendant's request for a mistrial based on an agent's testimony mentioning other transactions, because of the defense's refusal to allow the trial court to grant the limiting instruction, and the trial court immediately sustained defendant's objection. Easter v. State, 878 So. 2d 10 (Miss. 2004).

In defendant's trial for possession of cocaine, the prosecution had not violated Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) by asking a police officer why defendant had been used as an informant in the past because the defense clearly had opened the door to that line of questioning by asking the officer if defendant had worked as informant in the past and whether or not the department had had successful results. Watson v. State, 941 So. 2d 881 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a prosecution for burglary of a dwelling, evidence that a stolen video cassette recorder (VCR) was exchanged for crack cocaine was properly admitted into evidence to show how the VCR came into the possession of law enforcement and to show an apparent relation between the exchange and the stealing of the VCR. Potts v. State, 755 So. 2d 1196 (Miss. Ct. App. April 25, 2000).

In a prosecution for possession of cocaine with the intent to sell and possession of marijuana with intent to sell, the state was properly permitted to introduce evidence of the defendant's prior involvement in the drug trade in order to show intent or plan with regard to the transaction at issue. Sumrall v. State, 758 So. 2d 1091 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault arising out of the defendant's attempt to collect $10 owed to him by the victim, evidence of the defendant's involvement in drug sales was properly admitted as it was relevant to the nature of the disputed debt. Shields v. State, 751 So. 2d 476 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Failure to consider Miss. R. Evid. 403.

Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) exceptions are, indeed, subject to a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test. Pitchford v. State, 45 So. 3d 216 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 2098, 179 L. Ed. 2d 897, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 3058, 79 U.S.L.W. 3592 (U.S. 2011).

Trial court does not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), even where the judge fails to balance whether the prejudicial effect outweighed its probative value under Miss. R. Evid. 403, because, where the testimony is evidence of plan and preparation and aids in telling a complete story, the prejudicial effect, if any, is minimal; therefore, a trial court did not err by admitting evidence of other inappropriate sexual conduct of defendant in a statutory rape case. Price v. State, 898 So. 2d 641 (Miss. 2005).

Flight or escape.

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and murder were appropriate because the trial court did not err in giving a flight instruction. Defendant's proffered reasons were illogical and contradicted by the evidence and the circumstances surrounding defendant's flight had considerable probative value, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Jackson v. State, 28 So. 3d 638 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 85 (Miss. 2010).

It was not error for the court to permit the introduction of evidence that on the day after the crimes at issue, the defendant failed and refused to stop his vehicle in response to a patrol car's lights and siren, drove through two roadblocks, kept driving even when all four of his tires were flattened, and only stopped when threatened with a shotgun, since such evidence was admissible as proof of consciousness of guilt. Armstrong v. State, 771 So. 2d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The court did not err in permitting the state to introduce evidence that the defendant did not appear at his first trial since such evidence was probative of flight, no flight instruction was offered or given which would have drawn emphasis to the defendant's failure to appear for his first trial, and the defendant testified on his own behalf and had ample opportunity to refute the evidence or to explain why he failed to appear on the date his trial was originally set. Waldon v. State, 749 So. 2d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence of flight or escape is admissible in order to show guilty knowledge. Davis v. State, 722 So. 2d 143 (Miss. 1998).

Evidence of the defendant's flight was properly introduced into evidence, notwithstanding that he was fleeing from capture for an offense other than the one at issue, since he discarded evidence from the offense at issue as he fled and was wearing the same clothes as he wore at the time of the offense at issue. Davis v. State, 722 So. 2d 143 (Miss. 1998).

Gang affiliation.

Defendant's conviction for robbery by use of a deadly weapon was appropriate because the sparse reference by the State to defendant's possible gang membership was not part of the State's case-in-chief; the evidence had some probative weight; its probative value substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice; and limited statements about gang membership went to show possible motive, opportunity, intent, or preparation, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Pritchett v. State, 32 So. 3d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Although the State failed to lay the proper foundation for evidence of defendant's gang affiliation to be admitted as prior acts evidence, and defense counsel should have objected to any further testimony or questioning regarding gang affiliation, the error was harmless because an accessory to the crime gave evidence that directly attributed the arson to defendant. That testimony was corroborated by two other witnesses, who testified about going to the trailer and the subsequent purchase of gasoline. Bennett v. State, 18 So. 3d 272 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 467 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because, although there was no evidence that the incident in the case was gang related, the issue of the admissibility of gang-affiliation evidence to show bias was presented and it was on that basis that the trial judge admitted the evidence of defendant's gang affiliation; that type of evidence was clearly permitted under Miss. R. Evid. 616. Dao v. State, 984 So. 2d 352 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 281 (Miss. 2008).

Evidence of the murder victim's gang tattoo offered to show that the victim had a violent character was properly excluded as irrelevant under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(2) where defendant did not show that the victim had performed an aggressive act against defendant before defendant shot the victim in the back. Hodge v. State, 823 So. 2d 1162 (Miss. 2002).

In a capital murder case, under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), the trial court did not err in allowing a lookout to testify regarding defendant's membership in a gang because it explained why he acted as a lookout during the crime but later notified the police about the crime; the lookout's inconsistent actions, without explanation, could leave the jury without a complete understanding of why he participated as a lookout. Hudson v. State, 977 So. 2d 344 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 139 (Miss. 2008).

The introduction in a prosecution for aggravated assault of evidence of the defendant's gang affiliation was reversible error where the state produced no witnesses or evidence with which to directly link the defendant's gang affiliation to the crime charged. Goree v. State, 748 So. 2d 829 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Harmless error.

Although trial court erred by allowing DVD recording of interrogation and confession into evidence because it tended to show that he was more likely to have been violent with the victim based on a previous altercation with another woman in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), the error was harmless because defendant testified as to his previous convictions for domestic violence. Robinson v. State, 35 So. 3d 524 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 35 So. 3d 501, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 237 (Miss. 2010).

Whatever error the trial court committed in failing to distinguish the Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence clearly was harmless as the State produced overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that went undiscredited, and whatever evidence was admitted by Rule 404(b) was merely superfluous; because the trial court's failure to distinguish evidence of prior bad acts under Rule 404(b) was harmless error, the trial court's refusal to grant defendant's request for a mistrial on the entire indictment was not error. Caldwell v. State, 6 So. 3d 1076 (Miss. 2009).

In a prosecution for burglary and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, admission of a videotape of a search of defendant's home, showing various martial arts weapons, was harmless error as its cumulative nature did not prejudice defendant. Al-Fatah v. State, 856 So. 2d 494 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 315 (Miss. 2003).

In trying appellant for attempted burglary, a trial court did not err in instructing the jury that it could consider appellant's prior felony convictions as motive when they had not been introduced for that purpose, as the instruction that was given was a correct statement of law, and pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), evidence of appellant's prior felony convictions, while not admissible to prove his character, was admissible to show his intent or motive; moreover, as the trial court had already made a Miss. R. Evid. 403 analysis and admitted the evidence, it could not be fairly argued that appellant was prejudiced by the trial court's silence to support the additional exception granted by the very same evidentiary rule, and thus any perceived error was harmless. Carter v. State, 953 So. 2d 224 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court erred in ruling that defendant's prior aggravated assault conviction could be admitted in his trial for aggravated assault if he testified; the evidence was more prejudicial than probative, but defendant never proffered what he would testify to if he testified, and as a result, the error was harmless in light of the overwhelming weight of the evidence against defendant. Walker v. State, 936 So. 2d 424 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a prosecution for conspiracy and sale of a controlled substance, it was not error for the court to permit the introduction of evidence that the defendant was on probation for another unrelated crime on the ground that the statement was admissible for identification purposes, notwithstanding the assertion that such evidence was not used for such purpose, where the court gave a proper limiting instruction and there was no showing that the trial judge had abused his discretion and that the admission of the evidence resulted in prejudice and harm or adversely affected a substantial right of the defendant. Fortune v. State, 766 So. 2d 827 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for capital rape arising from an ongoing sexual relationship between the 37 year old defendant and a 13 year old friend of his daughter, evidence of an incident in which the defendant was found in the victim's bedroom after the incident at issue was improperly introduced into evidence but constituted harmless error in light of the overwhelming evidence of guilt. Tompkins v. State, 759 So. 2d 471 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution on three counts of false pretenses arising from incidents in which the defendant charged gasoline and other merchandise to the victim's account at a service station, it was not reversible error for the state to refer to 19 uncharged similar incidents as there was overwhelming evience of guilt. Bishop v. State, 761 So. 2d 894 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Harmless error analysis is applicable in cases where the trial court does not sua sponte give the required limiting instruction when Rule 404(b) evidence is admitted. Webster v. State, 754 So. 2d 1232 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for armed robbery and capital murder, although it was error to permit a witness to testify that he was robbed at gunpoint by the defendant shortly after the incident at issue, such error was harmless given the overwhelming weight of the evidence against the defendant. Lindsey v. State, 754 So. 2d 506 (Ct. App. 1999).

Identity.

Trial court did not err in allowing, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), a confidential informant to testify about prior drug purchases from defendant where it was clear from the transcript that the prosecutor was offering the evidence to prove that defendant had a modus operandi of conducting business and, thus, to establish defendant's identity. Liddell v. State, 33 So. 3d 524 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Because defendant opened the door during his cross-examination with a line of questions designed to show that someone else might have been the culprit in the embezzlement of money from the justice clerk's office, the identity of the perpetrator was an issue; therefore, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) permitted evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove identity and the investigator was properly permitted to testify that he found similar problems of missing money prior to the other two clerks' employment in the justice clerk's office. Fagan v. State, 881 So. 2d 851 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Pubic hairs found at the scene, proven by DNA analysis to belong to the inmate, were significant in identifying the victim's attacker and thus relevant to more than just the alleged sexual battery, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Lambert v. State, 941 So. 2d 804 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court's statements in the record showed the trial court properly conducted a required balancing test in holding that a pending charge against defendant for burglary was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404 to prove in a trial for burglary to prove identity and to show why the police were looking for defendant. Hodge v. State, 801 So. 2d 762 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine, testimony by an informant regarding his identification of the defendant from a "jail photo" was properly admitted into evidence where the identity of the defendant was in question and the record of the trial judge's comments demonstrated that he conducted the requisite balancing test. Brooks v. State, 788 So. 2d 794 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for the sale or transfer of a controlled substance, it was reversible error for a witness to testify that he had known the defendant for 12 to 15 years and that he had bought drugs from him on numerous occasions, notwithstanding the contention that the evidence of prior bad acts was offered to show identity, since the witness could have identified the defendant by simply testifying that he had known him for 12 to 15 years without mentioning the prior drug transactions which he had with him. Burrell v. State, 727 So. 2d 761 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for voyeurism, testimony that the defendant watched the victim's house from a nearby baseball field on one date and threatened her and her children while peeping into her home on another date was properly admitted into evidence to support the victim's identification of the defendant since her testimony regarding her identification of the defendant based upon the incident at issue was anything but conclusive. Warren v. State, 709 So. 2d 415 (Miss. 1998).

Intent.

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2)(a), he unsuccessfully argued that the trial court erred in allowing the victim's wife to testify about an encounter she and defendant had months after the incident. Defendant contended that the wife's testimony was not relevant, and its prejudicial effect outweighed its probative value in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 403, but the evidence was offered to show defendant's state of mind on the day of the assault; the trial court weighed the probative value of the evidence against the potential for undue prejudice. David v. State, 29 So. 3d 129 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In defendant's trial for false pretenses, the introduction into evidence of bank statements properly fell under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) exceptions of knowledge and intent, and under Miss. R. Evid. 403, the evidence was not overly prejudicial as the bank record did not include any information regarding other indictments, it was accompanied by a limiting instruction and the prosecutor did not emphasize any other bounced checks. Lyles v. State, 12 So. 3d 532 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's sale of cocaine case, the court properly admitted a buyer's testimony concerning her prior transactions with defendant for the limited purpose of showing intent to distribute because the trial court conducted a balancing test and the court gave a proper limiting instruction to the jury; defendant's intent was a necessary element of his conviction. Phinizee v. State, 983 So. 2d 322 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court rejected defendant's contention that the trial court improperly allowed evidence of his prior bad acts against the victim in violation of the procedures set forth in Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); evidence of a prior physical altercation between the victim and defendant was not offered to show his character, but was presented as an integral part of the story for the purpose of showing intent and establishing motive, which was admissible. Simmons v. State, 813 So. 2d 710 (Miss. 2002).

Appellant was properly sentenced pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 as a habitual offender following an attempted burglary conviction pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because the trial court did not err, after analyzing them under Miss. R. Evid. 403, in admitting his prior felony convictions; they were allowed by Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) as appellant's intent was greatly in issue. Carter v. State, 953 So. 2d 224 (Miss. 2007).

In a case involving the manufacturing of methamphetamine, defendant's motion in limine was properly denied because nothing in the record indicated that the admission of photographs, items, and testimony regarding methamphetamine and methamphetamine residue prejudiced the defense or substantially affected defendant's rights; rather, the evidence was properly used to show intent. Halderman v. State, 964 So. 2d 1163 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 964 So. 2d 508, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 527 (Miss. 2007).

In a case of sexual abuse of a daughter by her father, subsection (b) allowed evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to be admitted for purposes such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident. B.R.C. v. State, 795 So. 2d 526 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution of the defendant for the murder of her husband, evidence of the defendant's prior plans and attempts to kill her husband was properly admitted into evidence in order to show intent. Alford v. State, 760 So. 2d 48 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Intimidation of witnesses.

Testimony that defendant threatened a witness with a gun at the scene of a murder and told him he would kill him if he talked about the crime was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) and 403 as it was part of the "single transaction" of the murder. Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

In a prosecution for intimidating a witness, evidence of drug transactions which occurred on the day before the conduct at issue, which were unresolved when the defendant allegedly threatened the victims, was necessary to prove that the defendant had the motive and intent to threaten and intimidate these potential witnesses at any subsequent trial. Ott v. State, 742 So. 2d 1197 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Knowledge.

Although a proper jury instruction concerning defendant's prior felony convictions was given, the jury was aware that he had been convicted previously for the possession of methamphetamine and methamphetamine precursors, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); considering that, it certainly would not have been unreasonable for the jury to disbelieve defendant's assertion that he was unaware that the products he was purchasing, at least two times per week, were methamphetamine precursors. The cumulative effect of the testimony and exhibits presented at trial could certainly have lead a fair-minded juror to determine that defendant indeed purchased and possessed the precursors with the intent to use them for an illegal purpose and thus, the weight of the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's verdict. Houser v. State, 29 So. 3d 813 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 135 (Miss. 2010).

In an action by a railroad conductor for injuries sustained when he tripped over a piece of wood in a rail yard, evidence of prior complaints regarding wood in the rail yard was properly admitted since it related to the defendant's notice or knowledge of the condition of the rail yard. Rawson v. Midsouth Rail Corp., 738 So. 2d 280 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Limiting instruction.

In a case in which defendant was convicted of violating Miss. Code Ann, § 47-5-193, he unsuccessfully argued on appeal that the trial judge failed to instruct the jury to disregard evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts where there was no foundation for their admissibility and no showing that the probative value outweighed the prejudicial effect. Defense counsel failed to request a limiting instruction, and the trial judge was not required to issue the limiting instruction sua sponte after defense counsel objected; Rule 105 clearly placed the burden of requesting a Miss. R. Evid. Rule 404(b) limiting instruction upon counsel. Lindsey v. State, 29 So. 3d 121 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Circuit court did not err in failing to give a Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) limiting instruction because such instruction was never requested by defense counsel; defendant's requested limiting instruction was a misstatement of Rule 404(b) because it went beyond a mere limiting instruction and excluded evidence of his bad acts for all purposes, including proof of his intent. Peterson v. State, 37 So. 3d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Circuit court did not err in failing to give a Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) limiting instruction because such instruction was never requested by defense counsel; defendant's requested limiting instruction was a misstatement of Rule 404(b) because it went beyond a mere limiting instruction and excluded evidence of his bad acts for all purposes, including proof of his intent. Peterson v. State, 37 So. 3d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Because only other-crimes evidence appeared at trial, the character evidence instruction as requested by petitioner state inmate was not supported by the evidence, thus, counsel was not ineffective in failing to appeal the denial of a limiting character evidence instruction and the grant of federal habeas relief was inappropriate. Brooks v. Kelly, 579 F.3d 521 (5th Cir. 2009).

Because the burden to request a limiting instruction falls upon defense counsel in the admittance of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence, the burden falls upon defense counsel to request a limiting instruction in the context of the admittance of prior convictions through impeachment under Miss. R. Evid. 609. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of aggravated assault and rape was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because defendant did not request a limiting instruction and was barred from bringing the issue on appeal; the trial judge was not obligated to provide a limiting instruction sua sponte regarding the admission of defendant's prior convictions. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

As to evidence of proof of another crime under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), the trial court was not required to issue a limiting instruction sua sponte. Further, where the evidence against defendant was overwhelming in the subject assault case, the trial court's failure to have conducted an on the record balancing test was harmless error. Richardson v. State, 911 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Miss. R. Evid. 105 clearly places the burden of requesting a Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) limiting jury instruction upon counsel. Tate v. State, 912 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2005).

Jury instructions that reference prior arrests and convictions may be counterproductive to defendant; while serving to limit the jury's consideration of the prior wrongs, such instructions also remind and emphasize to the jury that defendant committed prior bad acts. Whether to request such an instruction is a matter of trial strategy in the exclusive province of defendant, in consultation with his or her attorney; thus, without a request by defense counsel, the trial court properly did not sua sponte give a limiting jury instruction in defendant's case. Tate v. State, 912 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court need not issue a sua sponte limiting instruction when other bad acts evidence is admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) and 403; Miss. R. Evid. 105 clearly places the burden of requesting a limiting instruction under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) on the party objecting to the evidence. Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

Wherever Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence is offered and there is an objection that is overruled, the objection shall be deemed an invocation of the right to a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing analysis and a limiting instruction, and the court shall conduct a Miss. R. Evid. 403 analysis; if the evidence passes that hurdle, the court shall give a limiting instruction, unless the party objecting to the evidence objects to the giving of the limiting instruction. Triggs v. State, 803 So. 2d 1229 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

When a defendant brings a motion in limine, a trial court has to conduct a balancing test to weigh the possible prejudice against the probative value; if a trial court finds that the probative value outweighs the possible prejudice, and admits the evidence, the trial court must treat the motion as a request for a limiting instruction even if no such request is explicitly made by the defendant. Bell v. State, 812 So. 2d 235 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A trial court's decision to admit 404(b) evidence over a defendant's objection entitles the defendant to a limiting instruction informing the jury of the limited purpose for which the 404(b) evidence may be considered by them. Wilhite v. State, 791 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Motive.

Trial judge should have analyzed evidence of manslaughter victim's prior incarceration pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because the evidence was pertinent to show the victim's motive and intent, which formed the basis of the defense that the victim was the initial aggressor in a fight with defendant. Graves v. State, 45 So. 3d 283 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

On appeal from his criminal convictions, defendant's argument that any probative value of introducing his prior convictions was outweighed by the prejudice it caused was without merit under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); the introduction of the sentencing report was necessary to show the terms of defendant's probation and the prior convictions were not being used to show defendant's character or that he acted in conformity with a previous crime since the charges of burglary were distinct from the charges of aggravated assault. The trial court found it necessary to introduce defendant's prior judgment of conviction and sentencing order because it was part of the State's theory of the case to show a motive for the aggravated assault on the law enforcement officers. Mayers v. State, 42 So. 3d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 42 So. 3d 24, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 437 (Miss. 2010).

In an embezzlement case, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimonies of three witnesses who testified that they gave defendant money with the understanding that defendant would procure a vehicle for them. To rebut defendant's allegations that he had no intent to take the victim's money and that it was only a mistake that the victim had not yet received a promised vehicle, the trial court properly allowed the testimonies of the three witnesses pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Wilson v. State, 12 So. 3d 8 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 14 So. 3d 731, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 306 (Miss. 2009).

Testimony regarding a prior incident when defendant allegedly threw a beer bottle at his victim was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), because the prior incident showed defendant's motive for assaulting the victim, namely, that the victim had accused defendant's sister of having a sexually transmitted disease, and had transmitted the disease to the victim. Because the incident helped establish that defendant had a prior animus against the victim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony about the prior incident. West v. State, 969 So. 2d 147 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to sever three prescription forgery counts that occurred over a five-month period because the trial court applied the Corley Factors and found that five months was not a significant amount of time so as to require severance, and the total evidence in the case would have been admissible in separate trials of each count under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Rushing v. State, 911 So. 2d 526 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of marijuana within a correctional facility was appropriate because an officer's testimony was admissible since it was necessary to show the jury the full and complete sequence of events; further, it was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) as evidence of defendant's motive of financial gain. Jackson v. State, 962 So. 2d 649 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. 2007).

Court did not commit reversible error when it allowed evidence of another crime with which defendant had been charged at her trial for aggravated assault because the victim's planned testimony against defendant at an armed robbery trial was a plausible motive for the assault that the State was entitled to place before the jury pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Jones v. State, 913 So. 2d 436 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7, the trial court did not err in allowing evidence regarding an altercation that defendant and the victim had prior to the assault; the altercation, allegedly a prior bad act, was properly admitted to establish motive under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and the probative value of the evidence outweighed the prejudice caused under Miss. R. Evid. 403. Brown v. State, 864 So. 2d 1009 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's outstanding civil judgment, or the fact that he worked two part-time jobs, into evidence, as the evidence went to the issue of intent or motive in defendant's trial for grand larceny. Myles v. State, 854 So. 2d 502 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court had abused its discretion in admitting evidence of his prior arrest as the evidence was admitted not for the purpose of prejudicing the jury, but to show motive. Gray v. State, 846 So. 2d 260 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Evidence that defendant had earlier robbed the stolen vehicle's owner at gunpoint was not admissible to prove defendant's character, but was admissible to show defendant's motive for the level of resistance he exhibited up to and including during his arrest by a police officer at whom defendant fired his weapon. Powell v. State, 806 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence in which the defendant claimed that a police officer lied at trial when he testified that the defendant admitted to being drunk, the state was properly permitted to cross-examine the defendant on the issues of his suspended license and his giving a false Social Security number to another police officer since such was relevant to the defendant's credibility and to his motive for keeping the officer from retrieving his driving record. Strickland v. State, 784 So. 2d 957 (Miss. 2001).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of the defendant's drinking habits was properly introduced where introduced to show the defendant's propensity for becoming angry while drinking and, thus, his state of mind or motive. Chambers v. State, 800 So. 2d 1178 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder, evidence of a prior incident involving the defendant and the victim was properly introduced into evidence since the evidence was relevant to prove motive on the basis that the defendant had a score to settle with the victim. Rodgers v. State, 777 So. 2d 673 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Failure to accomplish the act giving rise to the motive does not prevent evidence of motive from being admitted under Rule 404(b). Wilhite v. State, 791 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault and shooting into a motor vehicle, witnesses were properly permitted to testify regarding prior confrontations between the defendant and the victim and threats made by the defendant since such evidence was admissible to show motive. Johns v. State, 746 So. 2d 947 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence of a fight between the defendant and the victim which occurred almost one year earlier since such evidence showed motive and intent. Webster v. State, 755 So. 2d 451 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to sell LSD, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence of prior sales of LSD by the defendant since such evidence was not introduced to prove the character of the defendant, but to show the frequency with which he sold LSD for later distribution elsewhere, and this was evidence of a continuing pattern of behavior which showed motive, plan, and knowledge. Lee v. State, 733 So. 2d 336 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Testimony that the defendant killed the victim because "he didn't want to go back to the pen" was properly admitted into evidence to show motive - that the defendant killed the victim so that he could not be identified and be sent back to the penitentiary. Burns v. State, 729 So. 2d 203 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1041, 119 S. Ct. 2406, 144 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1999).

Negating claim of accident or mistake.

Where the prosecuting attorney initially framed the prosecutor's motion to admit evidence of a prior conviction as being brought under Miss. R. Evid. 609, but the thrust of the prosecutor's argument was that the prior conviction was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), specifically to negate a claim of accident or mistake, and the trial court admitted the evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), defendant's claim that defendant elected not to testify based on the chilling effect of the trial court's erroneous ruling was rejected, as nothing in the issues raised or argued on appeal significantly challenged the trial court's ruling as to the evidence's admissibility under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); in all events, the ruling based on Miss. R. Evid. 404, even if erroneous, did nothing to improperly interfere with defendant's right to testify in defendant's own defense. Vince v. State, 844 So. 2d 510 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Inmate was not entitled to habeas relief on the ground that counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the use of evidence of other crimes the inmate committed because under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), although evidence of other crimes or misdeeds was not admissible to prove the character of person in order to prove that the person acted in conformity with that character; such proof may be admissible for other purposes, such as to prove motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident." Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). The State could not paint a rational picture of the events leading up to the shooting or show motive, the stolen drugs, or preparation, theft of the gun, without mentioning those acts, and defendant could not have put on proof of self-defense without mentioning those facts; therefore, counsel had no basis for raising an objection to use of that evidence, and as such his counsel was effective. Chandler v. Marshall County Corr. Ctr., — F. Supp. 2d —, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96070 (N.D. Miss. Sept. 14, 2010).

Defendant's murder convictions were proper because testimony regarding his prior threats against one of the victim, his former girlfriend, and his previous arrest for domestic violence were properly admitted into evidence, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). The evidence was relevant for the impeachment of a prior statement made by defendant, as well as relevant evidence of defendant's motive, intent, knowledge, and preparation. Madden v. State, 42 So. 3d 566 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari dismissed by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 460 (Miss. 2010).

Although defendant asked the court to apply the plain error doctrine, the court did not find that the State's line of questioning as to what prior convictions defendant had substantially affected his right to a fair trial when he openly admitted that he had a record of multiple convictions. Butler v. State, 16 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

When defendant introduced his record of prior convictions on his own initiative during direct examination, he effectively denied the trial court the opportunity to perform the appropriate balancing test under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B) and 403 so that it could determine whether the prior convictions constituted admissible evidence, plus when the State cross-examined defendant about his prior convictions, defense counsel failed to object; the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the State to question defendant about his prior convictions. Butler v. State, 16 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Testimony by a narcotics agent and a confidential informant (CI) explained why petitioner state inmate was being investigated and how the state came to use the CI (one of her narcotics customers) against her; it was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 403, 404(b), thus, counsel was not ineffective for objecting and habeas relief had been inappropriate. Brooks v. Kelly, 579 F.3d 521 (5th Cir. 2009).

In defendant's trial on charges of felony possession of cocaine with the intent to sell, transfer, or deliver and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, the trial court did not err in permitting the State to introduce evidence that a bag containing 6.7 grams of cocaine was retrieved from the backseat of defendant's car at the time of his arrest because the evidence painted a complete picture of the events surrounding defendant's arrest and was relevant to show defendant's motive, intent, and plan. Williams v. State, 20 So. 3d 722 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 86 (Miss. 2010).

In a prosecution for selling cocaine to an undercover informant, defendant's prior conviction for possessing cocaine within 1,500 feet of a school was admissible in accordance with Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) with respect to intent as well as Miss. R. Evid. 609 to impeach defendant's claim of a set-up and law enforcement conspiracy. The trial judge conducted a Peterson analysis and a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test on the record. Young v. State, 13 So. 3d 339 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's trial on charges of armed robbery, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm as a convicted felon, evidence that defendant was in a stolen vehicle when arrested was properly introduced to explain why he was arrested, how his picture came to be part of the photograph lineup, and how he ultimately was linked with the crimes charged. Furthermore, this evidence was essential to provide the jury with a complete story of the events that led to the identification of defendant as the person who perpetrated the crimes charged. Williams v. State, 991 So. 2d 593 (Miss. 2008).

When considering "other crime" evidence concerning drug activity and drugs being found in the possession of defendant, as well as the fact that the police were familiar with defendant because of past juvenile matters, the probative value of this relevant evidence was not substantially outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice, and thus the trial judge did not abuse her discretion in allowing it. Givens v. State, 967 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting defendant's statement that he drove in the middle of the road because it was part of the story of the crime and it was so interrelated with the manslaughter charge against defendant, which arose from the victim's death from an automobile accident with defendant, that it constituted a closely related series of occurrences; however, even though it was error for the prosecution to elicit testimony from the officer that defendant had committed a crime by driving in the middle of the road, the trial court cured the error by advising the jury to disregard the testimony. Bell v. State, 963 So. 2d 1124 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for murdering the victim by deliberate design was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a) because, once defendant testified regarding her trait of peacefulness with others, she then opened the door for the prosecutor to question her regarding other instances in which she was either charged or convicted of crimes against others. Council v. State, 976 So. 2d 889 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 74 (Miss. 2008).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's conviction for felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93 based on two prior misdemeanor shoplifting offenses because the trial court was not required to give a suas ponte instruction to buffer the alleged damage done by the presentation of the prior misdemeanor convictions, and Miss. R. Evid. 105 placed the burden on trial counsel to request a limiting instruction regarding Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence. Biggs v. State, 942 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 715 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's argument that the trial court erred by not dismissing the indictment or granting a mistrial when it allowed the testimony of prior bad acts of defendant stealing a church air conditioner was procedurally barred because he did not object to the prosecutor's question on Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) grounds; the issue was without merit because defendant had already elicited from the officer evidence that defendant had been charged with theft of an air conditioner. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Trial judge did not abuse her discretion by admitting stolen car report, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), where defendant was on trial for rape and sexual battery committed in a car, and the car was an integral part of the events that took place, and the stolen car report was admitted to show opportunity for defendant, who did not own a car, to commit the crimes charged, and the jury was presented with evidence that showed that the stolen car report resulted from the relationship between Townsend and his girlfriend, and not a rampant crime spree. Townsend v. State, 933 So. 2d 986 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 982, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 371 (Miss. 2006).

Where proof of other crimes or acts of a defendant is offered into evidence pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), it is still subject to the requirement that its probative value substantially outweigh the danger of unfair prejudice under Miss. R. Evid. 403. Jones v. State, 913 So. 2d 436 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Fair minded jurors could have accepted defendant's assertion that there was no common plan to commit a carjacking in Mississippi, and that he was merely a bystander. They also could have inferred from his actions of stealing a car earlier, on the same date, with his companions that did conduct the carjacking, that he was an active participant; thus, his admission to the earlier theft was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to deny his motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Washington v. State, 912 So. 2d 996 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for burglary was affirmed; the admission of evidence that defendant had threatened an unidentified individual earlier in the day was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) as the evidence was an integral part of the telling of the complete story, and aided the jury in understanding the circumstances leading to the commission of the crime. Moore v. State, 921 So. 2d 381 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 926 So. 2d 922, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 166 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence of prior convictions for domestic abuse and evidence of other prior bad acts because the evidence was not introduced to prove the character of defendant, but to show a continuing pattern of violence against the victim which resulted in her death, going towards defendant's motive and intent. Additionally, although the evidence of prior domestic abuse convictions and other bad acts was prejudicial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the probative value of the evidence outweighed the possible prejudicial effect. Moses v. State, 893 So. 2d 258 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in allowing the limited possession evidence into evidence at defendant's trial for charges of distribution of cocaine, as the trial court balanced the weight of the evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 403 and found that it was relevant to show the existence of a plan, and the jury was given a limiting instruction to minimize any prejudice to defendant.

Nobles v. State, 879 So. 2d 1067 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where officers received a report of a robbery in a nearby state and were warned to be on the lookout (BOLO), and where they then pursued defendant who hit three police cars during the chase, in defendant's trial on counts of assaulting a police officer, even though defendant had not yet been convicted for robbery, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting the BOLO warning and the gun recovered from defendant into evidence, because those items were essential to the State's presentation of a complete and coherent story to the jury; further, the trial judge did not err in not giving, sua sponte, a limiting instruction. Conerly v. State, 879 So. 2d 1101 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a severance of the two charges against defendant as the acts could be tried together under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-2 as defendant sold the same drug to the same undercover officer within 72 hours, and the evidence of both crimes would have been able to have been used against defendant under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) if the charges had been severed. . Watkins v. State, 874 So. 2d 486 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In defendant's capital murder case, defendant's right to a fair trial was not violated by the trial court's admission of testimony about the sexual assault of the victim, which defendant was not charged with, that occurred in the moments preceding her murder, where sexual molestation was integrally so related to her murder that one could not coherently present the facts of her demise without reference to it, and the testimony described part of the res gestae of the crime charged and helped shed light on defendant's motive. McGowen v. State, 859 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 2003).

Reversal of defendant's capital murder conviction was required in a case where defendant was indicted separately for each of four murders, because cumulative evidence of photographs, autopsy diagrams, and testimony regarding the other individual victims was neither relevant nor necessary to the case being tried, and was highly prejudicial to defendant. Flowers v. State, 842 So. 2d 531 (Miss. 2003).

Cumulative evidence of photographs, the autopsy diagrams and the testimony regarding the other individual victims were neither relevant nor necessary to the case sub judice, and were, therefore, highly prejudicial to defendant. The State's pattern of continuously referring to the killing of the other three victims throughout the entire guilt phase denied defendant his fundamental right to a fair trial. Flowers v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 67 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 842 So. 2d 531, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 149 (Miss. 2003).

In defendant's wire fraud case, defendant called an attorney as a witness, and questioned the attorney on direct examination, with nothing asked or answered that was alleged to have provided an opening for evidence about the Alabama indictment. Instead, it was answers during the prosecutor's cross-examination that purportedly created invitations for evidence about the foreign indictment; although admission of evidence of the Alabama indictment was error, it was cumulative to proper evidence from other witnesses, and did not prejudice defendant. McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 852 So. 2d 577 (Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's filing of a false police report that the gun defendant allegedly used in the murder had been stolen before the murder occurred was not admissible as character evidence against defendant, but instead was admissible to show defendant's knowledge and lack of mistake or accident. Montana v. State, 822 So. 2d 954 (Miss. 2002).

Other crimes evidence regarding a conspiracy to kill another person for insurance proceeds in the same manner as the victim was killed clearly demonstrated that defendant could have acted according to a predetermined plan to kill the victim and the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Leedom v. State, 796 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. 2001).

The existence of other crime evidence showing that defendant had essentially the same plan and preparation to kill another person as the way the victim was killed tended to make more probable the possibility that she and co-conspirator were acting according to a predetermined plan or agreement to kill the victim than without such evidence, particularly in light of defendant's defense that co-conspirator was solely responsible for the fire that killed the victim Leedom v. State, 796 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. 2001).

Testimony by a police officer that he had heard the defendant speak and had pulled him over on one occasion following the incident at issue did not constitute other crimes evidence as the officer did not mention his reason for pulling the defendant over. Washington v. State, 794 So. 2d 253 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder, the prosecutor violated the rule where the state elected to indict the defendant separately for four murders and contested the defendant's motion to consolidate the four murder indictments into one trial, but then repeatedly and unnecessarily cited to the killing of the other three victims throughout the guilt phase proceedings. Flowers v. State, 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for the sale of less than one ounce of marijuana, evidence that the defendant took the marijuana he sold to a state's witness from a large bag of marijuana did not constitute "other crimes" evidence; it was a component of the crime for which he was charged and eventually convicted. Westbrook v. State, 770 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for a single murder, the defendant was denied a fair trial where the prosecution engaged in a pattern of repeatedly and unnecessarily referring to the killing of three victims throughout the guilt phase proceedings. Flowers v. State, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 116 (Miss. May 11, 2000), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

The admission of defendant's prior felony conviction and the trial court's failure to instruct the jury sua sponte were reversible error in violation of M.R.E. 403 and 404 and the holding in Smith v. State, 656 So. 2d 95, 99 (Miss. 1995). Jasper v. State, 759 So. 2d 1136 (Miss. 1999).

In a murder prosecution, the state was properly permitted to introduce evidence pertaining to another murder since, without the information concerning the fact that the defendant had murdered both the victim and another, it would have been an incomplete and nonsensical story to the jurors; the evidence was necessary information to allow the jury to get a full and complete picture of the facts as they existed at the time of the crime, as the transactions in sequence were interrelated in time, place, and fact. Smothers v. State, 756 So. 2d 779 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for a contract murder, it was not error for a witness to testify that the defendant instructed him and another person to kill an individual who saw them receive payment for their crime since such a request was a part of the entire transaction. Saunders v. State, 733 So. 2d 325 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Where defense counsel elicited testimony from the defendant that he had no prior convictions, the state was properly permitted to cross-examine the defendant with regard to a prior conviction for aggravated assault; although that prior conviction was not otherwise admissible, it was admissible to rebut the defendant's testimony. Booker v. State, 745 So. 2d 850 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute, evidence of an earlier conviction for the same offense was admissible to show intent. Bryant v. State, 746 So. 2d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Testimony of a prior crime was properly admitted where it was introduced to show that the defendant had planned and intended to commit a similar crime to the one charged in the indictment. Haley v. State, 737 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

It was error for the court to permit a witness to testify regarding a statement made by the defendant on the day before the murder at issue to the effect that he was a "dangerous man" who loved money and would do anything for it since the statement was clearly character evidence and was not evidence of any specific crime, wrong, or act. Banks v. State, 725 So. 2d 711 (Miss. 1998).

Defendant's statement about being preoccupied with money was not evidence of any specific crime, wrong, or act, and trial court erred in permitting prosecutor's attempt to show statement was excepted from rule because it showed "state of mind." Banks v. State, 725 So. 2d 711 (Miss. 1998).

Where an assault on a third person was integrally related to time, place, and fact to the aggravated assault which the jury found the defendant to have committed on the victim, the assault on the third person was properly introduced into evidence, especially as such evidence tended to rebut the defendant's claim of self-defense. Edwards v. State, 723 So. 2d 1221 (Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for murder, it was not error for the court to permit the introduction of evidence of a prior burglary in which the alleged murder weapon was stolen. Underwood v. State, 708 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court has a great deal of discretion in declining to make a blanket ruling in limine on admissibility of prior bad acts. Wilcher v. State, 697 So. 2d 1087 (Miss. 1997), reh'g denied, 697 So. 2d 1191 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1053, 118 S. Ct. 705, 139 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1998), reh'g denied, — U.S. —, 118 S. Ct. 1181, 140 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1998).

Subdivision (b) of this rule did not prohibit admission of evidence of alcoholic beverages, failing to yield to blue lights, resisting arrest and reckless driving to prove officer acted within his authority in arresting defendants, since testimony did not come in to show that defendants were acting in conformity with another episode; there was only one episode, the one in which defendants were stopped and ultimately arrested for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. Jackson v. State, 689 So. 2d 760 (Miss. 1997).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress statements relating to defendant's drug use on night of murders, where State sought to introduce evidence to show discrepancies which arose during defendant's interrogation, not to show his character or that he was acting in conformity therewith. Brown v. State, 690 So. 2d 276 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 849, 118 S. Ct. 136, 139 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1997).

Generally, evidence of crime other than that charged in indictment is not admissible against accused; however, where another crime or act is so interrelated to the charged crime as to constitute a single transaction or occurrence or a closely related series of transactions or occurrences, proof of the other crime or act is admissible. Townsend v. State, 681 So. 2d 497 (Miss. 1996).

Where other illegal substances were found at the same time, same place, same bag, as the illegal substance listed on indictment form, the other substances were interwoven or inseparable from the charged offense, and were therefore admissible. Townsend v. State, 681 So. 2d 497 (Miss. 1996).

Because defendant raised an entrapment defense, officer's testimony that he had prior information that defendant sold drugs was admissible to show predisposition, regardless of whether defendant was ultimately given an entrapment instruction; moreover, defense counsel could not complain of alleged "predisposition evidence" which he solicited from officer on cross-examination. Walls v. State, 672 So. 2d 1227 (Miss. 1996).

Evidence of the burning of murder victim's house was not offered to show defendant's character and that she acted in conformity therewith; rather, decision to return and burn victim's house was an integral part of the story surrounding victim's death, and the evidence was properly admitted as showing intent, plan, knowledge and identity. Ballenger v. State, 667 So. 2d 1242 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1025, 116 S. Ct. 2565, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1082 (1996), reh'g denied, 518 U.S. 1048, 117 S. Ct. 26, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1119 (1996).

Evidence that murder defendant had burglarized house on day preceding robbery and shooting at pawnshop was admissible, where it was not introduced in order to show bad character, but to prove identity and opportunity. Davis v. State, 660 So. 2d 1228 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1192, 116 S. Ct. 1684, 134 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1996).

Evidence of prior involvement in the drug trade is admissible under subdivision (b) of this rule to prove intent to distribute. Holland v. State, 656 So. 2d 1192 (Miss. 1995).

Evidence of prior sales of drugs, offered to show intent to distribute, is properly admissible if trial court finds its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect, and if evidence is accompanied by a proper limiting instruction. Smith v. State, 656 So. 2d 95 (Miss. 1995), criticized in Lambert v. State, 1998 Miss. App. LEXIS 673 (Ct. App. Aug. 18, 1998).

Evidence regarding murder defendant's earlier escape from jail was necessary to tell a rational and coherent story as to defendant's presence at a particular house and need to avoid discovery; it was relevant to show motive behind killing of individual who had been sent to check on house. Duplantis v. State, 644 So. 2d 1235 (Miss. 1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1123, 115 S. Ct. 1990, 131 L. Ed. 2d 876 (1995).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of murder defendant's cocaine use, since evidence was introduced not in order to show bad character, but to help establish defendant's motive for committing the crime. Conner v. State, 632 So. 2d 1239 (Miss. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 927, 115 S. Ct. 314, 130 L. Ed. 2d 276 (1994).

Past criminal history, or drug use, of witness and her husband were not relevant, since witness and her husband were not on trial. Johnston v. State, 618 So. 2d 90 (Miss. 1993).

Evidence of sexual activity which took place in jail was integrally related to beating death of inmate, and was therefore properly submitted to jury at murder trial. Hurns v. State, 616 So. 2d 313 (Miss. 1993).

Court in action for fraud and negligence in connection with pre-sale residential termite inspection erred in failing to compel answer to interrogatory asking defendant to identify every person for whom it had performed a pre-sale termite inspection in the past five years, since evidence of similar occurrences was relevant and admissible to show absence of mistake or accident, and plan or intent. Dawkins v. Redd Pest Control Co., 607 So. 2d 1232 (Miss. 1992).

Admission in evidence of lack of inspection sticker and driver's license was error, but was harmless as it affected no substantial right of defendant; evidence was clear that accident was not the result of lack of driver's license or inspection sticker, but of defendant's driving while intoxicated. Hewlett v. State, 607 So. 2d 1097 (Miss. 1992).

Trial court erred in admitting testimony that defendant had requested a lift to an area near where murder victim was found, purportedly to pick up a package of marijuana which he had previously hidden there, since there was no basis to State's contention that defendant wanted to revisit crime scene to determine whether it had been discovered; error was harmless, however, because other crimes evidence was attempted possession of marijuana, and since defendant was on trial for murder, any prejudicial effect would be minimal. Parker v. State, 606 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. 1992).

Upon direct examination, defendant did nothing to "open the door" to State's use of prior drug conviction, prior drug arrest, and other bad acts concerning drug activity to impeach his credibility, and trial court committed reversible error in allowing State to elicit such testimony. Spraggins v. State, 606 So. 2d 592 (Miss. 1992).

Sheriff's testimony regarding defendant's arrest for driving an unlicensed vehicle was admissible to show identity and to link defendant to unlicensed car seen in vicinity of package store at time of murder. Willie v. State, 585 So. 2d 660 (Miss. 1991).

Trial court in drug prosecution did not err in allowing district attorney to cross-examine defense witness as to whether he had ever been indicted for possession of cocaine, as this was admissible to show bias on part of witness. Bradley v. State, 562 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. 1990).

Statement of alleged child sexual abuse victim as to occasions, other than one for which defendant was being tried, in which defendant had exposed himself to children was not admissible under subdivision (b) of this rule. Mitchell v. State, 539 So. 2d 1366 (Miss. 1989).

Evidence of break-up between defendant and murder victim was properly admitted to show motive; however, evidence that defendant rammed his vehicle into car which victim was driving was improperly admitted, since it was improperly used to show that defendant acted in conformity with his prior alleged bad acts. Edlin v. State, 533 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1086, 109 S. Ct. 1547, 103 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1989).

Evidence concerning defendant's participation in forging of check was closely interrelated to crime of uttering charged in his indictment, and was therefore correctly admitted. Hartfield v. State, 532 So. 2d 1237 (Miss. 1988).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony concerning defendant's prior attempts to kill her husband, where testimony was admitted as going to show defendant's intent to kill her husband. May v. State, 524 So. 2d 957 (Miss. 1988).

Court at murder trial did not err in allowing evidence of murder of victim's husband, where that crime preceded and directly led to murder charged in case at bar; husband's murder was interrelated and inseparable from that of his wife, such that her murder was part of the same transaction, and evidence of first murder clearly bore on defendant's motive for second. Lockett v. State, 517 So. 2d 1346 (Miss. 1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1210, 108 S. Ct. 2858, 101 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1988).

Evidence of defendant's murder of wife was so interrelated and interconnected in time to murder of husband as to constitute a single or interconnected transaction; furthermore, killing of wife was clearly motivated by defendant's desire to effect a successful escape from his murder of husband, and thus mention of her fate was relevant to establish an unlawful motive in killing of husband. Lockett v. State, 517 So. 2d 1317 (Miss. 1987).

Preservation for review.

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because his argument that he was prejudiced by information about his bad character under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a) was procedurally barred since he failed to object to information that the State elicited about his bad character, which was his statement that he wanted to kill the man who had killed his sister. Ross v. State, 22 So. 3d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant failed to make any contemporaneous objects to prior bad act testimony at trial and thus he was procedurally barred from raising the issue on appeal; in any event, the court found no error because defendant opened the door to the evidence. Hodges v. State, 14 So. 3d 786 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's failure to contemporaneously object to the admission of bad act evidence at trial, as required by Miss. R. Evid. 103, effectively waived the issue on appeal, and in light of governing case law, the court did not find that the State's attempted introduction of the evidence substantially affected defendant's right to a fair trial when defendant failed to object. Butler v. State, 16 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling was proper where he argued that evidence of his drug use was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) or more prejudicial than probative under Miss. R. Evid. 403, but never objected to the admission of the evidence as required by Miss. R. Evid. 103. Therefore, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Busick v. State, 906 So. 2d 846 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 2005 Miss. LEXIS 396 (Miss. June 23, 2005).

Appellate court did not review whether a Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) motion was properly denied because an objection to the admission of evidence regarding an undercover drug buy was not specific as to Rule 404(b); the objection dealt with a lack of personal knowledge only. Dixon v. State, 953 So. 2d 1117 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), affirmed by 953 So. 2d 1108, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 210 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant failed to object to the State's questioning regarding defendant's use of a stolen vehicle during a burglary, under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Cheeks v. State, 843 So. 2d 87 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Prior arrest.

Prosecution did not violate the pre-trial ruling barring mention of defendant's prior arrests in authenticating the fingerprint card used to identify defendant's prints because unless the authenticity of the fingerprint card was stipulated to,

there had to be information that there was a database and the composition of that database; the actions of the circuit court in allowing the evidence were consistent with Miss. R. Evid. 102. Williams v. State, 919 So. 2d 250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly allowed the introduction of evidence that, 15 days before the murder, the defendant was charged with domestic violence and resisting arrest arising from an incident in which he threatened the victim with a knife in her apartment; the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by ruling that the prior conviction was "interconnected" with the charged crime and was, therefore, admissible where (1) a knife was involved in both crimes, (2) the defendant was alleged to have committed the murder within two hours of his release from prison on the domestic violence conviction, and (3) an allegation was made that he expressed his intention to seek revenge upon his victim while in prison. Stallworth v. State, 797 So. 2d 905 (Miss. 2001).

In the sentencing phase of a prosecution for murder, it was reversible error for the state to cross examine the defendant's mother regarding the defendant's arrest for rape which did not lead to a conviction since the mother did not testify that the defendant's character was good, that he had never raped anyone, that he had never been incarcerated, or that the prospect of a prolonged period of incarceration would change him for the better and, consequently, her direct examination testimony in no way opened the door to the state to ask such improper and prejudicial question. Edwards v. State, 737 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 1999).

In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault for stabbing the woman with whom he lived, the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to inquire into the details of defendant's previous conviction for aggravated assault for shooting a woman. The error was not harmless because evidence of defendant's prior conviction for the same crime of aggravated assault was highly prejudicial and because it permitted the exact inference that Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) sought to prevent. Thomas v. State, 19 So. 3d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 485 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault for stabbing the woman with whom he lived, the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to inquire into the details of his previous conviction for aggravated assault for shooting a woman. Although the prosecutor argued that the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) to show motive, opportunity, or intent because it was evidence that defendant liked to assault women, there was no proof that defendant's conviction for shooting another woman years earlier had any effect upon his motive, opportunity, or intent to stab his current victim. Thomas v. State, 19 So. 3d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 485 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's aggravated assault case, a court properly allowed evidence of defendant's assault on the victim, which occurred the day before the charged incident, because his actions were relevant to his motive for tracking the victim down and assaulting her again the following day, they pertained to the continuing act of violence to the extent that defendant ultimately accomplished a series of interrelated criminal acts, and the evidence was not offered to show defendant's character, but was offered as part of the very actions for which he was indicted. In addition, the evidence of the prior incident was properly admitted as its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. Jones v. State, 920 So. 2d 465 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated domestic violence against his girlfriend was appropriate because defendant's statements in which he alluded to prior domestic violence were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) to show the absence of an accident; additionally, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the evidence was more probative then prejudicial. Fugate v. State, 951 So. 2d 604 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In an aggravated assault case, a court erred by admitting evidence of defendant's prior aggravated assault conviction because the State's argument was that defendant did not act in self-defense in the current instance because his prior conviction for assault evidenced a lack of intent to act in self-defense. That line of logic represented precisely the sort of unfair prejudice prohibited by Miss. R. Evid. 404 and Miss. R. Evid. 609. Walker v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 728 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 11, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 936 So. 2d 424, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In his murder trial, defendant's defense was that he had accidentally shot his wife. Defendant's son's testimony regarding defendant and his wife's history of domestic violence contradicted defendant's defense by showing no accident and a common scheme of physical violence; as such, there was no error in admitting the son's testimony. Marbra v. State, 904 So. 2d 1169 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault arising from a shooting, in which the defendant alleged self-defense, it was error to permit the introduction of evidence of a prior shooting by the defendant as such evidence was inadmissible character evidence; a contrary result was not required by the fact that the defendant first introduced the evidence because the trial court denied a motion in limine to exclude the evidence and the defendant made a strategic decision to introduce the evidence himself based on his knowledge of that ruling. McCullough v. State, 750 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 1999).

In defendant's trial on a charge of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, a circuit court properly found evidence of defendant's two prior convictions involving the transfer of a controlled substance was admissible, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404, because the prior convictions were evidence of intent and the circuit court instructed the jury on the use of such evidence. Hosey v. State, 77 So. 3d 507 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 78 So. 3d 906, 2012 Miss. LEXIS 19 (Miss. 2012).

Where defendant was charged with drug offenses stemming from a transaction with a confidential informant, the informant was permitted to testify as to another transaction in which she owed twenty dollars to defendant for giving his sister crack cocaine. This testimony was not presented to prove that defendant was guilty of the crimes charged, but rather to tell the complete story of the underlying transactions to the crimes charged. Gray v. State, 921 So. 2d 393 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for two counts of selling a controlled substance was affirmed as the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing an officer testify as to a prior drug sale as it went to motive and intent as required by Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), was accompanied by a limiting instruction and passed muster under Miss. R. Evid. 403. Pena v. State, 932 So. 2d 89 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In defendant's case, evidence of his prior drug activity was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because defendant presented an entrapment defense, but the trial court erred in not conducting a Miss. R. Evid. 403 inquiry before admitting the convictions into evidence. However, the trial court's error was harmless because (1) the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury regarding the purpose for which those convictions could be considered, and specifically instructed the jury it could not consider the convictions in determining whether defendant was guilty of the crime for which he was on trial; and (2) overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt was presented at trial. Tate v. State, 912 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2005).

In light of defendant's testimony that he did not engage in marijuana commerce, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that defendant had opened the door for cross-examination on his drug-related activities. Moreover, defendant did not show prejudice or that a substantial right had been adversely affected by that ruling. Tate v. State, 912 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for possession with intent to distribute marijuana was upheld, because the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's prior conviction for sale of cocaine as proof of an intent to distribute under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and the trial court correctly gave a limiting instruction in an effort to minimize any prejudice. Clarke v. State, 859 So. 2d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), 403, the trial court did not err in admitting the passenger's testimony that the passenger had known defendant for a long time, that defendant regularly dealt drugs, that passenger knew defendant would sell the drugs that the trooper found in the truck, and that the passenger testified about prior drug sales. Smith v. State, 839 So. 2d 489 (Miss. 2003).

Previous involvement with drugs can be admitted on the issue of intent to distribute; thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion in limine regarding the exclusion of statements discussing prior bad acts and it properly instructed the jury as to the limits on its consideration of such acts. White v. State, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 311 (Miss. Oct. 24, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2003 Miss. LEXIS 208 (Miss. Apr. 10, 2003).

In a prosecution for possession of cocaine with intent to sell, evidence of a recent actual sale of cocaine by the defendant was properly admitted into evidence to show intent. Scruggs v. State, 756 So. 2d 817 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for unlawful possession of cocaine with intent to distribute within 1500 feet of a church, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of a recent prior drug sale in order to show intent, motive. and knowledge. Swington v. State, 742 So. 2d 1106 (Miss. 1999).

Prior drug use.

While on the stand in his own defense, defendant admitted to having been previously convicted of a drug offense and that he was on probation when the sale in question occurred; even though defendant admitted to a prior drug crime conviction, the lower court called for a limiting instruction and polled each member of the jury to make certain they would not consider this previous conviction in determining his guilt or innocence, so that any prejudice resulting from any of these statements, the most prejudicial of which was made by defendant himself, was cured upon the polling of the jury and the addition of a limiting instruction. Forrest v. State, 876 So. 2d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for possession of more than one ounce of marijuana with the intent to distribute, evidence of defendant's prior misdemeanor conviction for possession of marijuana and witnesses' accounts of his prior marijuana sales to them were properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 404 and 403 to show his intent to distribute, and the trial court gave a proper limiting instruction, albeit not the one defendant requested. White v. State, 842 So. 2d 565 (Miss. 2003).

It was reversible error for the court to allow the introduction into evidence that a urine sample obtained from the defendant the day after the shooting at issue tested positive for marijuana where the state did not use such evidence to attack the defendant's veracity. Ainsworth v. State, 754 So. 2d 591 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for burglary, the state was properly permitted to introduce the defendant's confession in which he admitted to having smoked crack cocaine prior to the burglary and to having entered the building in search of money with which to purchase more crack cocaine since the statement that he had smoked crack shortly before breaking into the building was part of the entire transaction, and since the statement also established a motive for committing the crime. Fikes v. State, 749 So. 2d 1107 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

At trial for fondling and sexual battery, it was not error to allow a videotape of the child victim's interview to be admitted into evidence without redacting a portion in which the victim was asked whether he had any knowledge of defendant's committing similar offenses with other children, as the victim did not make a conclusive statement about any other incident. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

Admission of a towel allegedly stained with defendant's semen was improper in a statutory rape case because, although the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), it was not authenticated or conclusively linked to defendant through biological testing. Walker v. State, 878 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery was appropriate because prior sexual acts of defendant were not excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) to show his lustful disposition towards the victim and the probability of his having committed the offense charged. Larson v. State, 957 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 958 So. 2d 1232, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 318 (Miss. 2007).

During defendant's trial for the sexual battery of a seven-year-old girl, the trial court did not err in admitting alleged prior bad acts into evidence pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); the bad acts were prior instances where defendant touched the victim in an inappropriate manner. McClure v. State, 941 So. 2d 896 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a trial for statutory rape, evidence that defendant had asked the victim to don a white t-shirt, and nothing else, on other occasions was inadmissible to prove defendant guilty of the charge; however, the trial court properly ruled that the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Miley v. State, 935 So. 2d 998 (Miss. 2006).

There is a clear line of cases authorizing a trial court in the prosecution of a sexual offense to permit evidence of past sexual crimes of the accused; thus, it was not error to admit evidence of defendant's past sexual offenses. Therefore, there could be no claim of ineffective assistance of counsel premised on the failure of trial counsel to object. Barrett v. State, 886 So. 2d 22 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 887 So. 2d 183 (Miss. 2004).

Evidence of an accused's prior sexual crimes was allowed in the prosecution of a sexual offense where the trial court determined that such evidence was proper to show the lustful disposition of the defendant toward the prosecuting witness, and the probability of his having committed the offense charged. Henry v. State, 816 So. 2d 443 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Trial court committed reversible error in defendant's trial for sexually abusing a young boy by allowing the testimony of a young girl who was allegedly previously sexually molested by defendant since the girl's testimony was inadmissible because evidence of a defendant's prior sexual misbehavior with other children may not be admitted to prove defendant's guilt. Earnest v. State, 805 So. 2d 599 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

It was not error to permit testimony of previous sexual offenses that took place over a period of several months prior to defendant's actually engaging in sexual intercourse with the victim, defendant's stepdaughter. Crawford v. State, 754 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. 2000).

Prior similar convictions.

Defendant's conviction for burglary was inappropriate because the prosecutor impermissibly used defendant's prior conviction for attempted grand larceny as evidence of defendant's predisposition to steal to prove the element of intent of the indicted offense. Using the evidence for such a purpose ran afoul of the prohibition on the use of predisposition evidence found in Miss. R. Evid. 404(a). Robinson v. State, 42 So. 3d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In convictions including the possession of, and conspiracy to possess illegal amounts of pseudoephedrine intending to use them in an unlawful manner, evidence of defendant's prior drug-related conviction was not prejudicial under Miss. R. Evid. 403, but was properly admitted to show knowledge, intent, and motive under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Gales v. State, 29 So. 3d 65 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err by admitting evidence of defendant's prior convictions under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) during the State's closing argument because a sentencing order for his prior convictions was properly admitted. Barlow v. State, 8 So. 3d 196 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 204 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant argued that the only reason he was at the victim's house was to obtain help after his vehicle broke down; however, defendant's prior convictions for burglary and attempted burglary tended to prove, along with other facts, that defendant's intent was to burglarize the house, not to obtain help. But, the underlying facts of the six prior convictions were irrelevant to the issue of intent, and the trial court would have erred if it had admitted such evidence; thus, under Miss. R. Evid. 403 and 404, the trial court did not err in admitting defendant's prior convictions to show intent and in not introducing the particulars of each prior conviction into evidence. Jones v. State, 904 So. 2d 149 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for burglary was reversed, and the matter was remanded for a new trial; while evidence of defendant's other convictions of burglary and burglary-related crimes could be admissible to show his intent, simply allowing the circuit clerk to read the convictions was improper as the jury could rely on the evidence to determine that defendant should be convicted because he had a character trait or propensity to commit burglary. Jones v. State, 905 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Felony shoplifting is somewhat akin to felony driving under the influence (DUI) in that both rely on multiple prior convictions for the same offending conduct to raise the level of offense from a misdemeanor to a felony; thus, the trial court properly dealt with the problems arising under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) by instructing the jury that it could not consider evidence of defendant's prior shoplifting convictions as evidence of defendant's guilt in the instant case. Bufkin v. State, 867 So. 2d 285 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a prosecution for unlawful possession of cocaine with intent to distribute within 1500 feet of a church, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of a prior conviction for unlawful sale of cocaine in order to show intent. Swington v. State, 742 So. 2d 1106 (Miss. 1999).

Defendant's manslaughter conviction was proper because, assuming for the sake of discussion that a witness's testimony was not irrelevant, it would have been confusing and misleading to the jury; the jury would have been led to believe that because the victim was verbally aggressive with the witness approximately four years earlier, he was more likely to have been the initial aggressor for the current series of events, Miss. R. Evid. 404(a). Accordingly, the nonexistent probative value of the witness's testimony would have been outweighed by the massive prejudicial effect that would have stemmed from misleading the jury. Booker v. State, 64 So. 3d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 64 So. 3d 965, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 316 (Miss. 2011).

In a case in which defendant was convicted of capital murder and the defense had sought to exclude evidence that defendant had previously committed acts of violence against the victim's mother, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony. The court allowed the prosecution to ask questions about defendant's prior conduct, and, in his trial testimony, defendant admitted that he had taken some aggression out on the mother, including hitting her. Logan v. State, 42 So. 3d 594 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 458 (Miss. 2010).

Witness's juvenile court record was offered for general impeachment purposes, which was not permitted, and the record was not offered to show bias or interest in testifying and thus the trial court properly refused to allow the witness to be cross-examined thereby; the witness's prior instances of violence were inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 608(b) and the evidence was also inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a), as it was offered to show that he was a violent person to create an inference that he acted in conformity with his propensity for violence. Williams v. State, 994 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 665 (Miss. 2008).

Rebuttal of assertions of good character.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce evidence of a conviction that was over 10 years old because defense counsel elicited testimony from defendant's sister indicating that defendant was a peaceable, law-abiding citizen; the prosecution was entitled to rebut the sister's testimony with evidence of defendant's 1980 conviction for possession of stolen property. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant opened the door to questioning of defendant regarding the existence of a restraining order prohibiting defendant from having contact with a 15-year-old statutory rape victim by denying contact with the victim; trial court did not err in admitting evidence regarding the order and defendant's violations thereof despite having previously ruled such evidence inadmissible. Farrish v. State, 840 So. 2d 820 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a capital murder prosecution where child abuse was the predicate offense, the trial court did not prevent defendant from presenting a defense in ruling that defendant's eliciting of evidence of his good conduct with his children would allow the State to prove his nonpayment of child support. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

By testifying that he was a decorated police officer and by stating that his character and integrity had never been questioned, the defendant placed his performance as a police officer in question; therefore, the state was properly permitted to cross examine the defendant with regard to suits against him for brutality. Morgan v. State, 741 So. 2d 246 (Miss. 1999).

Remoteness.

A three month time span was not so substantial as to defeat the argument that the defendant's motive for murdering the victim was to get back at her husband for firing him from his employment. Puckett v. State, 737 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 1999).

Series of transactions.

In defendant's trial on charges of violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-53, inducement to influence a public official, the trial court did not err in allowing a property owner to testify about prior bribe amounts accepted by defendant because the owner's statements about the prior payments to defendant were part of a videotaped conversation regarding the total price to be paid for the bribes at issue, which were given for defendant's aid in securing other city council members' approval of a hotel project. Under an exception to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), proof of another crime was admissible where it was so interrelated with the crime at issue as to constitute a single transaction. Edmonson v. State, 906 So. 2d 73 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's confession to a contemporaneous burglary was properly admitted during a trial for armed robbery because it showed identity, and the two crimes were so interrelated that they were part of the same transaction or occurrence; exclusion under Miss. R. Evid. 403 was not required because the confession was highly probative. Weaver v. State, 852 So. 2d 82 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for uttering a forgery where the defendant took a check belonging to the victim and cashed it at a store, references to other checks taken by the defendant at the same time were unavoidable, even by the defense, and were so closely related as to constitute a series of transactions. Dillard v. State, 811 So. 2d 389 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence of a sexual offense, other than the one charged, which involves a victim other than the victim of the charged offense for which an accused is on trial, if properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), filtered through Miss. R. Evid. 403, and accompanied by an appropriately-drafted limiting or cautionary instruction to the jury, should not be considered a per se error. Derouen v. State, 994 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2008).

At a trial for burglary of a dwelling and attempted rape, testimony that defendant was seen masturbating in a public place two to three hours before the incident in question was admissible because the evidence: (1) went to establish defendant's motive, state of mind, intent, and plan; and (2) was not unduly prejudicial in light of all the evidence produced at trial. Johnson v. State, 994 So. 2d 831 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 632 (Miss. 2008).

Changing of physical and legal custody of the parties' son from the mother to the father was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because evidence that the mother's new husband had exposed himself to others in the past was relevant to demonstrate that subsequent indecent exposures were not inadvertent or accidental. C.A.M.F. v. J.B.M., 972 So. 2d 656 (Miss.

Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 33 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's trial for statutory rape, the circuit court did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 404 when when it admitted audiotapes and the victim's testimony regarding allegations of prior bad acts committed by defendant. The circuit judge admitted the audiotapes and testimony of the victim for the limited purpose of showing that defendant exhibited a lustful and lascivious disposition towards the victim. Fisackerly v. State, 880 So. 2d 368 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, because the abuse of the victim and the abuse of another child occurred at the same compound over the same period of time and all of the abuse allegedly involved defendant son, any error in allowing the second abuse victim to testify at the first victim's trial, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), was harmless considering the overwhelming evidence of defendant son's guilt. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, despite defendant son's allegations to the contrary, the record clearly showed that the jury was properly instructed that the testimony of the second abuse victim and the correctional nurse was limited to determining the truth and veracity of defendant son's testimony and that the witnesses' testimony could not be used to arrive at a decision regarding the guilty testimony of defendant son for the charged crimes, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, because defendant son testified that he had never engaged in any sexual act with defendant father, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 403 and 404(b), the testimony from a correctional nurse regarding a sexual act was probative and a proper subject for rebuttal. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, because the trial judge had previously heard argument, outside the presence of the jury, on the reliability of the child victim's statements, which described sexual contact with defendant father, and the victim had previously testified regarding the statement, although perhaps cumulative, allowing defendant father's other son to testify to the victim's statement was not erroneous under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) and 801(d)(1)(B), especially since the son had solicited the statement from the victim, and defense attorneys had attacked the victim's credibility; thus, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) was not violated. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court committed reversible error in admitting the testimony of the alleged child sexual abuse victim's grandmother that she had overheard defendant's son say to the alleged victim "[defendant] only does it to you and me" because the statement referred to the alleged molestation of a child other than the alleged victim. Earnest v. State, 805 So. 2d 599 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

In a prosecution for capital rape arising from an ongoing sexual relationship between the 37 year old defendant and a 13 year old friend of his daughter, evidence of acts engaged in by the defendant and the victim prior to the crime at issue were properly admitted into evidence in corroboration of the offense charged, to show the intimate relation between the parties, the lustful disposition of defendant toward the victim, and the probability of his having committed the offense charged. Tompkins v. State, 759 So. 2d 471 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for a sex offense, evidence is generally admissible which shows or tends to show prior offenses of the same kind committed by the defendant with the prosecuting witness. Barbetta v. State, 738 So. 2d 258 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for sexual battery and touching a child for lustful purpose, it was reversible error for the court to permit the introduction of evidence of improper conduct by the defendant with other girls; such evidence was extremely prejudicial, and the defendant did not open the door to such evidence. Lambert v. State, 724 So. 2d 392 (Miss. 1998).

Subsequent conduct.

Evidence that defendant filed a false police report, reporting a gun stolen, was admissible in murder trial as relevant to show knowledge and absence of mistake or accident. Montana v. State, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 172 (Miss. May 9, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 822 So. 2d 954, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 220 (Miss. 2002).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, it was not error for the court to allow the introduction of evidence pertaining to the defendant's attempted armed robbery of the victim's two companions, which occurred immediately after the robbery of the victim, since the testimony concerning the attempted robbery tended to establish evidence of a greater likelihood of correct identification of the suspect by the three witnesses and the possible prejudicial effect of such testimony was nullified by the fact that testimony to each crime came from the same mouth. King v. State, 772 So. 2d 1076 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The trial court erred by allowing the prosecution to introduce evidence that the defendant used the money taken from his murder victim to purchase crack cocaine after the robbery and murder. Watts v. State, 717 So. 2d 314 (Miss. 1998).

The introduction into evidence of a subsequent assault committed by the defendant in a murder prosecution was proper since the evidence was not introduced to show that the defendant acted in conformity with his subsequent behavior and was, instead, introduced to show how the victim of the assault was able to identify a knife and a revolver and to show that he was in possession of those weapons shortly after the murder. Smith v. State, 724 So. 2d 280 (Miss. 1998).

Videotapes.

Trial court did not err under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) in admitting a portion of a surveillance videotape that showed defendant passing a bag to an undercover agent, who examined it and passed it to a confidential informant, because even if the video did show evidence of a crime, such as an attempted sale, it was part of the same transaction as the subsequent drug sales. Watson v. State, 19 So. 3d 747 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 503 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 1708, 176 L. Ed. 2d 195, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 2141, 78 U.S.L.W. 3499 (U.S. 2010).

Where a casino had a customer arrested for disorderly conduct, and there was no videotape evidence, the court ruled that when good character and reputation are in issue, such as in a false imprisonment case, or in cases involving malicious prosecution, character evidence is admissible. Alpha Gulf Coast, Inc. v. Jackson, 801 So. 2d 709 (Miss. 2001).

In a case where defendant was convicted of fondling the 15-year-old victim, a trial judge was acutely aware of the potentially prejudicial character of a videotape found in defendant's home depicting a young male engaged in a sexually explicit act and was careful to admit the tape only to rebut the claim of accident pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); where the trial judge allowed no questioning about the age of the young male in the video, did not allow the state to mention the related charges against defendant for possession of the videotape, and gave a limiting instruction to the jury on the use of the evidence, the trial judge on balance acted prudently and within his discretion in admitting the videotape to refute defendant's claim that if he touched the victim he did so accidentally. Mingo v. State, 944 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 2006).

In a prosecution for sale of a controlled substance, a videotape of a subsequent apparent drug transaction between the defendant and a police officer was properly introduced where there was no audio to the videotape, the videotape was not described as depicting a drug transaction, and the police officer testified that he used the videotape along with photographs to identify the defendant. Lard v. State, 749 So. 2d 276 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Trial court did not prevent defendant from presenting his theory of defendant — that during defendant's suicide attempt, the victim tried to wrestle defendant's gun away from him, leading to the accidental discharge that killed the victim — as defendant's proffered testimony relating to his prior suicide attempts was too vague and unspecific to support admission under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Specifically, defendant failed to provide evidence as to identifable time periods during which his alleged suicide attempts took place. Adams v. State, 62 So. 3d 432 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for the possession of at least 2, but less than 10, dosage units of hydrocodone in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(c) was appropriate because the trial court did not err in admitting the recorded statement that he provided to an officer. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(1) and (b) and defendant failed to consider that it was his attorney who agreed to have the statement pre-marked and who later suggested that it be entered into evidence. Sistrunk v. State, 48 So. 3d 557 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 629 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for the possession of at least 2, but less than 10, dosage units of hydrocodone in violation of Miss. Code Ann. ' 41-29-139(c) was appropriate because the trial court did not err in admitting the recorded statement that he provided to an officer. The probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(1) and (b) and defendant failed to consider that it was his attorney who agreed to have the statement pre-marked and who later suggested that it be entered into evidence. Sistrunk v. State, 48 So. 3d 557 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 629 (Miss. 2010).

Wife's contention that the deposition testimony constituted impermissible character evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a) also failed because the comment to Miss. R. Evid. 404 provided an exception to the prohibition against character evidence when character was a direct issue in a case, and in a child custody case, the character traits of parents were at issue in the chancellor's evaluation of the Albright factors. A parent's character traits could have been relevant in the Albright analysis under any of the factors, including moral fitness of the parents, physical and mental health of the parents, and the stability of the home environment. McCullough v. McCullough, 52 So. 3d 373 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's arson case, testimony regarding an assault rifle was relevant to show that defendant might have been trying to intimidate another person into participating in the crime. The testimony regarding the possession of the rifle was relevant to show motive and intent and to present "the complete story of the crime." Bennett v. State, 18 So. 3d 272 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 467 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder, aggravated assault, and conspiracy to commit aggravated assault were appropriate because counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to testimony in which the weapon used during the incident was connected to defendant since the inadmissibility provisions of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) were inapplicable; the subject evidence was offered to connect the murder weapon to the handgun stolen from a residence and the witness testified that defendant possessed some knowledge regarding that handgun. Such evidence could have been admissible under several of the exceptions to R. 404(b), including opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, or knowledge. Williams v. State, 3 So. 3d 105 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was appropriate because a statement presented to the jury did not imply that defendant spent time in a penitentiary and was not in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). It was neither evidence of a prior crime, wrong, or act, nor could it have been construed as admitted to prove defendant's character or acting in conformity therewith. Nelson v. State, 995 So. 2d 799 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 660 (Miss. 2008).

As to the issue of the existence of a confidential relationship between a testator and a beneficiary, the evidence at the heirs' trial against the decedent's beneficiary pertained to events that occurred post-execution, and character evidence was irrelevant to a determination of whether a confidential relationship existed between the two. Thus, the trial court did not err in excluding the evidence, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). In re Will of Boyles, 990 So. 2d 230 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 462 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling was proper because there was no unfair prejudice in a detective's testimony; likewise, his testimony did not raise any evidence of defendant's other crimes or bad acts under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Actually, the detective testified that during his encounter with defendant he was not engaged in any illegal conduct. Denham v. State, 966 So. 2d 894 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a manslaughter case, the State did not introduce any evidence of prior bad acts concerning defendant's prior stabbing of her step-father; the record only showed that such testimony came in through the defense. Brown v. State, 970 So. 2d 1300 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence misdemeanor charge affidavits of the victim against defendant because the prosecutor argued that the evidence was offered to establish motive for the victim's murder, and the trial court concluded that the prejudicial effect of the testimony did not outweigh its probative value. Jones v. State, 962 So. 2d 1263 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's capital murder convictions were proper where the hearsay testimony of the declarant's sister about declarant's involvement with defendant in an insurance scam was correctly admitted pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 403, 404(b), and 804(b)(5) because the declarant was unavailable and because the trial court made a thorough and proper balancing review on the record, applying the testimony to the five requirements for admission of hearsay, stating its findings on each requirement, and finding the testimony more probative than prejudicial; there was no evidence to support that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the testimony. Rubenstein v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 789 (Miss. Dec. 1, 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. Aug. 10, 2006), substituted opinion at, remanded by 941 So. 2d 735, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the prosecutor to introduce into evidence four separate instances in which the girlfriend had filed domestic violence charges against defendant because the evidence was admitted to rebut defendant's allegation that the incident was an accident and as evidence of motive; the evidence was highly relevant to show motive and absence of accident. Taylor v. State, 954 So. 2d 944 (Miss. 2007).

In a murder case, evidence of a victim's violent behavior was properly excluded because defendant was not arguing that the victim was the initial aggressor. Clemons v. State, 952 So. 2d 314 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's murder conviction was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) because an officer's testimony was necessary to present a complete story of how defendant reappeared at a gas station on consecutive nights and how defendant ended up in custody where a detective seized his clothing for DNA testing. Bailey v. State, 956 So. 2d 1016 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. 2007).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the casino in the patron's action after she slipped and fell on water at a buffet table was inappropriate because competent testimony concerning prior instances of water in the same spot where the patron fell created a genuine issue of material fact that precluded granting summary judgment for the casino; thus, it was erroneous for the circuit court to have excluded that evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b). Lockwood v. Isle of Capri Corp., 962 So. 2d 645 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 465 (Miss. 2007).

Prosecutor's statement that co-defendants had "been jumping on a lot of people lately" during closing arguments did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), and was not improper because the prosecutor was referring to a statement from a co-defendant that was admitted into evidence. Shumpert v. State, 935 So. 2d 962 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court erred and the case was remanded when it admitted evidence that a former client, who was suing his former attorney for assault, had previously threatened to break a physician's leg; the attorney had admitted that the client did not physically threaten him thus, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 404(a), the client's tendency towards aggressive behavior was not a pertinent character trait and the client's threat to break a physician's leg did not fall under any category of rule 404(b). Walker v. Benz, 914 So. 2d 1262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

As to his conviction for murder, defendant did not demonstrate that the outcome of his trial would have been different if his counsel had objected to the district attorney's leading questions to deputies and the district attorney's eliciting of prior bad acts testimony from the victim's family members and a neighbor. He merely asserted that had counsel been as diligent with objections on said matters, he would have received a fair trial, and that statement did not satisfy the prejudice prong of Strickland; defendant's account of the events that led to the victim's death was not corroborated by any of the eyewitnesses, the physical evidence refuted his account that the victim was shot accidentally during a close struggle, and because he was hopelessly guilty, he was not entitled to a new trial on grounds counsel was ineffective. Jones v. State, 911 So. 2d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 599 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper where the trial court properly refused defendant's proffered jury instruction because he was not entitled to a jury instruction that emphasized the evidence of his peaceful character, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-17-35. However, he was entitled to offer his good character as evidence of the improbability that he had committed the act charged, Miss. R. Evid. 404(a)(1). Brink v. State, 888 So. 2d 437 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 888 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1858, 161 L. Ed. 2d 744 (2005).

Felony shoplifting is somewhat akin to felony driving under the influence (DUI) in that both rely on multiple prior convictions for the same offending conduct to raise the level of offense from a misdemeanor to a felony; thus, the trial court properly dealt with the problems arising under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) by instructing the jury that it could not consider evidence of defendant's prior shoplifting convictions as evidence of defendant's guilt in the instant case. Bufkin v. State, 867 So. 2d 285 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a murder trial, the trial court properly declined to enter a sua sponte limiting instruction on prior bad acts offered under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), as the evidence was not offered for that reason, but rather to show the victim's state of mind under Miss. R. Evid. 803 and 804, and the limiting instruction rule was therefore not applicable. Reed v. State, 863 So. 2d 981 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Testimony from a murder victim's sister that showed defendant's propensity to using vulgar street vernacular in describing situations did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 404(a) because it was not character evidence offered to prove defendant's conformity therewith, and did not violate Rule 404(b) because it was not about any other crimes, wrongs, or acts committed by defendant. Moore v. State, 859 So. 2d 379 (Miss. 2003).

In a suit against a bar for furnishing alcohol to a minor who later caused an auto accident, the trial court properly excluded evidence of prior sales of alcohol to minors by the bar, as there was no purpose for such evidence other than to show that the bar had a propensity to sell alcohol to minors. Moore v. K&J Enters., 856 So. 2d 621 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. dismissed, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 198 (Miss. 2004).

Although at trial, a defendant's objection to character evidence was based on Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) and on appeal his objection was based on Miss. R. Evid. 404(a), the language of Miss. R. Evid.

103(a)(1) allowed the objection either way, because the specific ground was apparent from the context. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

Trial court, in case where defendant was accused of fondling a minor child, did not err in admitting testimony of defendant's sexual relations with two women since the sexual relations were intertwined with the fondling of the minor child. Todd v. State, 806 So. 2d 1086 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for sexual battery arising from an incident in which the victim was attacked in her bedroom by an intruder who leapt out of her closet and put a towel over her face so that she never saw his face, the court properly allowed the introduction of evidence of an incident on the previous day in which another woman was attacked in a similar manner but was able to identify the defendant as the perpetrator since the similarities between the incidents were outstanding and the testimony by the other woman showed that the defendant had opportunity, preparation, knowledge, and identity all under very similar circumstances. Adams v. State, 794 So. 2d 1049 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for distribution of cocaine, the state was properly permitted to present rebuttal testimony by a confidential informant regarding a prior sale to her of cocaine by the defendant following the defendant's own testimony that she never before sold cocaine to anyone, especially as the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, directing it on how to consider appropriately the prior sales of cocaine, and explained that this testimony was presented only for the purpose of attacking the defendant's credibility. Scott v. State, 796 So. 2d 959 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder, the court did not err in admitting evidence that the defnedant put a gun to the head of a friend of the victim and ordered him to leave, as the testimony showed the defendant's preparation and intent and thereby served to differentiate between accident, manslaughter, and murder. Reynolds v. State, 784 So. 2d 929 (Miss. 2001).

The defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for armed robbery where (1) the defendant's coperpetrator testified that the defendant had threatened him while they were in jail awaiting trial, (2) the defendant's objection to this testimony was sustained, and (3) the jury was instructed to disregard the statement. Hall v. State, 785 So. 2d 302 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for negligently causing the death of another while driving a motor vehicle at a time when the defendant was under the influence of alcohol, there was no reversible error where the defendant testified that she had consumed a number of beers prior to the accident, but had not consumed a sufficient quantity to have impaired her ability to properly operate her automobile, and the prosecutor then asked her whether she made it a practice to routinely consume quantities of alcoholic beverages; although evidence tending to indicate that the defendant made a practice of consuming excessive quantities of alcohol on a regular basis might have run afoul of the exclusionary rule announced in subsection (b) and the trial court probably erred in failing to sustain defense counsel's objections to such questioning, the inquiries were met with flat denials and no attempt was made by the state to contradict those denials or to impeach the defendant's credibility on that point. Langdon v. State, 798 So. 2d 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In an action against a restaurant arising from a motor vehicle accident caused by an intoxicated minor who was alleged to have purchased beer at the restaurant, the trial court properly excluded evidence of other sales of alcohol to minors, since the only conceivable purpose for such testimony was to show that the restaurant sold alcohol to minors. Delahoussaye v. Mary Mahoney's, Inc., 783 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder in which the defendant claimed that she killed her husband in self-defense, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence of prior fights between the defendant and her husband in which she cut his hands with a knife and shot at him as such evidence was relevant to motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident. Wooten v. State, 811 So. 2d 355 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court properly permitted the introduction of evidence that the defendant threatened to "shoot up" a witness's apartment if the witness did not give a shotgun to him since such evidence was relevant to show motive and intent to commit the crime at issue. Davis v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 162 (Miss. June 29, 2000).

In a prosecution in which the state theorized that robbery was the motive for the murder at issue, it was not error for the court to permit introduction of evidence that the defendant was in financial difficulty, that she owed the sheriff's department the sum of $1,000 to $2,000 for inmates she had working in her business, that she had gone through an inheritance and had become broke in the previous month and that she had written checks in the amount of $4,000 on her parent's business account without their knowledge. Wilhite v. State, 791 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for felony child abuse, the trial court properly allowed the introduction of evidence of prior injuries sustained by the child, notwithstanding that such injuries did not result in the indictment of the defendant, since such evidence showed a continuous and purposeful course of criminal abuse and negated testimony that the injuries to the child in the charged incident were the result of a fall. Bradford v. State, 759 So. 2d 434 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly allowed the introduction of evidence of the defendant's prior plans and attempts to kill the victim (her husband) as such evidence showed intent. Alford v. State, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 39 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 1, 2000), subst. op., 760 So. 2d 48 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, it was not error to introduce evidence that the defendant took items from the murder scene since such evidence was not offered to show his bad character and that he acted in conformity therewith and, instead, was offered to show that he was present at the crime scene, to corroborate his statements, and to show the various events that transpired around the time of the murder. Odom v. State, 769 So. 2d 189 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for auto burglary, evidence that the arresting officer saw the defendant and his coperpetrator near another vehicle and that they left the area when the officer shined his car lights on them was properly admitted into evidence since the defendant's acts were so interrelated as to constitute a single transaction or occurrence and the evidence was necessary to tell the complete story so as not to confuse the jury. Hall v. State, 760 So. 2d 817 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where the defendant in a murder prosecution attempted to portray himself as someone who would not sell drugs, was not violent, would not tell a lie, and who was scared of the victim and his gang, the state was entitled to present evidence of prior bad acts by the defendant. Riddley v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 237 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 541 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999).

In a prosecution for defrauding the state government and uttering forgery, the court improperly allowed the introduction into evidence of extensive records of forged receipts for repaired vehicles that the police seized from the defendant's house since such receipts were not the basis of the charges against the defendant and were highly prejudicial. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for defrauding the state government and uttering forgery, the court improperly allowed a state witness to testify regarding stolen property found on the defendant's property since character was not an element of the indicted charges and, therefore, specific instances of conduct were not relevant or admissible. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, it was not error to allow a witness to testify regarding prior drug sales by the defendant since (1) such testimony arguably supported the witness's identification of the defendant, and (2) such testimony was intertwined with the instant crime in that the homicide grew out of the defendant's drug dealing. Bennett v. State, 738 So. 2d 300 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Testimony by the defendant that, on the last time he saw his wife and children, he helped them out of their car and kissed his wife goodbye did not open the door to the district attorney's use of any alleged prior acts of verbal or physical abuse against his family. Kelly v. State, 735 So. 2d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of an assault committed shortly after the murder was properly admitted since the testimony was relevant to show how the assault victim was able to identify a knife and revolver used in the assault and since the reason for such testimony was to show that the defendants were in possession of a knife and a revolver (the possible murder weapon) shortly after the murder. Smith v. State, 729 So. 2d 1191 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1043, 119 S. Ct. 2410, 144 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1999).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence that the defendant threatened the life of a witness shortly after the murder since the evidence was not admitted as character evidence indicative of a propensity to commit murder, but directly as evidence of the crime charged since the threat was made in the midst of a description of the murder and included a display of the murder weapon. Bell v. State, 725 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1122, 119 S. Ct. 1777, 143 L. Ed. 2d 805 (1999).

A witness was properly permitted to testify to the defendant's bad reputation for peace and violence where the defendant put his character into issue by placing witnesses on the stand to testify that he was not violent and that he would not hurt anyone who did not first do something to him. Bell v. State, 725 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1122, 119 S. Ct. 1777, 143 L. Ed. 2d 805 (1999).

Trial court's admission of testimony of alleged sexual acts with third party not contained in indictment, over defendant's objection, constituted reversible error. Nicholson v. State, 704 So. 2d 81 (Miss. 1997).

Trial court did not err in refusing to grant mistrial when witness testified to threats made against him by defendant a few days prior to killing of defendant's wife; witness inadvertently exceeded testimonial bounds of court order, and prosecution did not intend to sway jury with repeated references to defendant's character trait for violence. Marks v. State, 532 So. 2d 976 (Miss. 1988).

Rule 405. Methods of proving character.

(a) Reputation or opinion. In all cases in which evidence of character or a trait of character of a person is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. On cross-examination, inquiry is allowable into relevant specific instances of conduct.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. In cases in which character or a trait of character of a person is an essential element of a charge, claim, or defense, proof may also be made of specific instances of his conduct.

COMMENT

Once the question of admissibility of character evidence is resolved under Rule 404, it is necessary to turn to Rule 405 for the correct methodology. Rule 405 provides two basic methods of proving character. One method, pursuant to Rule 405 (b) is reserved for those cases in which character is an essential part of the issue. In this situation, proof of specific instances of conduct may be introduced into evidence. Evidence of specific conduct is limited to cases in which character is an issue.

405 (a) provides the methods for proving character in cases in which character is an issue but more importantly in cases in which character evidence is being used inferentially. If permissible under Rule 404, the character evidence may be proved by opinion or reputation. Mississippi common law previously permitted such evidence to be introduced through reputation evidence. Rogers v. State, 204 Miss. 891, 36 So.2d 155 (1948). Recognizing that reputation evidence is nothing more than the opinion of a selected group, Rule 405 broadens the methodology to allow proof of character by opinion.

While 405(a) limits proof of character to reputation or opinion evidence on direct examination, it does provide that the witness may be cross-examined regarding specific acts of conduct. There are two sound reasons for permitting this type of cross examination. If the witness on cross-examination professes no knowledge about specific acts, his qualifications to state opinion or reputation are impugned. If the witness admits knowledge of specific bad acts, then he has been impeached. Magee v. State, 198 Miss. 642, 22 So.2d 245 (1945).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.
Specific instances.

A criminal defendant can offer his good character into evidence; however, prosecution can then rebut defendant's evidence of character. Davis v. State, 660 So. 2d 1228 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1192, 116 S. Ct. 1684, 134 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1996).

Evidence of specific acts of the deceased toward third parties are not admissible to show bad character of the deceased or non-conformity therewith. Russell v. State, 607 So. 2d 1107 (Miss. 1992).

Specific instances.

Changing of physical and legal custody of the parties' son from the mother to the father was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 405(b) because evidence of the mother's new husband's past conduct was introduced to demonstrate his general character as that character related to the new husband's and the mother's moral fitness, as well as to demonstrate that the new husband's presence in the custodial home constituted a material and adverse change in circumstances. C.A.M.F. v. J.B.M., 972 So. 2d 656 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by

In a murder prosecution, while proof of the victim's actual violent acts might have been admissible, defendant was not entitled to prove that the victim once bluffed others about pulling a gun: whether the victim acted violently when there was no danger was not probative that he was a violent man likely to start a confrontation when the stakes were much higher. Hester v. State, 841 So. 2d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 840 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce evidence of a conviction that was over 10 years old because defense counsel elicited testimony from defendant's sister indicating that defendant was a peaceable, law-abiding citizen; the prosecution was entitled to rebut the sister's testimony with evidence of defendant's 1980 conviction for possession of stolen property. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Assuming that the defendant had a legitimate claim of self defense, testimony regarding specific instances of the victim's violent nature should have been admitted in accordance with Rule 405(b); however, any error was harmless, as proof of the victim's violent nature was ultimately admitted. Jackson v. State, 784 So. 2d 180 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1139, 122 S. Ct. 1088, 151 L. Ed. 2d 987 (2002).

In a prosecution for murder, the defendant was properly precluded from presenting evidence of a verbal argument between the victim and a third person earlier on the day of the crime at issue and that the defendant put a stop to the argument, notwithstanding the assertion that such evidence proved his peaceful nature and the victim's violent nature. McGee v. State, 820 So. 2d 700 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for defrauding the state government and uttering forgery, the court improperly allowed a state witness to testify regarding stolen property found on the defendant's property since character was not an element of the indicted charges and, therefore, specific instances of conduct were not relevant or admissible. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, it was not reversible error for the court to exclude evidence of 18 and 20 year old prior convictions of the victim for assault and carrying a concealed weapon where several witnesses testified that the victim was less than stable, had mental problems, and tested positive for cocaine and there was evidence that the victim had a reputation for being violent and for violence while inebriated. Richburg v. State, 724 So. 2d 444 (Ct. App. 1998).

Trial court's admission of testimony of alleged sexual acts with third party not contained in indictment, over defendant's objection, constituted reversible error. Nicholson v. State, 704 So. 2d 81 (Miss. 1997).

Where manslaughter defendant alleged self-defense, trial court erred in excluding witness's testimony that he had seen victim in fights before; specific instances of victim's conduct were admissible, since character trait of violence was an essential element of defendant's defense. Newsom v. State, 629 So. 2d 611 (Miss. 1993).

Wife's propensity for violence with a butcher knife was an essential element of husband's defense of justifiable homicide, and husband was entitled to offer evidence of specific instances of his wife's conduct, particularly one of like kind and quality occurring but two weeks before the night of her shooting. Heidel v. State, 587 So. 2d 835 (Miss. 1991).

Rule 406. Habit; routine practice.

Evidence of the habit of a person or of the routine practice of an organization, whether corroborated or not and regardless of the presence of eyewitnesses, is relevant to prove that the conduct of the person or organization on a particular occasion was in conformity with the habit or routine practice.

COMMENT

Habit is considered to be an individual's usual method or manner of doing things. Routine practice refers to a group or institution's habit. See McCormick, Evidence, 3rd Ed., 162. Thus, we speak of a person's habit and the routine practice or custom of an institution. Mississippi has long recognized that under appropriate circumstances habit and custom are relevant evidence. Under Rule 406, evidence of habit or routine practice can be used as circumstantial evidence. A party may introduce evidence of a person's habit to imply that he probably acted in this instance in conformity with his habit.

In Mississippi under the common law such evidence would be inadmissible if there were no eyewitnesses. Rule 406 specifically provides to the contrary. See FRE 406, Advisory Committee's Note.

The evidence that a business acted in conformity with its routine practice is relevant. Of course, rebuttal is always permitted.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Intoxication.
Illustrative cases.

Intoxication.

Four prior convictions for public intoxication spanning a three and one-half year period were of insufficient regularity to rise to the level of "habit" evidence, and, therefore, evidence of such conviction was inadmissible under the rule. Donald v. Triple S Well Serv., Inc., 708 So. 2d 1318 (Miss. 1998).

The plaintiff was entitled to a new trial in an action to recover for personal injuries sustained on the job where the defendant failed to establish that anyone had ever observed the plaintiff taking a drink or acting in an impaired or intoxicated manner on the job, but such innuendo blanketed the entire proceeding. Donald v. Triple S Well Serv., Inc., 708 So. 2d 1318 (Miss. 1998).

Illustrative cases.

In a premises liability case in which a customer used a stepladder present in a retailer's store to retrieve an item from a top shelf and fell, evidence that it was the retailer's practice to leave defective stepladders returned by customers on the sales floor was not admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 403 because it would have left the jury to speculate that the ladder from which the customer fell was such a defective ladder. Gaines v. K-Mart Corp., 860 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 2003).

Course of conduct evidence introduced by plaintiff was relevant and was not substantially more prejudicial than probative; as defendants were sued for punitive damages based on an allegedly bad faith failure to pay, evidence which tended to prove defendants had a routine practice of bad faith dealings with other companies became important and relevant. Hans Constr. Co. v. Drummond, 653 So. 2d 253 (Miss. 1995).

Rule 407. Subsequent remedial measures.

When, after an injury or harm allegedly caused by an event, measures are taken which, if taken previously, would have made the injury or harm less likely to occur, evidence of the subsequent measures is not admissible to prove negligence culpable conduct, a defect in a product, a defect in a products's design, or a need for a warning or instruction. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered for another purpose, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or for impeachment. (Amended effective July 1, 2011.)

This rule prohibits evidence of subsequent repairs to be introduced for the purpose of proving negligence or liability, including products liability. However, it may be admitted into evidence for another purpose. The second sentence of the rule discusses its limitations. The rule mentions ownership, control, feasibility and impeachment as admissible purposes, but this is not an exclusive list of permitted grounds, only an illustrative list.

The primary reason for this rule is a sound one. If such evidence were admissible on the issue of culpability, then the person responsible would have little incentive to correct the defect. By excluding subsequent repairs and remedies, the rule encourages the owner to render the property safer, or at least does not discourage repairs. The rule applies only to remedial changes made after the occurrence that produced the damages giving rise to the action. Evidence of measures taken by the defendant before the "event" causing "injury or harm" does not fall within the exclusionary scope of Rule 407 even if they occurred after the manufacture or design of the product. Courts applying Rule 407 have excluded evidence of subsequent repairs, installation of safety devices, changes in company rules, and discharge of employees.

Admission for other purpose.
Illustrative cases.

Admission for other purpose.

Videotape footage and photographs of accident scene taken after subsequent measures had been completed to repair a rut on the highway where the accident occurred were properly admitted into evidence, as this evidence was introduced for the purpose of identifying the tortfeasor. Belmont Homes, Inc. v. Stewart, 792 So. 2d 229 (Miss. 2001).

Illustrative cases.

In a negligence case, a trial court erred by excluding a post-accident eye doctor visit from evidence, as although this was a subsequent remedial measure covered by Miss. R. Evid. 407, an exception for impeachment existed; moreover, Miss. R. Evid. 403 did not warrant the exclusion of the evidence either since a driver's credibility was paramount since he was the only person who remembered what had occurred. Alexander v. Greer, 959 So. 2d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Rule for exclusion in Miss. R. Evid. 407 has a more liberal application; in addition, the exceptions mentioned in Rule 407 are more liberal as well. Alexander v. Greer, 959 So. 2d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

While it may have been error for a trial court not to allow further questioning about a new type of mat used by an independent contractor in connection with oil well workovers, the error was not prejudicial because the company facing a wrongful death action, which hired the independent contractor, was able to get before the jury the fact that the contractor started using the new mat after the accident occurred. Coho Res., Inc. v. McCarthy, 829 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2002).

Evidence that flashing light warning devices were installed at train crossing after date of accident was properly excluded in negligence action against railroad. Sawyer v. Illinois Cent. G.R.R., 606 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. 1992).

Trial court did not err in barring evidence regarding the corporation's trimming of trees near the property owner's property as such evidence of a subsequent remedial measure was not admissible to show the corporation's alleged negligence, and while it would have been admissible to show the corporation's control over the power lines, the control of them was not an issue in the case. Redhead v. Entergy Miss., Inc., 828 So. 2d 801 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Rule 408. Compromise and offers to compromise.

Evidence of (1) furnishing or offering or promising to furnish, or (2) accepting or offering or promising to accept, a valuable consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise a claim which was disputed as to either validity or amount, is not admissible to prove liability for or invalidity of the claim or its amount. Evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations is likewise not admissible. This rule does not require the exclusion of any evidence otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations. This rule also does not require exclusion when the evidence is offered for another purpose, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, negativing a contention of undue delay, or proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution.

COMMENT

Evidence of an offer to compromise a claim is not receivable in evidence as an admission of either the validity or invalidity of the claim. The rule is based on two reasons. First, the evidence is irrelevant, since the offer may be motivated by a desire for peace rather than by a recognition of liability. Secondly, public policy favors the out-of-court compromises and settlement of disputes. The same policy underlines M.R.C.P. 48 which provides that evidence of an unaccepted offer is not admissible except in a proceeding to determine costs.

Pre-rule practice in Mississippi was similar to the rule with one significant difference. Under Rule 408 statements of admission facts made in negotiations are excluded from evidence. In Mississippi, an admission made in a settlement negotiation has been admissible against the declarant. See McNeer & Dood v. Norfleet, 113 Miss. 611, 74 So. 577 (1917).

Rule 408 only excludes offers when the purpose is proving the validity or invalidity of the claim or amount. Therefore, an offer for another purpose may well be admissible at trial.

Also, it is important to note that offers which are made in settlement negotiations are not necessarily excluded if they are otherwise discoverable.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Applicability.
Impeachment of witness.
Illustrative cases.

Applicability.

Since divorcing parties' property-settlement agreement was a binding contract between them concerning an agreed equitable division of their marital property, it was not a settlement or an offer to settle, such that Miss. R. Evid. 408 was inapplicable; accordingly, there was no merit to the wife's claim that the trial court erred in admitting the agreement into evidence. Wilson v. Wilson, 53 So. 3d 865 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Trial court erred in excluding evidence of appraisal of property; appraisal was not part of an offer to compromise a disputed claim, where there was only a threat of an eminent domain proceeding, and appraisal was made before condemnation petition was filed and any need for negotiations had arisen. Morley v. Jackson Redevelopment Auth., 632 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. 1994).

Impeachment of witness.

A narcotics task force officer testified that defendant gave the officer names of people who sold drugs in an attempt to cut a deal under Miss. R. Evid. 408, and the trial court admitted the testimony to rebut defendant's assertion that defendant knew nothing about drugs; because the testimony was not offered as evidence of defendant's guilt but to discredit defendant, the trial court properly admitted the officer's rebuttal testimony. Smith v. State, 839 So. 2d 489 (Miss. 2003).

Whatever bias might be shown by the indications of interest by the victim in receiving some compensation from defendant, the appellate court found that it was within the trial judge's discretion to refuse to permit the matter to be explored before the jury. Armstead v. State, 805 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In an action arising from a motor vehicle accident, a Petition for Authority to Settle and Compromise Doubtful Claim of Minor Child was properly introduced into evidence to impeach the credibility of the plaintiff's husband after he denied ever filing a claim on behalf of his minor child against his wife when, in fact, he had filed a claim and collected for the child; however, the trial court committed reversible error when it allowed the defendants' attorney to use the petition as substantive evidence during closing arguments. Martindale v. Wilbanks, 744 So. 2d 252 (Miss. 1999).

Defendant's embezzlement conviction was proper where the trial court did not err in overruling his motion to suppress the statement he made at the police station pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 408 because, even if the trial judge had not admitted the testimony regarding his statement at the station, there was substantial evidence with which to convict defendant. Crimm v. State, 888 So. 2d 1178 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In an employment contract dispute, a court did not err in admitting a letter relating to the discontinuance of employment where, by its own statement, the employer acknowledged that the employment agreement was no longer in force. At best, the letter was mere "puffing" in an attempt by to downplay the significance of the employee's leaving the cardiology practice and any claims made by him during negotiations for "membership" regarding his right and eligibility for membership in the employer's organization. HeartSouth, PLLC v. Boyd, 865 So. 2d 1095 (Miss. 2003).

Negotiation offer was clearly inadmissible evidence to establish amount of compensation due in condemnation proceeding. State Highway Comm'n v. Warren, 530 So. 2d 704 (Miss. 1988).

Rule 409. Payment of medical and similar expenses.

Evidence of furnishing or offering or promising to pay medical, hospital, or similar expenses occasioned by an injury is not admissible to prove liability for the injury.

COMMENT

This rule fills a gap in Mississippi's evidence law. There exists no pre-rule Mississippi case on the relevance of offers by a defendant to pay plaintiff's medical expenses.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Illustrative cases.

Store manager's offer to pay medical bills of customer who fell in store aisle was clearly not admissible for the purpose of proving liability. Drennan v. Kroger Co., 672 So. 2d 1168 (Miss. 1996).

Rule 410. Inadmissibility of pleas, plea discussions, and related statements.

Except as otherwise provided in this rule, evidence of the following is not, in any civil or criminal proceeding, admissible against the defendant who made the plea or was a participant in the plea discussions:

(1) A plea of guilty which was later withdrawn;

(2) A plea of nolo contendere;

(3) Any statement made in the course of any proceedings under Mississippi statutory or rule of court provisions regarding either of the foregoing pleas; or

(4) Any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which does not result in a plea of guilty or which results in a plea of guilty later withdrawn.

However, such a statement is admissible (1) in any proceeding wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it, or (2) in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement if the statement was made by the defendant under oath, on the record, and in the presence of counsel.

COMMENT

Under existing Mississippi law, a plea of nolo contendere by a defendant is not admissible against him later in either a civil case or a criminal case. See Keys v. State, 312 So.2d 7 (Miss. 1975). (A plea of nolo contendere is only available in misdemeanor cases). Rule 410 is consistent with Mississippi law by rendering inadmissible both guilty pleas which are withdrawn and statements made in a judicial proceeding regarding a plea of guilty which is withdrawn or a plea of nolo contendere. Sanders v. State, 435 So.2d 1177 (Miss. 1983) and Rule 3.03 (6), Uniform Criminal Rules of Circuit Court Practice.

The exceptions to this rule of inadmissibility are limited. The first exception covers situations in which the defendant testifies at trial that the prosecutor or police made a statement expressing doubt as to defendant's guilt. In such an instance, the state would be able to introduce the defendant's statement or plea to rebut his testimony.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Nolo contendere.
Plea negotiations.
Withdrawn pleas.

Nolo contendere.

Where an inmate argued that counsel was ineffective in allowing the inmate to plead guilty to being a felon in possession of a deadly weapon when the prior conviction was based upon a California nolo contendere plea to a marijuana possession charge, which the inmate argued could not be used against the inmate in the Mississippi charges, the inmate failed to establish a prima facie case of ineffective assistance of counsel because, inter alia, he admitted on the record that he had been convicted of a felony. Knight v. State, 983 So. 2d 348 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 267 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 998, 129 S. Ct. 492, 172 L. Ed. 2d 363, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 8079, 77 U.S.L.W. 3265 (2008).

Plea negotiations.

Where an air conditioning unit found in defendant's trunk had serial numbers matching those of a unit shoplifted from a store, the trial court's error in admitting testimony from a deputy about defendant's plea negotiations in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 410(4) was harmless. Jasper v. State, 871 So. 2d 729 (Miss. 2004).

While evidence that a plea offer was made by the prosecution and rejected by the defendant does not fall squarely under any of the four categories in the rule, it is clear that a prosecutor's statement regarding such an offer violates the spirit of the rule. Brooks v. State, 763 So. 2d 859 (Miss. 2000).

The only governmental officer with authority to enter into plea negotiations is the prosecuting attorney. Evans v. State, 725 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1097, 143 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1999).

Murder defendant's confession was not made during plea negotiations, and it was therefore admissible; prosecuting attorney was the only governmental officer with authority to enter into plea negotiations, and defendant was not actually involved in plea negotiations but was cooperating in order to assure placement in a federal facility. Evans v. State, 725 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1097, 143 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1999).

The defendant's confession was admissible under the rule on the basis that it was precipitated by plea negotiations where (1) the confession was not part of a discussion between the defendant and the prosecuting attorney, and (2) the confession was not made as part of a negotiation for a plea, but was made instead, as part of a negotiation to further the defendant's desires to be housed in a federal facility and to have visitation privileges with his girlfriend. Evans v. State, 725 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1097, 143 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1999).

The defendant's expectation that he was negotiating a deal which would not be used against him at trial was reasonable, the statement was given in conjunction with plea negotiations, and the rule prohibited the admission of the statement at trial, notwithstanding that the statement was made to a law enforcement officer, although a prosecuting attorney was present, and the prosecuting attorney entered the room after the defendant was given his Miranda rights, where the statement was given in exchange for the state's promise not to seek the death penalty. Barnett v. State, 725 So. 2d 797 (Miss. 1998).

Withdrawn pleas.

The trial court erred in its interpretation of Rule 410 when it refused to allow the impeachment of a witness with a prior inconsistent statement from a withdrawn plea. Keys v. State, 739 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Rule 411. Liability insurance.

Evidence that a person was or was not insured against liability is not admissible upon the issue whether he acted negligently or otherwise wrongfully. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability when offered for another purpose, such as proof of agency, ownership, or control, or bias or prejudice of a witness.

COMMENT

One of the primary reasons for excluding evidence of insurance or the lack of it is to prevent the jury from deciding the case on improper grounds. Rule 411 reflects existing Mississippi practice. Evidence of the existence of defendant's insurance is irrelevant as to his negligence and admission of such evidence may be grounds for a mistrial. See Mid-Continent Aircraft Corp. v. Whitehead, 357 So.2d 122 (Miss. 1978); Petermann v. Gray, 210 Miss. 438, 49 So.2d 828 (1951). Evidence of liability insurance may be relevant for other purposes, such as proof of agency, ownership, or bias.

Construction.

While evidence of existence of liability insurance is not admissible upon issue of whether a party acted negligently or otherwise wrongfully, it may well be relevant to other issues, such as agency. Royal Oil Co. v. Wells, 500 So. 2d 439 (Miss. 1986).

In a civil suit following an automobile accident in which both parties had the same liability insurer, the trial court abused its discretion under Miss. R. Civ. P. 42 by denying appellant's motion to sever appellant's breach of contract and bad faith claims against the insurer from appellee's property damages and medical claims against the insurer; appellant would be unduly prejudiced because the fact that she had liability insurance would be placed squarely before the jury in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 411. Hegwood v. Williamson, 949 So. 2d 728 (Miss. 2007).

Bias.

In a medical malpractice action, evidence that a doctor's experts were all members of the same insurer was properly not admitted because the probative value of the evidence that the doctor's experts could incur a financial penalty of $ 136 if the patient was successful on her claim was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice resulting from the admission of evidence concerning the existence of a liability insurance policy. Wells v. Tucker, 997 So. 2d 908 (Miss. 2008).

Circuit court abused its discretion when it applied the Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test where, if the circuit court believed that the jury knew about the presence of insurance for the physician, then there could be no prejudicial effect in placing it before the jury; the evidence that the physician and his experts all belonged to the same mutual insurance company had some probative value and there would have been no prejudice in allowing the jury to hear that the physician had insurance. Wells v. Tucker, 997 So. 2d 925 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 997 So. 2d 908, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 480 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court abused its discretion in not allowing a trial to be bifurcated in a contractor's action against a subcontractor and an insurance company, pursuant to Miss. R. Civ. P. 42 and Miss. R. Evid. 411, because the comment to Miss. R. Civ. P. 42 authorized a separate trial to avoid prejudice such as here where the jury would learn that the subcontractor was insured, and the issue of the amount of damages the contractor or subcontractor may owe one another was completely unrelated to the issues of whether there is insurance coverage provided by the insurance company. Capital City Ins. Co. v. G.B. 'Boots' Smith Corp., 889 So. 2d 505 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court erred in excluding evidence of liability insurance, where plaintiff offered the evidence of the existence of liability insurance in a good faith attempt to show the bias of defendant's expert. Mitchell v. Glimm, 819 So. 2d 548 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Ownership or control.

In a action to recover for injuries sustained by the plaintiff while working on premises owned by the defendant, the court did not err in refusing to allow the introduction of a liability insurance policy for the limited purposes of showing that the defendant was the named insured for the restaurant located in the building as evidence of her control over the premises and impeaching her testimony that she had no involvement with the restaurant since it was undisputed that she owned the building; therefore, the fact of her control over the premises was not disputed. Vu v. Clayton, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 458 (Miss. Ct. App. July 20, 1999), reversed by 765 So. 2d 1253, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 158 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 412. Sex offense cases; relevance of victim's past behavior.

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case in which a person is accused of a sexual offense against another person, reputation or opinion evidence of the past sexual behavior of an alleged victim of such sexual offense is not admissible.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in a criminal case in which a person is accused of a sexual offense against another person, evidence of a victim's past sexual behavior other than reputation or opinion evidence is also not admissible, unless such evidence other than reputation or opinion evidence is:

(1) Admitted in accordance with subdivisions (c)(1) and (c)(2) hereof and is constitutionally required to be admitted; or

(2) Admitted in accordance with subdivision (c) hereof and is evidence of

(A) Past sexual behavior with persons other than the accused, offered by the accused upon the issue of whether the accused was or was not, with respect to the alleged victim, the source of semen, pregnancy, disease, or injury; or

(B) Past sexual behavior with the accused and is offered by the accused upon the issue of whether the alleged victim consented to the sexual behavior with respect to which a sexual offense is alleged; or

(C) False allegations of past sexual offenses made by the alleged victim at any time prior to the trial.

(c)(1) If the person accused of committing a sexual offense intends to offer under subdivision (b) evidence of specific instances of the alleged victim's past sexual behavior or evidence of past false allegations made by the alleged victim, the accused shall make a written motion to offer such evidence not later than fifteen days before the date on which the trial in which such evidence is to be offered is scheduled to begin, except that the court may allow the motion to be made at a later date, including during trial, if the court determines either that the evidence is newly discovered and could not have been obtained earlier through the exercise of due diligence or that the issue to which such evidence relates has newly arisen in the case. Any motion made under this paragraph shall be served on all other parties and on the alleged victim.

(2) The motion described in paragraph (1) shall be accompanied by a written offer of proof. If the court determines that the offer of proof contains evidence described in subdivision (b), the court shall order a hearing in chambers to determine if such evidence is admissible. At such hearing the parties may call witnesses including the alleged victim, and offer relevant evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of Rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the accused seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the hearing in chambers or at a subsequent hearing in chambers scheduled for such purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether such condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine such issue.

(3) If the court determines on the basis of the hearing described in paragraph (2) that the evidence which the accused seeks to offer is relevant and that the probative value of such evidence outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice, such evidence shall be admissible in the trial to the extent an order made by the court specifies evidence which may be offered and areas with respect to which the alleged victim may be examined or cross-examined.

(d) For purposes of this rule, the term "past sexual behavior" means sexual behavior other than the sexual behavior with respect to which the sexual offense is alleged. (Amended effective March 1, 1989.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective March 1, 1989, Rule 412 was amended to add the terms "pregnancy" and "disease" to 412(b)(2)(A) and to add a new subsection 412 (b)(2)(C). 536-538 So. 2d XXXII (West Miss. Cas. 1989).

COMMENT

(a) — Subsection (a) is designed to protect the privacy of the alleged victim by excluding opinion or reputation evidence of the victim's past sexual experience. This rule is applicable in all criminal cases in which a defendant is accused of a sexual offense against another person. This includes, but is not limited to, offenses prohibited by M.C.A. § 97-3-95.

(b) — Section (b) excludes other evidence of the victim's past sexual experience with some exceptions. Specific instances of sexual conduct are admissible to determine whether the defendant is the source of semen, pregnancy, disease or injury. Furthermore, specific instances of sexual conduct between the alleged victim and the defendant are relevant on the issue of consent.

(c) — Subsection (c) provides that notice be given if the defendant intends to offer evidence of specific instances of the alleged victim's sexual conduct. The defendant does this by making a written motion to offer the evidence, which includes an offer of proof. The court then holds a hearing in chambers to decide the evidence's admissibility.

If otherwise admissible, nothing in this rule precludes evidence of past false allegations by the alleged victim of past sexual offenses. "Past false allegations" shall include any such allegations made prior to trial. This provision is intended to protect the defendant's Sixth Amendment rights.

Rule 412(a) and (b) adapts the language of Uniform Rule of Evidence 412. In its procedural requirements Rule 412 bears similarity to M.C.A. § 97-3-70 (repealed July 1, 1991), the Mississippi rape-shield law enacted in 1977. See also M.C.A. § 97-3-68; Johnston v. State, 376 So.2d 1343 (Miss. 1979).

Construction.

Absence of victim's hymenal ring was a "disease or injury" within meaning of this rule. Goodson v. State, 566 So. 2d 1142 (Miss. 1990).

For purposes of this rule, "past sexual behavior" refers to sexual behavior occurring at any time in the past, i.e., prior to trial, and not only to sexual behavior prior to date of offense charged in indictment. Goodson v. State, 566 So. 2d 1142 (Miss. 1990).

Applicability.

In a sexual battery case, the evidence of a prior sexual relationship with defendant was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412(c)(1) because it was not relevant to determine whether the victim consented on the day of the offense, especially considering that the evidence showed that defendant broke into the victim's house during the night and entered her bedroom with a large knife in his hand. Goldman v. State, 9 So. 3d 394 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 222 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded because defendant failed to comply with Miss. R. Evid. 412(c)(1) by filing a written notice that he intended to offer evidence of the victim's past sexual relationship with him within 15 days before trial. Goldman v. State, 9 So. 3d 394 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 222 (Miss. 2009).

Evidence that a child victim had allegedly caused injuries to his own rectum by sticking objects there was properly excluded in a sexual battery case because it was irrelevant under Miss. R. Evid. 401 and highly prejudicial under Miss. R. Evid. 403, and it was also a collateral issue that was too remote in time to rebut the charges based on the fact that it was a year before the charges in an indictment; case law under Miss. R. Evid. 412 was helpful in making this determination, despite the fact that the victim's actions did not constitute clear sexual activity. Mason v. State, 971 So. 2d 618 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 701 (Miss. 2007).

Contemporaneous report of abuse was not relevant to defendant's sexual battery convictions where the cases were not related and only shared the same victim. Parker v. State, 825 So. 2d 59 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Notice was not provided to the State 15 days prior to trial, and evidence that victim's accusations against her father and subsequent recantation constituted a prior false accusation did not qualify as an exception under subsection (c); thus, the testimony was procedurally barred from being admitted. Lofton v. State, 818 So. 2d 1229 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

A rape victim did not open the door to evidence of her prior sexual activity when she, in her testimony, referred to a young child living in the home as "my baby." Radcliff v. State, 736 So. 2d 1081 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Adultery.

In a prosecution for sexual battery by the defendant of his wife's sister, the court properly precluded cross examination of the victim with regard to her alleged habit of dating married men since such evidence was not relevant to whether he was, with respect to the victim, the source of semen, pregnancy, disease, or injury. Waltman v. State, 734 So. 2d 324 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Preclusion.

Rape shield rule did not apply to testimony of two witnesses to effect that victim had been in bed with a third person not defendant, since conflicting evidence of who actually caused injury during incident was outside scope of the rule. Amacker v. State, 676 So. 2d 909 (Miss. 1996).

Relevance.

Trial court properly prohibited cross-examination on issue of rape victim's virginity, because whether victim was a virgin was irrelevant to whether she was raped. Heflin v. State, 643 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1994).

Right to confrontation.

Trial court permitted defendant to produce evidence of his sons' assault upon the victim through cross-examination of several other witnesses and the trial court's decision not to allow defendant to call the victim's stepbrothers did not deprive defendant of an ample opportunity to present his theory of the case. Caldwell v. State, 6 So. 3d 1076 (Miss. 2009).

Illustrative cases.

In a statutory rape case, the prior sexual activity of a minor victim was properly excluded from evidence because defendant did not lay a proper predicate under Miss. R. Evid. 613; moreover, the exceptions to Miss. R. Evid. 412 did not apply, and defendant did not comply with the requirements of Rule 412. Ladd v. State, 969 So. 2d 141 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a postconviction petition involving a rape conviction, newly discovered evidence that a victim left a bar with a man fitting an inmate's description several days before an alleged rape was admissible because it was evidence of prior relations between the parties; therefore, a trial court should have granted the inmate's petition for relief. Hunt v. State, 877 So. 2d 503 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 66 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for fondling a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because, inter alia: (1) the evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, (2) the trial court did not improperly limit cross-examination of the victim in violation of defendant's rights under USCS Const. Amend. 6 and Miss. Const. Art. III, § 26, because testimony concerning the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412; (3) since defendant failed to object at trial to the qualification of an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the issue was waived; and (4) under Miss. R. Evid. 615(3), the expert witness was properly allowed to remain in the court room so that she could base her opinion on facts learned at the trial pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Aguilar v. State, 955 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Failure to give timely notice and qualify for an exception to Miss. R. Evid. 412 did not warrant a reversal of a trial court's decision to deny testimony regarding the sexual conduct of a victim; furthermore, failure to proffer testimony is a procedural bar to the issue on appeal. Blackmon v. State, 803 So. 2d 1253 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The court properly disallowed evidence regarding a murder victim's past sexual contacts where the defendant proffered some hearsay and some direct evidence of the victim's past sexual contacts and, even assuming such contacts were true, the closest was approximately two weeks before her disappearance. Hughes v. State, 735 So. 2d 238 (Miss. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680, (2000).

Trial court erred in refusing to allow evidence offered by rape defendant to prove he was not the source of victim's vaginal injury; ruling, in effect, prevented defendant from putting on a defense amounting to anything more than a denial. Herrington v. State, 690 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. 1997).

Although defendant failed to make required written request fifteen days prior to trial, as to children's testimony regarding their alleged sexual relationships with a third party and existence and source of their venereal diseases, admissible evidence was nevertheless admitted and thus defendant could not show prejudice. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Evidence of rape victim's past sexual behavior should not have been excluded, where it was admissible to rebut inference that defendant was source of semen discovered and that semen was the result of a rape. Heflin v. State, 643 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1994).

Trial judge properly sustained State's objection to defendant's question about murder victim's past sexual behavior with her boyfriend; defendant's contention that this rule was designed solely to protect privacy of a living victim was meritless. Holland v. State, 587 So. 2d 848 (Miss. 1991).

ARTICLE V. PRIVILEGES

Rule 501. Privileges recognized only as provided.

Except as otherwise provided by the United States Constitution, the State Constitution, by these rules, or by other rules applicable in the courts of this state to which these rules apply, no person has a privilege to:

(1) Refuse to be a witness;

(2) Refuse to disclose any matter;

(3) Refuse to produce any object or writing; or

(4) Prevent another from being a witness or disclosing any matter or producing any object or writing.

COMMENT

Rules 501 through 505 are largely modeled on the draft version of the Federal Rules of Evidence which was originally approved by the United States Supreme Court. Before enacting the Federal Rules of Evidence, Congress deleted the rules concerning privilege on the ground that the rules invaded an area of state law. The federal courts, however, often refer to these deleted rules, which are now labeled Federal Standards. Although they have no binding effect on the federal courts, they do serve as guidelines.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Construction.
Attorney-client privilege.

Construction.

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence results of blood alcohol test performed on defendant without his consent, while he was unconscious; statutory privilege was inconsistent with Mississippi Rules of Evidence, and was therefore abrogated by this rule. Whitehurst v. State, 540 So. 2d 1319 (Miss. 1989).

Attorney-client privilege.

In a case in which a district court determined that Miss. Code. Ann. § 73-33-16 was not applicable in regard to a motion for a temporary stay of an order by the court, even if § 73-33-16 governed, it was still not entirely clear whether the Mississippi accountant-client privilege would apply in light of the Mississippi Supreme Court's holding that statutory privileges were abrogated by the adoption of Miss. R. Evid. 501. The movants had not asserted a privilege provided by the Constitution of the United States or Mississippi, and the Mississippi Rules of Evidence did not provide for an accountant-client privilege. Int'l Fire & Safety, Inc. v. H.C. Servs., — F. Supp. 2d —, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84601 (S.D. Miss. Oct. 30, 2007).

Rule 502. Lawyer-client privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A "client" is a person, public officer, or corporation, association, or other organization or entity, either public or private, who is rendered professional legal services by a lawyer, or who consults a lawyer with a view to obtaining professional legal services from him.

(2) A "representative of the client" is one having authority to obtain professional legal services, or to act on advice rendered pursuant thereto, on behalf of the client, or an employee of the client having information needed to enable the lawyer to render legal services to the client.

(3) A "lawyer" is a person authorized, or reasonably believed by the client to be authorized, to engage in the practice of law in any state or nation.

(4) A "representative of the lawyer" is one employed by the lawyer to assist the lawyer in the rendition of professional legal services.

(5) A communication is "confidential" if not intended to be disclosed to third persons other than those to whom disclosure is made in furtherance of the rendition of professional legal services to the client or those reasonably necessary for the transmission of the communication.

(b) General rule of privilege. A client has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications made for the purpose of facilitating the rendition of professional legal services to the client (1) between himself or his representative and his lawyer or his lawyer's representative, (2) between his lawyer and the lawyer's representative, (3) by him or his representative or his lawyer or a representative of the lawyer to a lawyer or a representative of a lawyer representing another party in a pending action and concerning a matter of common interest therein, (4) between representatives of the client or between the client and a representative of the client, or (5) among lawyers and their representatives representing the same client.

(c) Who may claim the privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the client, his guardian or conservator, the personal representative of a deceased client, or the successor, trustee, or similar representative of a corporation, association, or other organization, whether or not in existence. The person who was the lawyer or the lawyer's representative at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the client.

(d) Exceptions. There is no privilege under this rule:

(1) Furtherance of crime or fraud. If the services of the lawyer were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit what the client knew or reasonably should have known to be a crime or fraud;

(2) Claimants through same deceased client. As to a communication relevant to an issue between parties who claim through the same deceased client, regardless of whether the claims are by testate or intestate succession or by inter vivos transaction;

(3) Breach of duty by a lawyer or client. As to a communication relevant to an issue of breach of duty by the lawyer to his client or by the client to his lawyer;

(4) Document attested by a lawyer. As to a communication relevant to an issue concerning an attested document to which the lawyer is an attesting witness; or

(5) Joint clients. As to a communication relevant to a matter of common interest between or among two (2) or more clients if the communication was made by any of them to a lawyer retained or consulted in common, when offered in an action between or among any of the clients.

COMMENT

Subsection (a) defines pertinent terms: who is a lawyer, who is a client, who are their representatives. These definitions clarify Mississippi law. The only existing statute relating to attorney-client relationship is M.C.A. § 73-3-37 which, among other things, includes a provision that one of an attorney's duties is "to maintain inviolate the confidence and, at every peril to themselves, to preserve the secrets of their clients. . . ."

The term "client" includes individuals, corporations and associations, and governmental bodies. Mississippi decisional law is in accord with Rule 502(a)(1) in that the privilege protects communications between an attorney and one who consults him with a view towards retaining him, but who eventually decides not to employ him. See Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 153 (1877). The services provided by the attorney must be legal services in order to be cloaked with the privilege. Services which are strictly business or personal do not enjoy the privilege. See McCormick, Evidence, 92. The Mississippi court has not recognized the privilege in those cases in which the attorney is merely a scrivener. Rogers v. State, 266 So.2d 10 (Miss. 1972).

Rule 502(a)(2) defines representatives of a client. This takes on particular significance in regards to corporate clients. This group of employees who may be a client's representatives is larger than the "control group". The "control group" was formerly one of the leading tests for determining which corporate employees had the benefit of the privilege. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 101 S. Ct. 677, 66 L.Ed.2d 584 (1981), in which the Supreme Court construed the language of the Federal Rules of Evidence as invalidating the control group test and so rejected it.

The definition of lawyer in Rule 502(a)(3) covers any person licensed to practice law in any state or nation. It includes persons who are not lawyers but whom the client reasonably believes are lawyers.

The definition of representative of the lawyer in Rule 502(a)(4) is broadly designed to include the lawyer's employees and assistants. It also includes experts that the lawyer has hired to assist in the preparation of the case. It does not extend to an expert employed to be a witness. This conforms to existing Mississippi practice. Dictum in Wilburn v. Williams, 193 Miss. 831, 11 So.2d 306 (1943), indicated that the court might have followed such a definition if the issue was before it.

A communication which takes place in the presence of a third party is not confidential unless it complies with the statement in Rule 502 (a)(5). If the third party does not fall within these categories in this subsection, his presence deems the communication not to be confidential. See Taylor v. State, 285 So.2d 172 (Miss. 1973); Ferrel v. State, 208 Miss. 539, 45 So.2d 127 (1950).

The test for confidentiality is intent. Thus, a communication made in public cannot be considered confidential. Intent can be inferred from the particular circumstances.

Subsection (b) is a statement of the rule. The rule is drafted in such a way as to prevent eavesdroppers from testifying about the privileged communication. See the Advisory Committee's Notes to Deleted FRE 503 [which is identical to U.R.E. 502(b)].

The privilege extends to statements made in multiple party cases in which different lawyers represent clients who have common interests. Each client has a privilege as to his own statements. The FRE Advisory Committee's Notes to Deleted Rule 503 state that the rule is inapplicable in situations where there is no common interest to be promoted by a joint consultation or where the parties meet on a purely adversary basis.

Subparagraph (b) provides that the privilege includes lawyer to client communications as well as client to lawyer communications. See Barnes v. State, 460 So.2d 126, 131 (Miss. 1984).

Subsection (c) establishes that the privilege belongs to the client or his personal representative. Barnes v. State, 460 So.2d 126, 131 (Miss. 1984). The lawyer's claim is limited to one made on behalf of the client; he himself has no independent claim. See United States v. Jones, 517 F.2d 666 (5th Cir.1974).

Subsection (d) excludes certain instances from the privilege. Rule 502(d)(1) does not extend the privilege to advice in aid of a future crime or fraud. The provision that the client knew or reasonably should have known of the criminal or fraudulent nature of the act is designed to protect the client who is mistakenly advised that a proposed action is lawful. See McCormick, Evidence, 75. Existing law in Mississippi on this point is unclear. Dicta in two 19th century cases suggest that the privilege did apply to protect statements regarding the client's motives in fraudulent schemes. See Parkhurst v. McGraw, 24 Miss. 134 (1852); Lengsfield and Co. v. Richardson and May, 52 Miss. 443 (1876). Additionally, the federal appellate court in Hyde Construction Co. v. Koehring Co., 455 F.2d 337 (5th Cir. 1972), has determined that the Mississippi courts would allow the privilege when an attorney, acting as the client's alter ego, commits a tort or fraud. It is uncertain, if this is an accurate reflection of the scarce Mississippi law on the point, but clearly under Rule 502(d)(1) the privilege in such a case would not apply.

Rule 502(d)(2) permits no privilege when the adversaries in a case claim the privilege from the same deceased client. The general rule is that the privilege survives death and may be claimed by the deceased's representative. However, this rule makes no sense in some cases; for instance, in will contests when various parties claim to be the representative of the decedent. Only at the end of the litigation will the court have determined who is the deceased's successor, and until it has made that determination, neither party is entitled to invoke the privilege.

Rule 502(d)(3) permits the use of statements made between a lawyer and his client when a controversy later develops between them, such as in a dispute over attorney's fees or legal malpractice.

Billing statements.

While a simple invoice ordinarily is not privileged, itemized legal bills necessarily reveal confidential information and thus fall within the privilege. Hewes v. Langston, 853 So. 2d 1237 (Miss. 2003).

Joint representation exception.

Where Miss. R. Evid. 502 did not broadly construe the common interest privilege, defendants were not entitled to invoke the common interest privilege to withhold discovery documents because they had no pending suit with a common interest party. Further, to invoke the attorney-client privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 502(b), defendants had to provide identities of attorneys and representatives involved in the creation and dissemination of the documents to determine if the communications should be protected. United Investors Life Ins. Co. v. Nationwide Life Ins. Co., 233 F.R.D. 483 (N.D. Miss. 2006).

In the former clients' malpractice action against the attorney who represented them in prior Phen-Fen litigation, the attorney's claim that attorney-client privilege prevented disclosure of information pertaining to the clients' settlement in the Phen-Fen litigation was properly rejected because the joint client exception to Miss. R. Evid. 502 regarding attorney-client privilege applied by virtue of the attorney's joint representation of 31 clients in the Phen-Fen litigation. Williamson v. Edmonds, 880 So. 2d 310 (Miss. 2004).

Medical records.

If mental health records released by a defendant's attorney contain disclosures made to a mental health professional in preparation of the defendant's defense, then the records may be privileged; however, if the released records only show the defendant's prior confinement to a state hospital, the records may not be privileged. Crawford v. State, 716 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1021, 119 S. Ct. 550, 142 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1998).

Waiver.

Defendant insured employer's knowledge or lack of knowledge as to its rights to independent counsel was relevant to proving equitable estoppel on its counterclaim as to plaintiff insurer's duty to defend and indemnify, thus, under Miss. R. Evid. 502(b), the employer waived its attorney-client privilege as to factual issues such as the reasonableness of its reliance on alleged omissions from a reservation of rights letter. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tedford, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9754 (N.D. Miss. Feb. 9, 2009).

Illustrative cases.

In the client's tort action against the attorney and law firm, at oral argument, counsel for the client acknowledged that he did not receive the subject letter and therefore, the supreme court was not presented with evidence that the letter in question, not received by counsel, constituted a privileged communication to which the attorney-client privilege applied, Miss. R. Evid. 502(b). Baker Donelson Bearman Caldwell & Berkowitz, P.C. v. Seay, 42 So. 3d 474 (Miss. 2010).

Admission of a 911 call placed by defendant's divorce attorney after defendant told the attorney that he was going to kill the victim was not erroneous; the crime-fraud exception in Miss. R. Evid. 502(d)(1) applied and therefore the conversation between the defendant and the lawyer was not privileged. Shorter v. State, 33 So. 3d 512 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a suicide wrongful death case against a doctor, the court should have allowed the decedent's divorce attorney to testify about conversations with the doctor that concerned the discharge plan and its implementation because plaintiff's counsel voluntarily elicited testimony regarding the substance of privileged conversations and injected a material issue into the case. The discharge plan and its implementation was a material issue before the trial court. Young v. Guild, — So. 2d —, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 548 (Miss. Oct. 30, 2008), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 7 So. 3d 251, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 193 (Miss. 2009).

Bankruptcy court granted an insurance company's motion for an order compelling an attorney who prepared Chapter 7 debtors' schedules and represented them at the time they converted their case from one under Chapter 13 to one under Chapter 7 to produce a copy of his file pertaining to his representation of the debtors. The debtors were obligated to disclose all assets and liabilities as part of an honest financial reorganization, they had no reasonable expectation that information they gave to their attorney would be kept confidential, and even if the privilege existed, the debtors waived the privilege when one of them claimed that he acted on the advice of his former attorney to explain his decision to convert the case. In re Myers, 382 B.R. 304 (Bankr. S.D. Miss. 2008).

Defendant's former attorney's testimony that he received a fraudulent certificate of title and a bill of sale from defendant for the stolen vehicle did not violate the attorney-client privilege because when defendant provided the documents to his attorney, there was no expectation of confidentiality or privilege concerning the documents or the fact that defendant provided them. The documents defendant provided were to be presented to the State as discovery under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 9.04(c)(2), the trial court, and the jurors in his defense, and therefore no privilege existed under Miss. R. Evid. 502. In addition, because the documents were counterfeit, defendant committed a crime under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-9-125 (Rev. 2006); by involving his attorney, any privilege or confidentiality was destroyed. Hayden v. State, 972 So. 2d 525 (Miss. 2007).

Defendants did not waive their right to invoke the attorney-client privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 502 or the work product doctrine under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(3), due to inadvertent disclosure of documents, because the sum of the factors of fairness weighed against plaintiff, and defendants requested the return of the documents immediately after realizing that there had been inadvertent production. United Investors Life Ins. Co. v. Nationwide Life Ins. Co., 233 F.R.D. 483 (N.D. Miss. 2006).

Finding against the employer, a railroad, in the employee's asbestos-related claims originally brought under the Federal Employers Liability Act was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 502(d) because the railroad could not genuinely argue that the employees obtained counsel's services in order to commit perjury or perpetrate a fraud on the employer with respect to irrelevant information about an asbestos manufacturer's bankruptcy proceedings. Ill. Cent. R.R. v. Acuff, 950 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1280, 127 S. Ct. 1826, 167 L. Ed. 2d 321, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 3060, 75 U.S.L.W. 3497 (2007).

Requiring the attorney to respond to the lawyer's discovery requests would be tantamount to forcing her to reveal both a confidential communication and the identity of her client; the attorney was acting on information provided by a client and her attempts to pursue the motion at the bench were reasonable,were commendable, and belied any claim that she had a hidden agenda; the information or communication the attorney received from her client was privileged and the trial court could not compel the attorney to disclose either the identity of, or communication from, her client. Nester v. Jernigan, 908 So. 2d 145 (Miss. 2005).

In a civil suit against a church administration that arose from allegations of sexual abuse by a priest, the attorney-client privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 502(b) applied to documents that were transmitted between the administration and its attorney, and also to documents summarizing a litigation strategy. Roman Catholic Diocese v. Morrison, 905 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. 2005).

Where plaintiff alleged that (1) defendant lawyer met with plaintiff's husband, who worked for a telephone company, and improperly accessed her phone records as part of a conspiracy to gain access to her private records and those of a trial judge; and (2) the lawyer apparently had a role in the removal of the trial judge in tobacco litigation in which plaintiff was counsel, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in reviewing allegedly privileged documents in camera to determine whether the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege or work-product doctrine was applicable. Hewes v. Langston, 848 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 2003).

Attorney's memorandum to the office file and other attorneys noting a conversation with a third party was protected by the work-product doctrine, and the crime-fraud exception did not apply, as there was no proof of either a crime or fraud. Hewes v. Langston, 848 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 2003).

In a medical negligence case, and an interlocutory appeal by the medical clinic, the personal representative specifically pled reliance on "former" attorney's advice as an element of the defense to the medical clinic's motion for summary judgment, and as a means to toll the statute of limitations. As such, the personal representative used the attorney-client privilege as a sword, and effectively waived the privilege as it related to the testimony the personal representative gave. Jackson Med. Clinic for Women, P.A. v. Moore, 836 So. 2d 767 (Miss. 2003).

There was no violation of the attorney-client privilege where the defendant sought postconviction relief on the ground that his trial attorney was deficient in his representation and the attorney testified as to the alleged deficiencies. Henderson v. State, 769 So. 2d 210 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for felony driving under the influence, there was no violation of the attorney client privilege since no confidential information was surrendered where (1) the defendant testified that he asked for a breathalyzer test in front of several people and was refused, (2) the district attorney, on cross-examination, asked the defendant whether he ever told his lawyer who the people were who heard him ask for a breathalyzer test, and (3) an objection based on the attorney-client privilege was sustained, and the defendant did not answer the question. Phillips v. State, 783 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Conversations between defendant's wife and police investigator did not violate defendant's attorney-client privilege, where there was no indication that defendant's wife informed prosecution of defendant's defense strategy. Dowbak v. State, 666 So. 2d 1377 (Miss. 1996).

Testimony of defendant's former attorney, as to what defendant said to polygraph examiner, did not fall within parameters of this rule, as the examiner was not defendant's lawyer or a representative. Flowers v. State, 601 So. 2d 828 (Miss. 1992).

Rule 503. Physician and psychotherapist-patient privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A "patient" is a person who consults or is examined or interviewed by a physician or psychotherapist.

(2) A "physician" is a person authorized to practice medicine in any state or nation, or reasonably believed by the patient so to be.

(3) A "psychotherapist" is (1) a person authorized to practice medicine in any state or nation, or reasonably believed by the patient so to be, while engaged in the diagnosis or treatment of a mental or emotional condition, including alcohol or drug addiction, or (2) a person licensed or certified as a psychologist under the laws of any state or nation, while similarly engaged.

(4) A communication is "confidential" if not intended to be disclosed to third persons, except persons present to further the interest of the patient in the consultation, examination, or interview, persons reasonably necessary for the transmission of the communication, or persons who are participating in the diagnosis and treatment under the direction of the physician or psychotherapist, including members of the patient's family.

(b) General rule of privilege. A patient has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing (A) knowledge derived by the physician or psychotherapist by virtue of his professional relationship with the patient, or (B) confidential communications made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment of his physical, mental or emotional condition, including alcohol or drug addiction, among himself, his physician or psychotherapist, and persons who are participating in the diagnosis or treatment under the direction of the physician or psychotherapist, including members of the patient's family.

(c) Who may claim the privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the patient, his guardian or conservator, or the personal representative of a deceased patient. The person who was the physician or psychotherapist at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the patient.

(1) Proceedings for hospitalization. There is no privilege under this rule in a proceeding to hospitalize the patient for mental illness, if the physician or psychotherapist in the course of diagnosis or treatment has determined that the patient is in need of hospitalization.

(2) Examination by order of court. If the court orders an examination of the physical, mental or emotional condition of a patient, whether a party or a witness, there is no privilege under this rule with respect to the particular purpose for which the examination is ordered unless the court orders otherwise.

(3) There is no privilege under this rule as to an issue of breach of duty by the physician or psychotherapist to his patient or by the patient to his physician or psychotherapist.

(4) There is no privilege under this rule for communications, including past and current records of whatever nature, regarding a party's physical, mental, or emotional health or drug or alcohol condition relevant to child custody, visitation, adoption, or termination of parental rights. Upon a hearing in chambers, a judge , in the exercise of discretion, may order release of such records relevant to the custody, visitation, adoption, or termination action. The court may order the records sealed.

(e) In an action commenced or claim made against a person for professional services rendered or which should have been rendered, the delivery of written notice of such claim or the filing of such an action shall constitute a waiver of the privilege under this rule.

(f) Any party to an action or proceeding subject to these rules who by his or her pleadings places in issue any aspect of his or her physical, mental or emotional condition thereby and to that extent only waives the privilege otherwise recognized by this rule. This exception does not authorize ex parte contact by the opposing party. (Amended October 13, 1992; amended effective May 27, 2004 to remove the privilege in child custody and like proceedings.].)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective October 13, 1992, Rule 503(f) was amended to state that the rule is inapplicable to contexts other than hearings or discovery proceedings and to delete reference to workers' compensation proceedings. 603-605 So. 2d XXI (West Miss. Cas. 1993).

COMMENT

Subsection (a) defines the terms "patient," "physician," "psychotherapist," and "confidential communication." Existing Mississippi law is codified at M.C.A. § 13-1-21. The existing statute is broader than Rule 503(a) in that it extends the privilege to physicians, osteopaths, dentists, hospitals, nurses, pharmacists, podiatrists, optometrists, and chiropractors. M.C.A. § 73-31-29 extends the privilege to psychologists. Additionally, under existing Mississippi law no allowance has been made for an erroneous belief that the treating individual was a physician. Rules 503(a)(2) and (3) make such an allowance.

Rule 503(a)(4) is essentially a codification of existing state practice. It is compatible with the definition of "confidential communication" under Rule 502 (the attorney-client privilege.)

Rule 503(b) is a statement of the privilege rule. It, too, is compatible with the statement of the attorney-client privilege in Rule 502. The public policy protecting communications made about alcohol and drug addiction arises out of the current contemporary concern about these problems. By protecting these communications it is hoped that rehabilitation efforts will be encouraged.

Subsection (c) is reflective of M.C.A. § 13-1-21. The privilege belongs to the patient, and only the patient can waive it.

Subsection (d) excepts four instances from the privilege. The first exception concerns commitment proceedings. Existing law in Mississippi is structured so that such communications currently are not privileged. See M.C.A. § 41-21-67 et seq.

The second exception under subsection (d) pertains to court-ordered physical or mental examinations. The exception is necessary for the effective utilization of this procedure. It is important to note that the exception is effective only with respect to the particular purpose for which the examination is ordered. No statement made by an accused in the course of an examination into competency to stand trial is admissible on the issue of guilt. See also Rule 4.08, Uniform Criminal Rules of Circuit Court Practice.

Under the third exception there is no privilege when a controversy develops between physician and patient, such as in a dispute over medical fees or medical malpractice.

Under subsection (d)(4), when determining whether records are relevant to a custody, termination, or adoption action, some of the factors courts should consider include whether: (1) the treatment was recent enough to be relevant; (2) substantive independent evidence of serious impairment exists; (3) sufficient evidence is unavailable elsewhere; (4) court ordered evaluations are an inadequate substitute; and (5) given the severity of the alleged disorder, communications made in the course of treatment are likely to be relevant.

Subsection (e) is required by considerations of fairness and policy, and simply provides that the institution of a claim, either by delivery of written notice or by the filing of an action, operates to waive the privilege as to any medical information relevant to the claim.

The primary impact of subsection (f) will be in personal injury actions, although the exception by its terms is not so limited. This subsection, like the remainder of these rules, has no application outside the context of hearing or discovery processes in the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure and other rules of court. See Rules 101 and 1101. By virtue of this exception a party who seeks recovery of damages for a physical, mental or emotional injury waives the privilege for purposes of that action only and to the extent that he or she has put his or her physical, mental or emotional condition in issue by his or her pleadings. With respect to any aspect of the party's physical, mental or emotional condition not put in issue by his or her pleadings, the privilege remains in full force and effect. Rules of Evidence by their definition govern the admissibility of evidence at trial. Subsection (f) is not a procedural rule and cannot be used as such.

Illustrative cases.

Constitutionality.

Witness's assertion of physician and psychotherapist privilege to deny defendant access to the witness's medical records did not deny defendant the constitutional right to confront the witness. Windham v. State, 800 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Defendant waived the doctor-patient privilege where defendant took steps which made the information in defendant's medical records available to the public and the prosecutor, and put defendant's health at issue at trial. Hopkins v. State, 799 So. 2d 874 (Miss. 2001).

Subsection (f) does not deny the a defendant's equal protection, due process, or free speech rights since there are other avenues of discovery besides ex parte contacts; a defendant is still able to conduct discovery according the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure and the Mississippi Rules of Evidence, and any restrictions of a defendant's rights are due to a public policy favoring physician-patient privileges; a patient's right to privacy outweigh a defendant's rights. Tinnon v. Martin, 716 So. 2d 604 (Miss. 1998).

Construction.

This rule does not base psychologist—patient privilege on how a counselor represents himself to patient, but rather focuses on reasonable belief of patient, and thus privilege existed where defendant thought counselor was either a psychologist or psychiatrist, and trial court erroneously admitted counselor's testimony. Kolberg v. State, 704 So. 2d 1307 (Miss. 1997).

Subdivision (f) of this rule did not authorize court to order plaintiff to submit to an independent medical examination, even though she placed her physical condition at issue and thereby waived her physician/patient privilege. Swan v. I.P., Inc., 613 So. 2d 846 (Miss. 1993).

In termination of parental rights proceeding based on mental illness of both natural parents, court declined to create an exception to this rule to allow admission of otherwise privileged medical and psychiatric information concerning parents. Lauderdale County Dep't of Human Servs. ex rel. Barnett v. T.H.G., 614 So. 2d 377 (Miss. 1992).

In a collection agency's suit brought on an open account against a patient, the patient did not have a counterclaim for breach of a physician-patient privilege when the collection agency attached certain information to its complaint because Miss. Code Ann. § 13-1-21 was too narrow to apply, and there was no privilege for this type of information under the broader Miss. R. Evid. 503. Franklin Collection Serv. v. Kyle, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 11 (Miss. Jan. 11, 2007), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 955 So. 2d 284, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 234 (Miss. 2007).

Circuit court violated its protective responsibility by allowing a sexual assault victim premature inspection of allegedly privileged documents produced by the perpetrator's employer because counsel for the victim was in possession of the documents hours before the employer was even aware that they had been released and before it was given a chance to appeal the court's decision. Simply issuing a protective order in conjunction with the order compelling production was not enough to protect the employer's rights. Miss. United Methodist Conf. v. Brown, 911 So. 2d 478 (Miss. 2005).

Without the results of defendant's urine specimen and test, which specimen was taken and which test was performed by a hospital according to its policy, the State would have been unable to prove that defendant was under the influence of cocaine when defendant collided with the victim's automobile; thus, to ensure the proper administration of justice, the medical records regarding the analysis of defendant's urine specimen had to be removed from the protection of the physician-patient privilege under Miss. Code Ann. § 13-1-21(1) and Miss. R. Evid. 503(b) and the trial court did not err in admitting this evidence. Jones v. State, 881 So. 2d 209 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Medical evidence pertaining to a victim may be secured and admissible in limited situations where the medical evidence was relevant, material and exculpatory; although the medical records were improperly submitted, any error was harmless because the jury convicted defendant and did not give credence to the suicide defense. Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

Defendant's conviction for vehicular homicide was affirmed where the appellate court found that a hospital employee's analysis of his urine that showed defendant had cocaine in his system at the time of the fatal accident was properly admitted; to ensure the proper administration of justice, the analysis of defendant's urine specimen was removed from the protection of the physician-patient privilege. Jones v. State, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. App. LEXIS 185 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 9, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 881 So. 2d 209, 2002 Miss. App. LEXIS 869 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Review.

On appeal, defendant may raise issue of trial court's denial of a patient's doctor-patient privilege, provided patient properly raised privilege in court below and denial resulted in prejudice to defendant; otherwise, privilege has no effect on appeal, as patient cannot assert as error the denial of his privilege since he is not a party to the suit. Cotton v. State, 675 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1996).

Use by criminal defendant.

Nothing in Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003), suggests that an in camera review is required in all situations that a criminal defendant requests the medical records of someone else. The supreme court merely suggested that the circuit court consider an in camera inspection when the court is considering admitting evidence normally excluded by the doctor-patient privilege. Jackson v. State, 924 So. 2d 531 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 175 (Miss. 2006).

Circuit courts must control a criminal defendant's access to information subject to the doctor-patient privilege, which should normally remain inviolate: the court should conduct an in camera review of the medical records to determine if the evidence is material, relevant, and exculpatory. If the court finds that the records are admissible, they should be redacted as much as possible to show only the evidence which is relevant and exculpatory. Cox v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. Mar. 13, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 849 So. 2d 1257, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 337 (Miss. 2003).

Waiver.

Jail psychologist did not violate the psychotherapist-patient privilege by communicating defendant's threats to harm two judges or by testifying at defendant's trial on two counts of intimidating a judge because Miss. R. Evid. 503 protected only confidential communications that were not intended to be disclosed to third parties and when the psychologist told defendant that he had a duty to warn of the threats made, defendant said that he did not care and affirmed his intentions to harm the judges. Weeks later, defendant asked the psychologist whether the two judges had been made aware of his threats, and when the psychologist indicated that he had informed the judges of the threats, defendant approved; by intending that his communications be disclosed to third parties, defendant waived any and all rights under the psychotherapist-patient privilege. Hearn v. State, 3 So. 3d 722 (Miss. 2008).

Where a church administration referred priests and victims to counseling following sexual abuse allegations against the priests, and the priests and victims signed waivers allowing the church administration access to reports from treating doctors and therapists, those waivers were limited and therefore the documents were not discoverable under Miss. R. Evid. 503(4) because the limited waiver of privilege did not serve to waive privilege generally. However, the Priest-penitent privilege of Miss. R. Evid. 505 did not apply to documents not directed to anyone in their professional character as spiritual adviser. Roman Catholic Diocese v. Morrison, 905 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. 2005).

In the former clients' malpractice action against the attorney that represented them in prior Phen-Fen litigation, the attorney's claim that physician-patient privilege prevented disclosure of medical information pertaining to the clients' settlement in the Phen-Fen litigation was properly rejected because the information was relevant in determining whether the proceeds of the aggregate settlement were improperly or fraudulently distributed among the various plaintiffs and under Miss. R. Evid. 503(f) the privilege was deemed waived by former litigants who had placed their physical, mental, or emotional condition in issue. Williamson v. Edmonds, 880 So. 2d 310 (Miss. 2004).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in requiring defendant to turn over all of her medical records to a psychiatrist as defendant specifically requested that her mental health be evaluated by the psychiatrist, necessitating that he review all of defendant's relevant medical records; thus, she waived her physician-patient privilege. Byrom v. State, 863 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 71, 160 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2004).

In a child custody proceeding, the chancellor did not err in refusing to review a joint summary of court-ordered psychological evaluations of the parties and their son and in refusing to permit access by the husband to the summary where the wife refused to waive her medical privilege. Belding v. Belding, 736 So. 2d 425 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

State was entitled to cross-examine forensic psychologist on basis of his opinions, including any medical records he considered in forming those opinions, and no medical privilege existed since defendant placed his mental and emotional condition in issue. Holland v. State, 705 So. 2d 307 (Miss. 1997).

If suit is filed on either medical malpractice grounds or other grounds placing plaintiff's condition in issue, plaintiff's medical privilege regarding any relevant medical information from whatever source is automatically waived for purposes of and only to extent to which plaintiff's condition is put in issue; determination of relevancy of medical information which cannot be agreed upon by opposing counsel is to be resolved by a judicial relevancy hearing. Scott ex rel. Scott v. Flynt, 704 So. 2d 998 (Miss. 1996).

Evidence obtained by opposing party from ex parte contacts with plaintiff's medical providers, without prior patient consent, is inadmissible when subsequently used during a legal proceeding. Scott ex rel. Scott v. Flynt, 704 So. 2d 998 (Miss. 1996).

Circuit courts must control a criminal defendant's access to information subject to the doctor-patient privilege, which should normally remain inviolate: the court should conduct an in camera review of the medical records to determine if the evidence is material, relevant, and exculpatory. If the court finds that the records are admissible, they should be redacted as much as possible to show only the evidence which is relevant and exculpatory. Cox v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. Mar. 13, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 849 So. 2d 1257, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 337 (Miss. 2003).

Illustrative cases.

Where an employer noticed that a return to work date on a medical leave form appeared to have been altered and asked the employee's health care provider to provide another copy of the form, which revealed the employee's alteration, the health care provider did not violate the physician-patient privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 503, which provided that a communication was confidential if not intended to be disclosed to a third person, because the employee always intended that the return to work date would be communicated to her employer. Thornton v. Statcare, PLLC, 988 So. 2d 387 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the city and police officer in the jogger's action after he was struck by the police officer while jogging was appropriate because the jogger asserted that there was a possibility that the officer was impaired at the time of the accident at issue, but there was no evidence supporting such an assertion. The jogger never alleged in his complaint that the officer was impaired at the time of the accident and the officer stated that he did not recall being administered a blood alcohol or drug test; thus, in attempting to gain access to the officer's medical records, the jogger was engaging in nothing more than a fishing expedition. Morton v. City of Shelby, 984 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 274 (Miss. 2008).

Information attached to a collection agency's open account complaint describing a patient's medical treatment and the amounts charged therefor were not covered by the physician-patient privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 503. Franklin Collection Serv. v. Kyle, 955 So. 2d 284 (Miss. 2007).

While the trial court allowed the defendant doctor's business associate to act as an expert witness, there was no violation of Miss. R. Evid. 503 because the expert witness did not testify as to any confidential communications pertaining to diagnosis or treatment and knowledge which the physician had by virtue of his/her professional relationship with the patient. Poole v. Avara, 908 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2005).

In a divorce case, a chancery court did not err by excluding documents regarding the couple's joint counseling sessions where a former husband objected to the introduction of such evidence. Brabham v. Brabham, 950 So. 2d 1098 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a murder prosecution, the victim's medical and pharmacological records were privileged and should not have been admitted, as the doctor-patient privilege applied in criminal proceedings, the records were confidential even though a third party was present during an examination (as the doctor relied on this party in developing the patient's medical history), and the privilege survived the patient's death. Cox v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. Mar. 13, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 849 So. 2d 1257, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 337 (Miss. 2003).

Where newborn was accidently taken by hospital staff to the wrong mother to be breast fed, the unidentified patient responsible for breast feeding newborn is a fact witness to the alleged negligence of the hospital; therefore, her identity must be revealed and her medical records may be inspected by the judge in camera to determine whether the health of the newborn may be at risk. Baptist Mem. Hosp.-Union County v. Johnson, 754 So. 2d 1165 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 504. Husband-wife privilege.

(a) Definition. A communication is confidential if it is made privately by any person to that person's spouse and is not intended for disclosure to any other person.

(b) General rule of privilege. In any proceeding, civil or criminal, a person has a privilege to prevent that person's spouse, or former spouse, from testifying as to any confidential communication between that person and that person's spouse.

(c) Who may claim the privilege. The privilege may be claimed by either spouse in that spouse's right or on behalf of the other.

(d) Exceptions. There is no privilege under this rule in civil actions between the spouses or in a proceeding in which one spouse is charged with a crime against (1) the person of any minor child or (2) the person or property of (i) the other spouse, (ii) a person residing in the household of either spouse, or (iii) a third person committed in the course of committing a crime against any of the persons described in (d)(1), or (2) of this rule.

[Rule 504(d) amended in Fisher v. State, 690 So. 2d 268, 272 (Miss. 1996) to "apply prospectively upon publication in West's Southern Reporter" (published in Southern Reporter 2d advance sheet issue of May 1, 1997; amended May 2, 2002, amended effective April 3, 2003.]

COMMENT

There are two areas of law which govern if and when one spouse may testify against the other, spousal competency and marital privilege. M.C.A. § 13-1-5 governs matters of spousal competency. On the other hand, marital privilege protects certain communications made during the marriage. The privilege extends only to communications which were intended to be confidential. Thus, the presence of another person, even a family member, is deemed to mean that the communication was not intended to be confidential. Likewise, if the intent was that the communication would be confidential, a third party may not testify regarding the communication, even if that third party learned it from one of the spouses directly. Rule 504(a) is in accord with existing Mississippi practice.

Rule 504 (b) states the general rule. One spouse can prevent the other from testifying regarding the confidential communication in either a civil or criminal proceeding.

Rule 504(c) was amended in 2002 to make the spousal privilege rule consistent with Rule 601(a)(1) which makes spouses competent witnesses against each other in civil actions between them. The policy of preserving marital harmony which supports both rules is not applicable in cases in which they are adversary parties.

Construction.

Mississippi Rule of Evidence 601(a)(2) abolishes spousal incompetence to testify in certain circumstances; non-offender spouse may be called to testify, but other spouse may still invoke privilege regarding confidential communications that do not fall into an exception set out in Rule 504(d). Fisher v. State, 690 So. 2d 268 (Miss. 1996).

This rule did not require suppression of physical evidence obtained by officers as a result of their conversations with defendant's wife; location of items did not fall within any protected class of communication, and there was knowledge by persons other than defendant and his wife of their whereabouts. Ladner v. State, 584 So. 2d 743 (Miss. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1015, 112 S. Ct. 663, 116 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1991).

Exception.

In defendant's trial for exploitation of children, defendant's wife was not incompetent to testify against defendant because the privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a)(2) and Miss. R. Evid. 504(d) did not apply, as defendant was being prosecuted for a criminal act against a child. Hood v. State, 17 So. 3d 548 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of exploitation of children, defendant's wife was not incompetent to testify against her husband under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a)(2) because spousal incompetency did not apply where the offender spouse was charged with a crime against children. Likewise, the confidential communication privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 504(d) did not apply because defendant was charged with a crime committed against a child and because defendant made his statement in the presence of a third party, his sister-in-law. Hood v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 364 (Miss. July 30, 2009).

In a murder trial, the court did not err in allowing defendant's wife to testify that she saw defendant shoot her ex-boyfriend, set his house on fire, and throw his pistol into the river. The spousal privilege only protects communication, not conduct. Roland v. State, 882 So. 2d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a murder trial, the court did not err in allowing the admission of a taped telephone conversation between defendant and his then wife. A warning was posted near the telephone in the county jail alerting callers that calls could be recorded. Roland v. State, 882 So. 2d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Inmate's claims that his wife was improperly allowed to testify against him in his murder prosecution was without merit since Miss. R. Evid. 504(d)(1) contained an exception to the privilege where one spouse was charged with a crime against a minor child. Stevens v. State, 867 So. 2d 219 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 222, 160 L. Ed. 2d 96 (2004).

Miss. R. Evid. 504 does not limit the exception to the marital privilege to the instance of a crime committed against a minor child of the testifying spouse or that spouse's household; Miss. R. Evid. 504(d)(1) provides an exception when one spouse is charged with a crime against any minor child. Stevens v. State, 806 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct 2441, 179 L.Ed. 2d 1206, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 2635 (U.S. 2011).

Handwriting analysis.

A handwriting expert's use of letters written by the defendant to his wife to determine whether another letter was written by the defendant did not violate the rule. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Waiver.

The husband-wife privilege is waivable where both spouses consent to waive it, and upon such waiver the privilege is no longer afforded. Martin v. State, 773 So. 2d 415 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Illustrative cases.

Trial court had not violated petitioner state death row inmate's Fifth Amendment rights by allowing the testimony of his wife against him because the marital privilege was merely a testimonial privilege based on Miss. Evid. R. 504 and did not rise to the level of the constitutionally guaranteed right against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment. Stevens v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69564 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 15, 2008), affirmed by 618 F.3d 489, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 18696 (5th Cir. Miss. 2010).

Defendant's ex-wife did not testify as to communication between defendant and herself, let alone a confidential communication, she testified to events surrounding her marriage and the eventual end of her marriage to defendant, and there was no testimony from her that could be considered a confidential communication that the trial judge should have excluded; accordingly, Miss. R. Evid. 504(b) did not operate to preclude the ex-wife from testifying against defendant. Butt v. State, 986 So. 2d 981 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence, the defendant's wife did not testify to confidential communications where she testified that she had called the police to report a domestic disturbance, told the responding officer that she had been choked and kicked by the defendant when she refused to hand over the keys to the car when the defendant had been drinking all day, and that she had tried to prevent him from driving in the condition he was in; even though the wife's conversation with the officer may have included and alluded to communications exchanged between her and the defendant that had led to the domestic disturbance call, such communications were not privileged because they were part and parcel of the physical abuse charges leveled against the defendant by his wife. Martin v. State, 773 So. 2d 415 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Statement made by rape defendant to wife was not protected by husband-wife privilege, since it was made in front of a third person and was thus not a confidential communication; wife's statement that husband later told her the truth, made privately to wife with no indication of a third party also hearing it, was a confidential statement from defendant to his wife that, when admitted, constituted prejudicial error. Fisher v. State, 690 So. 2d 268 (Miss. 1996).

Spousal-immunity privilege could not be expanded to prevent a spouse from helping law enforcement officers investigate or solve crimes in which their spouse might be involved, and neither defendant's wife nor police investigator testified during defendant's second trial and so the could not have informed jury of any confidential conversations between defendant and his wife. Dowbak v. State, 666 So. 2d 1377 (Miss. 1996).

Spousal privilege did not apply, where statements of defendant's wife were made in presence of sheriff and deputy sheriff and not under circumstances suggesting confidentiality. Shell v. State, 554 So. 2d 887 (Miss. 1989).

Rule 505. Priest-penitent privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A "clergyman" is a minister, priest, rabbi or other similar functionary of a church, religious organization, or religious denomination.

(2) A communication is "confidential" if made privately and not intended for further disclosure except in furtherance of the purpose of the communication.

(b) General rule of privilege. A person has a privilege to refuse to disclose and prevent another from disclosing a confidential communication by the person to a clergyman in his professional character as spiritual adviser.

(c) Who may claim the privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the person, by his guardian or conservator, or by his personal representative if he is deceased. The clergyman shall claim the privilege on behalf of the person unless the privilege is waived.

(d) Other. A clergyman's secretary, stenographer, or clerk shall not be examined without the consent of the clergyman concerning any fact, the knowledge of which was acquired in such capacity.

COMMENT

Rule 505 is a restatement of M.C.A. § 13-1-22. The definition of a "clergyman" is broad but workable. It is fair to say that the term refers to clergy who are regularly engaged in activities of established denominations. It is not broad enough to include all sorts of "self-denominated ministers."

Rule 505, like M.C.A. § 13-1-22, cloaks the clergyman's secretary, stenographer, or clerk with the privilege should they, in their professional capacities, learn of the communication. The clergyman must consent before his employee may testify about the communication, but it would seem that his consent is meaningless if the penitent has not already waived the privilege.

In general.

The priest-penitent privilege did not apply to a conversation between the defendant while he was in jail and a close friend of the victim and deacon from a local church who visited the inmates at the county jail, as was his usual custom, to "spread the gospel" to those incarcerated. Banks v. State, 782 So. 2d 1237 (Miss. 2001).

A church member who went to the jail in which the defendant was being held, as did other church members, was not a clergyman within the meaning of the rule and, therefore, could testify regarding a conversation he had with the defendant. Banks v. State, 725 So. 2d 711 (Miss. 1998).

Where a church administration referred priests and victims to counseling following sexual abuse allegations against the priests, and the priests and victims signed waivers allowing the church administration access to reports from treating doctors and therapists, those waivers were limited and therefore the documents were not discoverable under Miss. R. Evid. 503(4) because the limited waiver of privilege did not serve to waive privilege generally. However, the Priest-penitent privilege of Miss. R. Evid. 505 did not apply to documents not directed to anyone in their professional character as spiritual adviser. Roman Catholic Diocese v. Morrison, 905 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. 2005).

Construction.

Individual who served as deacon in his church and who visited jail regularly to discuss spiritual issues with inmates was not a clergyman within plain meaning of this rule. Banks v. State, 725 So. 2d 711 (Miss. 1998).

Harmless error.

Defendant's conviction for murder was appropriate because any error in allowing a priest to claim the privilege of priest-penitent under Miss. R. Evid. 505(b) was harmless. Nothing in the proffer of the priest's testimony indicated that the victim mentioned suicidal thoughts during her encounter with the priest and the evidence did not end to prove that it was more likely that the victim committed suicide more than six months later. Williams v. State, 53 So. 3d 761 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 53 So. 3d 734, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 590 (Miss. 2010).

Production of documents.

Circuit court violated its protective responsibility by allowing a sexual assault victim premature inspection of allegedly privileged documents produced by the perpetrator's employer because counsel for the victim was in possession of the documents hours before the employer was even aware that they had been released and before it was given a chance to appeal the court's decision. Simply issuing a protective order in conjunction with the order compelling production was not enough to protect the employer's rights. Miss. United Methodist Conf. v. Brown, 911 So. 2d 478 (Miss. 2005).

ARTICLE VI. WITNESSES

Rule 601. General rule of competency.

Every person is competent to be a witness except as restricted by the following:

(a) In all instances where one spouse is a party litigant the other spouse shall not be competent as a witness without the consent of both, except as provided in Rule 601(a)(1) or Rule 601(a)(2):

(1) Husbands and wives may be introduced by each other in all cases, civil or criminal, and shall be competent witnesses in their own behalf, as against each other, in all controversies between them;

(2) Either spouse is a competent witness and may be compelled to testify against the other in any criminal prosecution of either husband or wife for a criminal act against any child, for contributing to the neglect or delinquency of a child, or desertion or nonsupport of children under the age of sixteen (16) years, or abandonment of children.

(b) A person appointed by a court as required by state law to make an appraisal in an eminent domain proceeding for the immediate possession of land shall not be eligible to testify in the trial of such case, and the report of such court appointed appraiser shall not be admissible in evidence during such trial. (Amended November 16, 1988, effective retroactive to January 1, 1986; amended January 31, 1990; amended effective July 1, 1998.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 31, 1990, Rule 601 was amended to reflect the decision in Hudspeth v. State Highway Comm'n of Miss., 534 So. 2d 210 (Miss. 1988), amending Rule 601, November 16, 1988, effective retroactive to January 1, 1986. 553-556 So. 2d XXVII (West Miss. Cas. 1990). The rule was amended by the decision in Fuselier v. State, 702 So. 2d 388, decided Oct. 1997.

[Amended effective July 1, 1998.]

This rule sets out the special provisions which render certain persons incompetent to testify. As originally written Rule 601 excepted two classes from competency, spouses pursuant to M.C.A. § 13-1-5 and persons convicted of perjury or subornation of perjury pursuant to M.C.A. § 13-1-11. Rule 601 was subsequently amended in 1990 to delete statutory references. Subsection (a) retains the substance of superseded M.C.A. § 13-1-5. Former Subsection (b) retained the substance of superceded M.C.A. § 13-1-11 as it pertained to persons convicted of perjury or subornation of perjury. In Fuselier v. State, 702 So. 2d 388, decided Oct. 23, 1997 the Mississippi Supreme Court amended the rule by abandoning the perjurer's incompetency rule, striking that subsection from the rule. A witness previously convicted of perjury or subornation of perjury is now competent as a witness and the fact of such a prior conviction will be available for impeachment of the witness under Rule 609(a)(2). Former subsection (c), now subsection (b) reflects the substance of a prior amendment to Rule 601 made by the Mississippi Supreme Court in Hudspeth v. State Highway Commission of Mississippi, 534 So.2d 210 (Miss. 1988). The Hudspeth amendment excepted from competency court appointed experts in eminent domain proceedings. The Hudspeth amendment, which was made retroactive to January 1, 1986, specifically referred to the provisions of then existing M.C.A. § 11-27-89. Subsection (b) reflects the substance of the Hudspeth amendment but deletes any statutory reference.

Trial court conducted a hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine whether the eight-year-old fondling victim was competent to testify as a witness and the victim testified that she knew the difference between a lie and the truth and that telling a lie was wrong. She also stated that she knew why she was in court, knew that she would be questioned by attorneys, remembered most of what had occurred, and would be able to say she did not remember if asked a question about a matter in which she had no recollection; as a result, the trial judge properly found that the victim was a competent witness. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 904 So. 2d 184 (Miss. 2005).

Although it was arguable that the statute making treating family therapists' testimony inadmissible in family proceedings was repealed by Miss. R. Evid. 1103 because it conflicted with Miss. R. Evid. 601, any error was harmless because the excluded evidence in question was cumulative of other evidence provided by expert witnesses. Mabus v. Mabus, 890 So. 2d 806 (Miss. — 2003).

The 1997 amendment to the rule, which, inter alia, expunged the subsection that precluded convicted perjurers from testifying in future actions, did not have retroactive effect and, instead, became effective on October 23, 1997. Beacham-Taylor v. Lewis, 755 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Mississippi Rule of Evidence 601(a)(2) abolishes spousal incompetence to testify in certain circumstances; non-offender spouse may be called to testify, but other spouse may still invoke privilege regarding confidential communications that do not fall into an exception set out in Rule 504(d). Fisher v. State, 690 So. 2d 268 (Miss. 1996).

Child witnesses.

After studying the child's testimony and the record, it was determined he was a competent witness; he exhibited the ability to understand and answer questions, he remembered events, and his testimony was consistent with the statements he had made previously to a state worker and a pediatrician. Dubose v. State, 22 So. 3d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Because a minor victim showed her understanding of the importance of telling the truth and her understanding of the seriousness of the charges pending against defendant, notwithstanding the victim's diminished I.Q., there was no indication that she was not competent to testify pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 601. Edmond v. State, 35 So. 3d 536 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 265 (Miss. 2010).

During defendant's trial for sexual battery of a child, the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the five-year-old victim and her seven-year-old brother to testify; both children proved that they were intelligent, had the ability to understand and answer questions, and understood the importance of truthfulness. Valmain v. State, 5 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for capital rape in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(1)(b) was proper because defendant argued that the trial court should have conducted a competency hearing to determine the child victim's ability to testify; however, no such claim was ever presented to the trial court for consideration. Accordingly, defendant waived any issue that there might have been concerning the competency of the victim in that regard and the appellate court proceeded with its review of the sufficiency of the evidence under the assumption that the victim's testimony was credible. Gordon v. State, 977 So. 2d 420 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's convictions for sexual battery and fondling of a child were appropriate because a review of the record revealed nothing indicating that the teenaged victim was not a competent witness; she exhibited normal intelligence, had the ability to understand and answer questions asked of her, and she was able to remember explicit details about the sexual abuse that she had suffered. Tillman v. State, 947 So. 2d 993 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 81 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for statutory rape in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(1)(b) was proper where the circuit court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of the victim into evidence because it appeared from the competency hearing that the victim knew the difference in truth and imagination. Further, the record showed that the State established all of the elements of the statutory rape charge. Withers v. State, 907 So. 2d 342 (Miss. 2005).

In defendant's appeal of sexual battery conviction, there was no merit to defendant's contention that defendant was denied a fair trial because the child victim was allowed to take the stand without first having been qualified as a competent witness; prior to trial, the defense chose not to challenge the child's competency to testify. In any event, the trial judge ruled that the child was not competent to testify and instructed the jury to disregard the testimony. Renfrow v. State, 882 So. 2d 800 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In order to prevail in its effort to exclude the testimony of a child witness, the party opposing the testimony must show that at the time the court made its initial decision, it was apparent that the witness did not meet the criteria for testifying, not that the subsequent testimony was flawed or that the initial determination was possibly erroneous. Williams v. State, 859 So. 2d 1046 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding competent to testify an eight-year-old child who was in special education classes at the time of an alleged sexual battery; although there were inconsistencies in the child's testimony, it was not apparent at the time the trial court made its initial decision that the witness did not meet the criteria for testifying. Williams v. State, 859 So. 2d 1046 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where a father did not show that a trial court abused its discretion in allowing a three-year-old child to testify of sexual abuse by the father and any error in permitting the child to testify was cured by the doctor's and social worker's testimonies, the adjudication of abuse was affirmed. In the Interest of E. A. J., 858 So. 2d 205 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for child fondling, the victim was properly permitted to testify, notwithstanding that she was mentally retarded, where her testimony was substantially consistent, especially regarding the circumstances surrounding the alleged incident, and she had the ability to understand and answer questions and could remember events. Riley v. State, 797 So. 2d 285 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A court is not explicitly required to conduct a separate voir dire to make a competency determination with regard to a child witness. Davis v. State, 760 So. 2d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

A 14 year old child was competent to testify about events that occurred when he was nine years old or younger because he was able to answer preliminary questions, testified that he understood what it means to tell the truth, and was a very credible witness. Davis v. State, 760 So. 2d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for sexual battery upon a four year old child, the child/victim was properly determined to be a competent witness where both counsel and the trial judge questioned the child and the child testified that she knew the difference between the truth and a lie and that she had not been told what to say. Mullins v. State, 757 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder and aggravated assault arising from the stabbing death of one victim and stabbing of her four year old child, the child was properly found competent to testify where the trial court examined the child outside the presence of the jury and listened to his proposed testimony as well as his responses to questions about his recall abilities and his understanding of the importance of telling the truth and determined that the child's testimony was at least trustworthy enough to permit the jury to hear it, thereby permitting the jury to make its own determination as to what weight and worth to afford the child's evidence. Barnett v. State, 757 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for kidnapping, the victim, who was seven years old at the time of the crime, was properly found competent as a witness following questioning by the court during which he said that he would testify as to what happened and would not tell a lie. Lacking v. State, 775 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The seven year old victim was properly found to be competent to testify in a prosecution for kidnapping and of touching a child for lustful purposes where the court interrogated the victim and the victim stated that he would be truthful. Lacking v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 610 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 9, 1999), subst. op., 775 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Children were not rendered incompetent to testify because of inconsistencies between their early accusations against a third party and their subsequent retractions of these allegations. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Fact that six-year-old witness did not know her birthday and did not know significance of the date of her injury did not render her incompetent to testify, and trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that she was a competent witness. Bowen v. State, 607 So. 2d 1159 (Miss. 1992).

Although parents in divorce proceeding should if at all possible refrain from calling any children of marriage, of tender years at least, as witnesses, there can be no per se prohibition against a child witness testifying in a divorce case between his parents. Jethrow v. Jethrow, 571 So. 2d 270 (Miss. 1990).

Disinterested witness.

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and arson were proper where the testimony of a witness did not require corroboration because the only requirements for the admissibility of a disinterested witness's testimony was that the witness be competent and speak from personal knowledge, and that the testimony be relevant. Payton v. State, 897 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 2003).

Husband and wife.

Because defendant's wife's out-of-court statements during a 911 call were made to law enforcement during the course of an ongoing emergency, her statements could not have been characterized as resembling in-court testimony, and thus were not inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a). Shorter v. State, 33 So. 3d 512 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's trial for exploitation of children, defendant's wife was not incompetent to testify against defendant because the privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a)(2) and Miss. R. Evid. 504(d) did not apply, as defendant was being prosecuted for a criminal act against a child. Hood v. State, 17 So. 3d 548 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of exploitation of children, defendant's wife was not incompetent to testify against her husband under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a)(2) because spousal incompetency did not apply where the offender spouse was charged with a crime against children. Likewise, the confidential communication privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 504(d) did not apply because defendant was charged with a crime committed against a child and because defendant made his statement in the presence of a third party, his sister-in-law. Hood v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 364 (Miss. July 30, 2009).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence, the defendant's wife was competent to testify for the state where the defendant's attorney was specifically asked if he was waiving the claims of both the spousal privilege and competency and his answer was "right, we are not going to object." Martin v. State, 773 So. 2d 415 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Perjury.

A person convicted of perjury is competent to testify, and is subject to cross-examination regarding his or her perjury conviction, at which point jury should be allowed to make final determination of credibility and weight of witness's testimony. Fuselier v. State, 702 So. 2d 388 (Miss. 1997).

Personal knowledge.

Grant of summary judgment in favor of two lawyers in the clients' action claiming the lawyers had breached their fiduciary duty was improper because the trial court erred in applying a negligence standard to the clients' claims of breach of fiduciary duty. An attorney was not qualified as an expert witness, but his testimony was based on personal knowledge; thus, his proffered testimony was a matter of fact rather than opinion, and the trial court erred in excluding it. Crist v. Loyacono, 65 So. 3d 837 (Miss. 2011).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err excluding two of the widow's experts from testifying on the issue of the taillight visibility and in allowing two of the trucking company's lay witnesses to render opinions on taillight visibility; dirt on the taillights was not of a nature that required an expert opinion because the jury had enough knowledge to discern whether the photographs depicted dirt on the taillights. Further, neither of the widow's experts were at the scene of the accident; the trucking company's lay witnesses were at the scene moments after the collision; and the lay witnesses testified about their personal knowledge and observations. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Personal observation of witness.

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in not excluding the testimony of the decedent's friend concerning the decedent's alleged making, using, or selling methamphetamine before the accident since the testimony was relevant and concerned the type of activity that the decedent was involved in prior to the accident and what impact that activity might have had on the decedent's alertness at the time of the accident. The testimony was not hearsay because it was the personal observation and knowledge of the witness. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Rule 602. Lack of personal knowledge.

A witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that he has personal knowledge of the matter. Evidence to prove personal knowledge may, but need not, consist of the testimony of the witness himself. This rule is subject to the provisions of Rule 703, relating to opinion testimony by expert witnesses.

COMMENT

Rule 602 states existing practice. A person must have personal knowledge of the matter as opposed to a mere opinion, in order to testify. See Dennis v. Prisock, 221 So.2d 706 (Miss. 1969); Perkins v. State, 290 So.2d 697 (Miss. 1974). Normally the witness himself will supply the necessary foundation showing that he has personal knowledge. Rule 602 does not prevent, however, the witness from testifying about hearsay statements. He need only show that he has personal knowledge regarding the making of the statements. He cannot testify about the subject matter contained in the hearsay statement. When he is testifying with regard to hearsay statements, Rules 801 and 805 are applicable. See FRE 602, Advisory Committee's Notes.

Disinterested witness.
Illustrative cases.

Disinterested witness.

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and arson were proper where the testimony of a witness did not require corroboration because the only requirements for the admissibility of a disinterested witness's testimony was that the witness be competent and speak from personal knowledge, and that the testimony be relevant. Payton v. State, 897 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 2003).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of two lawyers in the clients' action claiming the lawyers had breached their fiduciary duty was improper because the trial court erred in applying a negligence standard to the clients' claims of breach of fiduciary duty. An attorney was not qualified as an expert witness, but his testimony was based on personal knowledge; thus, his proffered testimony was a matter of fact rather than opinion, and the trial court erred in excluding it. Crist v. Loyacono, 65 So. 3d 837 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for DUI maiming was proper because he consented to a blood sample, he never objected to the introduction of the blood-analysis evidence during the course of the testimony by a witness with the Mississippi Crime Laboratory, defendant did not object to the admission of testimony by a doctor regarding the amount of other substances found in the blood sample and the impairing effects of the other substances, defendant's objection made at trial did not state with requisite specificity the basis for the objection to the admission of the testimony, and a deputy was permitted to testify as to what he personally observed concerning defendant's written consent to the blood test. Irby v. State, — So. 3d —, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 423 (Miss. Aug. 12, 2010), opinion withdrawn by 2010 Miss. LEXIS 650 (Miss. Dec. 9, 2010), substituted opinion at 49 So. 3d 94, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 638 (Miss. 2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in not excluding the testimony of the decedent's friend concerning the decedent's alleged making, using, or selling methamphetamine before the accident since the testimony regarding methamphetamine was relevant and concerned the type of activity that the decedent was involved in prior to the accident and what impact that activity might have had on the decedent's alertness at the time of the accident. The testimony was not hearsay because it was the personal observation and knowledge of the witness. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err excluding two of the widow's experts from testifying on the issue of the taillight visibility and in allowing two of the trucking company's lay witnesses to render opinions on taillight visibility; dirt on the taillights was not of a nature that required an expert opinion because the jury had enough knowledge to discern whether the photographs depicted dirt on the taillights. Further, neither of the widow's experts were at the scene of the accident; the trucking company's lay witnesses were at the scene moments after the collision; and the lay witnesses testified about their personal knowledge and observations. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

In an armed robbery case, a witness who was present outside of a house where the crime took place was allowed to testify based on his personal knowledge under Miss. R. Evid. 602, even though he was unable to identify defendant; the description given by the witness of a gunman's age, height, and hat matched the description given by the victim. Therefore, a trial judge did not abuse his discretion by denying a motion in limine and allowing the witness to testify about what he saw and did before, during, and after the robbery. Eley v. State, 19 So. 3d 124 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 491 (Miss. 2009).

In a DUI homicide case under Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(1)(c) and (5), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer's testimony that defendant was driving the car that hit the victim because the officer concluded that defendant was driving that car based on defendant's presence as the sole non-emergency personnel present at the scene, the presence of emergency responders, and common sense. Travis v. State, 972 So. 2d 674 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 1 (Miss. 2008).

Directed verdict was properly denied in a case involving the sale of crack cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139 because it was within the province of the jury to assess the credibility of a coded confidential informant and an undercover agent making the drug buy; both identified defendant from a photo lineup after the buy and testified as to their personal knowledge. Johnson v. State, 950 So. 2d 178 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and conspiracy to murder the victim were proper under Miss. R. Evid. 602 because a sergeant's testimony met the "personal knowledge" requirement of Rule 602; the sergeant testified to knowledge that he received through personal interviews with the parties involved in the shooting incident and others in community, along with knowledge gained through his personal observations during his years in law enforcement. Robinson v. State, 940 So. 2d 235 (Miss. 2006).

It was not error for a trial court to allow a detective to testify that defendant signed his advice of rights form "freely and voluntarily." The detective was the person who gave defendant his rights and took his statement and he was testifying from his own observation and first-hand knowledge; he would have known if anyone, including himself, had threatened or tried to coerce defendant or had made any promises of leniency or other reward in exchange for defendant's statement. Magee v. State, 912 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Investigative officer testified to what she had been told happened and this not only was hearsay, but it also showed that her testimony was not based on personal knowledge; under Miss. R. Evid. 602, the only witness who can testify to facts not within personal knowledge is an expert witness, and since the investigative officer was not qualified as an expert witness, it was error to allow her to testify to events of which she had no personal knowledge. Estate of Carter v. Phillips & Phillips Constr. Co., 860 So. 2d 332 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a negligence suit against the Mississippi Department of Transportation (MDOT), the trial court properly allowed a witness who lived near the scene of the plaintiff's accident to testify as to other accidents on the highway, since he had personal knowledge of them, having either witnessed them or heard about them, and the testimony was admissible to show the existence of a defective or dangerous condition and MDOT's knowledge thereof. Miss. DOT v. Cargile, 847 So. 2d 258 (Miss. 2003).

Police officer's testimony regarding the type of shotgun shells he observed at the scene of a shooting did not constitute expert testimony; the officer was permitted to testify because the matter was within his personal knowledge, and the testimony was helpful to the trier of fact. Lane v. State, 841 So. 2d 1163 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Accident victim was clearly incompetent to testify regarding the victim's own medical prognosis and treatment. Haggerty v. Foster, 838 So. 2d 948 (Miss. 2002).

In a prosecution for obtaining a controlled substance by fraud, it was error to allow a pharmacist to testify that a prescription from a hospital in Arkansas was a forgery since he lacked personal knowledge on which to base this conclusion and relied upon a telephone conversation that he had with a doctor at the Arkansas hospital. Clay v. State, 821 So. 2d 136 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a divorce proceeding in which the wife's use of the Internet to meet men was at issue, it was error for the court to allow a counselor to testify with regard to Internet addiction and Internet pornography where the counselor was not qualified as an expert witness and had no personal knowledge of the wife's computer usage. Bower v. Bower, 758 So. 2d 405 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 603. Oath or affirmation.

Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so.

COMMENT

Rule 603 is consistent with M.R.C.P. 43(d) which provides that an affirmation may be made in lieu of an oath. The policy behind allowing an affirmation in lieu of an oath is to refrain from offending religious persons who oppose oath-taking, atheists, and children who are too young to comprehend the meaning of an oath, among others. The affirmer as well as the oath-taker are equally subject to perjury charges under M.C.A. § 97-9-59.

[Amended March 20, 1995.]

Illustrative cases.

Not only did a chancery court not err when it failed to grant an ex-husband's motion for a new trial after it allowed unsworn testimony to be taken in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 603 because a later swearing of the witnesses was effective, but the husband waived the issue because he failed to timely object to the chancery court's failure. Harbit v. Harbit, 3 So. 3d 156 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Although a child victim's video statement was not given under oath, there was no Miss. R. Evid. 603 violation where the video statement, with two exceptions, was duplicative of the victim's in-court testimony, which was given under oath, and the victim had testified under oath in court that she had told the truth in the video. Penny v. State, 960 So. 2d 533 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 384 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 386 (Miss. 2007).

Rule 604. Interpreters.

An interpreter is subject to the provisions of these rules relating to qualification as an expert and the administration of an oath or affirmation that he will make a true translation.

COMMENT

This rule should be read in conjunction with M.R.C.P. 43(f), M.C.A. § 99-17-7, and M.C.A. §§ 13-1-301 through 315. [Amended March 20, 1995.]

Rule 605. Competency of judge as witness.

The judge presiding at the trial may not testify in that trial as a witness. No objection need be made in order to preserve the point.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Applicability.
Illustrative cases.

Applicability.

Miss. R. Evid. 605 precludes the testimony of a judge in a trial in which the judge is presiding but does not preclude a judge's testimony in subsequent proceedings concerning what occurred in a previous proceeding. Stone v. State, 867 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Given absence of provision forbidding judge from testifying in a subsequent inquiry into the verdict, it can be inferred that drafters of this rule understood there were certain extraordinary situations in which a judge may be called upon to explain his verdict or ruling in a subsequent proceeding. Stewart v. Southeast Foods, Inc., 688 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1996).

Illustrative cases.

Where welfare worker had no firsthand knowledge of how baby ingested cocaine, her testimony was merely speculative and apparently based on what she heard others say, and it was therefore beyond her knowledge or expertise and created undue prejudice, constituting reversible error. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

Circuit court did not err in overruling defendant's motion to exclude the testimony of the municipal judge who presided at his initial appearance where the State called the judge to buttress testimony of police officers to statements against interest that defendant had made. Stone v. State, 867 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Rule 606. Competency of juror as witness.

(a) At the trial. A member of the jury may not testify as a witness before that jury in the trial of the case in which the juror is sitting. If the juror is called so to testify, the opposing party shall be afforded an opportunity to object out of the presence of the jury.

(b) Inquiry into validity of verdict or indictment. Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon that or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning the juror's mental processes in connection therewith, except that a juror may testify on the question whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror. Nor may a juror's affidavit or evidence of any statement by the juror concerning a matter about which the juror would be precluded from testifying be received for these purposes. (Amended effective July 1, 2009.)

COMMENT

Rule 606(a) disqualifies a juror from taking the witness stand during the trial of the case in which the juror is sitting. Of course, calling a juror as a witness will be rare; voir dire will generally expose a juror's knowledge of facts relevant to a case and result in disqualification of the juror for cause.

Rule 606(b) is designed to protect all "components of [a jury's] deliberations, including arguments, statements, discussions, mental and emotional reactions, votes and any other feature of the process." See FRE 606, Advisory Committee Notes. Thus testimony or affidavits of jurors is incompetent to show a compromise verdict, a quotient verdict, misinterpretation of instructions, and the like. See, e.g., Hayes v. Entergy Mississippi, Inc., 871 So. 2d 743 (Miss. 2004) (pressure to reach a verdict); Busick v. St. John, 856 So. 2d 304 (Miss. 2003) (misinterpretation of instructions); APAC-Mississippi, Inc. v . Goodman, 803 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2002) (quotient verdict); Curtis v. Bellwood Farms, Inc., 805 So. 2d 541 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000) (improper consideration of attorney's statements despite court's cautionary instruction); Gavin v. State, 767 So. 2d 1072 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000) (confusion regarding instructions); Galloway v. State, 735 So. 2d 1117 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999) (improper consideration of defendant's prior conviction). This broad rule of exclusion ensures jurors "freedom of deliberation, stability and finality of verdicts, and protection of jurors against annoyance and embarrassment." See FRE 606, Advisory Committee Notes.

Rule 606(b) does not purport to set forth the substantive grounds for setting aside verdicts because of an irregularity. Even when grounds are alleged to exist, there is a "general reluctance after verdict to haul in and probe jurors for potential instances of bias, misconduct or extraneous influences." Gladney v. Clarksdale Beverage Co., Inc., 625 So. 2d 407, 418 (Miss. 1993) (discussing substantive grounds for setting aside a verdict). At the least, a party needs to show "a specific, non-speculative impropriety has occurred," and the trial court must supervise any post-trial investigation to "ensure that jurors are protected from harassment and to guard against inquiry into subjects beyond which a juror is competent to testify." Id. at 419. When jurors are permitted to testify about objective facts not of record and about outside influences, they may not be questioned about the effect upon them of what was improperly brought to their attention. Id.

In narrowly prescribed circumstances, Mississippi permits the correction of clerical errors in the verdict, notwithstanding Rule 606(b). See *Martin v. State,*732 So. 2d 847, 851-855 (Miss. 1998) (Verdict incorrectly stated the defendant was guilty of possession of morphine when in fact the jury unanimously found the defendant not guilty. Such an allegation of clerical error did "not challenge the "validity" of the verdict or the deliberation or mental process of the jurors.") Of course, the possibility of clerical errors in the verdict form will be reduced substantially by polling the jury. Errors that come to light after polling the jury "may be corrected on the spot, or the jury may be sent out to continue deliberations, or, if necessary, a new trial may be ordered." C. Mueller & L. Kirkpatrick, Evidence Under the Rules at 671 (2d ed. 1999) (citing Sincox v. United States, 571 F.2d 876, 878-79 (5th Cir. 1978)).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Applicability.
Extraneous prejudicial information.
Validity of verdict.

Applicability.

In a personal injury products liability lawsuit, a juror's affidavit set out the thought processes of the jurors and what was on their minds when they assessed the damages; the tire maker made no allegation of external influences that could have tainted the jury's verdicts. Instead it was an attempt through the juror's affidavit to make an entry into the thought processes and deliberations of the jury, which was not permissible, Miss. R. Evid. 606(b). Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Kirby, 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 221 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 21, 2009), appeal dismissed by, writ of certiorari dismissed by 36 So. 3d 455, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 327 (Miss. 2010).

Inmate was not entitled to post-conviction relief on his claim that at least four jurors considered his silence at trial as indicative of guilt because the affidavit of the inmate's private investigator amounted to nothing more than hearsay. Even if one of the jurors had provided his or her own affidavit, it would not have been admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 606(b). Spicer v. State, 973 So. 2d 184 (Miss. 2007).

Circuit court did not err by failing to conduct a post-trial hearing based on an affidavit and sworn testimony of a juror that the jury was pressured to deliver a guilty verdict and that a juror did not disclose that she had been molested as a child because there was no evidence of jury tampering, and the question of whether some jurors coerced others was prohibited under Miss. R. Evid. 606(b); there was no indication or allegation that anyone tampered with the jury or interfered in the deliberation process. The allegation that some unnamed juror was the victim of sexual abuse or molestation was insufficient upon which to base a motion for a new trial because defendant did not ask the jurors during voir dire whether anyone had been the victim of a crime. Foxworth v. State, 982 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 241 (Miss. 2008).

Circuit court correctly denied the patient's request to reconvene the jury as improper and without merit under Miss. R. Evid. 606(b); the email a juror sent to the circuit court judge after the trial concluded that the jury may have misinterpreted an instruction, and such a concern did not represent that the jury verdict was not rendered as intended. Johnson v. St. Dominics - Jackson Mem'l Hosp., 967 So. 2d 20 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court's failure to investigate juror misconduct jeopardized the parties' right to a fair and impartial trial in a wrongful death action; if accurate, the juror's statement on the first day of trial that she had already decided for plaintiff estate clearly belied her implied impartiality. Mariner Health Care, Inc. v. Estate of Edwards, 964 So. 2d 1138 (Miss. 2007).

It does not matter that information outside the record is provided by a fellow juror as opposed to some other person if the extraneous information is outside the record of proceedings in open court, it is an outside influence under the rule. Perkins v. Dauterive, 882 So. 2d 773 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where the accident occurred at an intersection in a busy grocery store parking lot, the injured person was expected to maintain control over the injured person's speed, and be aware of, and expect to meet other vehicles in front of or approaching the sides of the injured person's vehicle, and the instruction on whether the injured person was guilty of negligence (fault), which was the proximate contributing cause of the accident, was not error, and reformation of the jury verdict was not required, as the jury was provided with an opportunity to assess fault based on principles of comparative negligence, even though neither party pled or argued such a defense. Busick v. St. John, 856 So. 2d 304 (Miss. 2003).

In the absence of a threshold showing of external influences, an inquiry into a juror verdict is not required. Alpha Gulf Coast, Inc. v. Jackson, 801 So. 2d 709 (Miss. 2001).

Subdivision (b) of this rule did not extend to preclude use of judge's affidavit in a subsequent civil trial; had drafters of rule wanted to use broader language such as "trier of fact," they could have easily done so. Stewart v. Southeast Foods, Inc., 688 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1996).

Extraneous prejudicial information.

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial because he presented no evidence of an external influence on the jury. Husband v. State, 23 So. 3d 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 31 So. 3d 1217, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 218 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the administrator's motion for a new trial where there was no evidence that the accident report and the photographs seen by the jurors would have presented evidence that was qualitatively different from the evidence presented at trial; the trial court was not convinced that a mistake was made in the submission and review of the exhibits. In re Estate of Guillory v. McGee, 922 So. 2d 823 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In an appeal of a capital murder conviction and life sentence, the judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial because the jury considered extraneous prejudicial information and the defendant did not receive a fair trial. The failure to fully reconvene the jury pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 606(b) constituted reversible error. James v. State, 912 So. 2d 940 (Miss. 2005).

Rule against a juror revealing influences on his own verdict precludes a juror from testifying as to extraneous information or outside influence which he himself introduced to the jury. Perkins v. Dauterive, 882 So. 2d 773 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Based on the testimony of three jurors, it was clear that there was no external influence upon the jury; each juror was given the opportunity, when polled, to express any dissatisfaction with the verdict and the opportunity to vote without any jury deliberation room pressure, such that the trial court was correct in refusing to allow further investigation of alleged jury misconduct. Hayes v. Entergy Miss., Inc., 871 So. 2d 743 (Miss. 2004).

In a prosecution for the murder of an infant, testimony by a prospective juror regarding remarks made by a trial juror about the fact that the defendant was also charged with the murder of another infant provided a sufficient basis for the trial court to hold a hearing for the purpose of determining whether extraneous prejudicial information was introduced into the jury's deliberations concerning the death of the other child. James v. State, 777 So. 2d 682 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for capital murder while in the commission of felonious child abuse, it was reversible error for the court not to hold a hearing for the purpose of determining whether extraneous prejudicial information was introduced into the jury's deliberations concerning the death of the victim's sibling where there was evidence presented by a member of the prospective jury panel regarding knowledge of the death of the other child by several members of the jury. James v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 164 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 11, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 777 So. 2d 682, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The defendant's contention that the jury failed to follow the court's instructions not to consider the fact that the defendant did not testify as evidence against him and not to draw any unfavorable inferences from his decision not to testify and, also, to carefully weigh the evidence in reaching a verdict and on the presumption of innocence did not fall under the exceptions for investigating extraneous prejudicial information or outside influence. Gleeton v. State, 716 So. 2d 1083 (Miss. 1998).

Validity of verdict.

Where the trial judge polled the jury, the record reflected that three jurors did not audibly respond to the judge's question, but the trial judge made a finding of unanimity, defendant was not entitled to an evidentiary hearing on her motion for a new trial based upon a claim that the jury's verdict was not unanimous but was based upon a majority vote because the judge made a finding of unanimity after polling the jury and neither defense counsel nor any juror objected to this finding and because defendant's production of a statement from one juror that the verdict was based upon a majority vote was insufficient to overcome the trial judge's finding of unanimity. Edwards v. State, 997 So. 2d 241 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a medical malpractice trial, where a juror submitted an affidavit indicating that a nurse on the jury had told members of the jury that the doctor could lose his medical license if they did not vote for him, the court found that the information in the affidavit did not go to the material issue in the case concerning breach of the applicable standard of care. A new trial was not warranted, because there was no reasonable possibility that the nurse's information swayed the other eight majority jurors to ignore the copious evidence legitimately presented in the case and to vote for the doctor. Perkins v. Dauterive, 882 So. 2d 773 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Once it is determined that the communication was made and what the contents were, the court is then to decide whether it is reasonably possible that this communication altered the verdict. In assessing the significance of the extraneous information, the court may order a new trial if the extra-record facts are material, that is, if they affect an issue of importance in the case, and if they are qualitatively different from the evidence properly presented to the jury in the case. Perkins v. Dauterive, 882 So. 2d 773 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Denial of the inmate's petition for post-conviction relief under Miss. Code Ann. § 13-5-1 was proper where the issue was procedurally barred from being raised for the first time in that petition; further, submission of the juror's affidavit in an apparent attempt to impeach the verdict was improper under Miss. R. Evid. 606(b) because a juror could not testify on any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations. Puckett v. State, 879 So. 2d 920 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1638, 161 L. Ed. 2d 483 (2005).

A verdict can not be overturned on the basis that the jury did not follow the court's instructions; the jury is presumed to follow the court's instructions, and a verdict will only be overturned if the jury received "extra record" facts that concerned a material issue in dispute and that were qualitatively different from the evidence admitted at trial. Curtis v. Bellwood Farms, Inc., 758 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Trial court correctly refused to allow sworn affidavits of two jurors, concerning alleged juror misconduct, to be admitted in support of plaintiffs' motion for new trial, where neither affidavit revealed extra-record information, or anything qualitatively different from that which was properly brought to jury's attention during course of trial. Gladney v. Clarksdale Beverage Co., 625 So. 2d 407 (Miss. 1993).

Party alleging juror misconduct must make an adequate showing to overcome presumption of jury impartiality, and juror polling outside supervision of court shall only be permitted upon written request; when threshold showing is made, court should conduct a post-trial hearing, with questions of jurors limited to whether communication was made and what it contained, and court may then decide whether it is reasonably possible the communication altered the verdict. Gladney v. Clarksdale Beverage Co., 625 So. 2d 407 (Miss. 1993).

"Extraneous prejudicial information" as to which a juror may testify includes information brought into jury room by another juror, so that a juror may testify about another juror's words or actions in bringing such information before jury. T.K. Stanley, Inc. v. Cason, 614 So. 2d 942 (Miss. 1992).

Under subdivision (b) of this rule, it was permissible to question jurors as to additional information relayed to jury by several jurors' unauthorized and unsupervised inspection of accident scene. Schmiz v. Illinois Cent. G.R.R., 546 So. 2d 693 (Miss. 1989).

Rule 607. Who may impeach.

The credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling him.

COMMENT

Rule 607 is a repudiation of the old voucher rule. With regard to civil cases the voucher rule was previously eliminated by former M.R.C.P. 43(b)(4) which became effective January 1, 1982. Former M.R.C.P. 43(b)(4) has been abrogated by Rule 607. Rule 607 now repudiates the voucher rule in both civil and criminal cases.

Purpose.

To the extent that Mississippi courts have held that evidence of collateral-source payments may not be introduced for the purpose of impeaching false or misleading testimony, those decisions are expressly overruled. Permitting evidence of collateral-source payments for the narrow purpose of impeaching false or misleading testimony is consistent with the Mississippi Rules of Evidence. Robinson Prop. Group, L.P. v. Mitchell, 7 So. 3d 240 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court erred in admitting testimony offered under guise of impeachment, where its primary purpose was to avoid the hearsay rule. Cooper v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co., 568 So. 2d 687 (Miss. 1990).

Statements.

Before a party may introduce for impeachment purposes an unsworn pretrial inconsistent statement of his own witness, he must show surprise or unexpected hostility, and such statement can never be used as substantive evidence; under provisions of M.R.E. Rule 403, trial judge should consider whether a cautionary instruction to jury will be sufficient to keep jury from treating the unsworn pretrial inconsistent statement as substantive evidence, and if not, the statement should not be introduced. Wilkins v. State, 603 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 1992).

Illustrative cases.

A trial court did not err in excluding collateral-source evidence and in refusing to allow a partnership to use evidence to impeach an injured party when the injured party's testimony about medical bills and nonmedical evidence was not unduly prejudicial. Robinson Prop. Group, L.P. v. Mitchell, 7 So. 3d 240 (Miss. 2009).

Witness' testimony was properly excluded because defendant intended to introduce the witness' prior statements to show that the victim had been coached to lie, and, therefore, the statement constituted hearsay under Miss.R. Evid. 801 (c) because defendant intended to use his witness' prior statement in the guise of impeachment under Miss. R. Evid. 607 for the primary purpose of placing before the jury substantive evidence which was not otherwise admissible in order to avoid the hearsay rule. Elkins v. State, 918 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 26 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 547 U.S. 1194, 126 S. Ct. 2865, 165 L. Ed. 2d 898, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4564, 74 U.S.L.W. 3685 (2006).

In a prosecution for embezzlement arising from an incident in which the defendant took a lawnmower with permission from the victim for the purpose of repairing it, but then pawned it, the defendant was properly precluded from cross-examining the victim with regard to her prior offense for driving while intoxicated and her history of mental problems since there was no argument that the victim was confused on the stand, appeared to be hallucinating, or otherwise lacked coherence and, therefore, such evidence was irrelevant. Bishop v. State, 755 So. 2d 1269 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Trial court's exclusion of statement as hearsay was error, because it was a prior inconsistent statement that was not being offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, statement was being offered as circumstantial evidence from which jury could infer that trial testimony of declarant was unreliable. Hall v. State, 691 So. 2d 415 (Miss. 1997).

Videotape taken at booking of defendant charged with assaulting police officers was properly admitted for impeachment purposes; tape was not collateral or too remote in time, probative value of tape substantially outweighed its prejudicial value, and tape was relevant to credibility of defendant's brother, whose recollection of events wavered significantly. Johnson v. State, 655 So. 2d 37 (Miss. 1995).

Trial court did not err in allowing prosecutor to impeach his own witness on the basis of witness's prior inconsistent statements, where proper predicate for impeachment was laid and prosecutor was not using prior statements merely as a subterfuge to place incriminating hearsay before jury. Harrison v. State, 534 So. 2d 175 (Miss. 1988).

Rule 608. Evidence of character and conduct of witness.

(a) Opinion and reputation evidence of character. The credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by evidence in the form of opinion or reputation, but subject to these limitations: (1) the evidence may refer only to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and (2) evidence of truthful character is admissible only after the character of the witness for truthfulness has been attacked by opinion or reputation evidence or otherwise.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. Specific instances of the conduct of a witness, for the purpose of attacking or supporting the witness's character for truthfulness, other than conviction of crime as provided in Rule 609, may not be proved by extrinsic evidence. They may, however, in the discretion of the court, if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, be inquired into on cross-examination of the witness (1) concerning the witness's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, or (2) concerning the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of another witness as to which character the witness being cross-examined has testified.

The giving of testimony, whether by an accused or by any other witness, does not operate as a waiver of the privilege against self-incrimination when examined with respect to matters which relate only to character for truthfulness. (Amended effective July 1, 2009.)

COMMENT

Rule 608 is concerned with character evidence of witnesses. Rule 404(a) prohibits the use of character evidence to prove conformity of conduct, but with some exceptions. Rule 608 addresses those exceptions. Thus, it is necessary to read both rules together.

Subsection (a) permits the introduction of character evidence of a witness only after the witness's character for veracity has been attacked. A party may not bolster the character of the party's own witness; the party can only react in response to a charge of untruthfulness. Moreover, only the witness's character for truthfulness or its opposite can be attacked. Other character traits are irrelevant for impeachment purposes. Evidence shall be produced in the form of an opinion or reputation.

Subsection (b) flatly prohibits impeaching a witness's character for truthfulness via extrinsic proof of specific acts of the witness's conduct, except criminal convictions pursuant to Rule 609. In contrast, specific instances of conduct of the witness may, in the discretion of the court, be inquired into on cross-examination of that witness (or on cross-examination of another who testifies concerning that witness's character for truthfulness) if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness. See Brent v. State, 632 So.2d 936, 944 (Miss. 1994) ("If the past conduct did not involve lying, deceit, or dishonesty in some manner, it cannot be inquired into on cross-examination.")

This absolute prohibition on extrinsic evidence applies only when the sole reason for proffering that evidence is to attack or support the witness's character for truthfulness. The admissibility of extrinsic evidence offered for other grounds of impeachment, such as contradiction, prior inconsistent statement, bias, and mental or sensory capacity, is governed by Rules 402, 403, and 616.

The extrinsic evidence prohibition of Rule 608(b) bars the use of any kind of evidence, including documents or the testimony of other witnesses, except a direct admission by the witness being cross-examined. See Brent at 945 ("a party cross-examining a witness about past instances of conduct is bound by the witness's answer [and] is not permitted to offer evidence in rebuttal to contradict it.")

Of course, counsel must have a good faith basis before beginning to inquire on cross-examination about specific instances of past conduct, and may not merely seek a "fishing license." Brent, 632 So.2d at 645.

The last sentence of Rule 608 seeks to guarantee that a witness does not waive the privilege against self-incrimination when questioned about matters relating to credibility.

In general.

A witness's credibility may be impeached under subsection (a) with evidence that he has a character for untruthfulness; indeed, it is reversible error to refuse to allow a defendant to call a character witness to impeach the character for truth and veracity of an important prosecution witness. White v. State, 755 So. 2d 1148 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Bolstering.

Drug conviction was reversed and remanded for a new trial; the officer's testimony pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 608(a) was in error because simply pointing out the impossibility of one's account, or discrepancies between accounts, was not the sort of attack on a witness's character or reputation that warranted opening the door to bolstering testimony. Brent v. State, 929 So. 2d 952 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 292 (Miss. 2006).

In a wrongful death case, a court did not err in sustaining plaintiff's objection to testimony concerning the relationship between the doctor and the decedent's family where substantially the same testimony provided during the proffer came before the jury; the evidence was self-serving, and it was not relevant. Eckman v. Moore, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 552 (Miss. Oct. 23, 2003), opinion withdrawn by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 310 (Miss.

Mar. 25, 2004), substituted opinion at 876 So. 2d 975, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 287 (Miss. 2004).

Audiotapes of drug transactions did not bolster the testimony of any of the state's witnesses as their veracity was never at issue; instead, the tapes were corroborating evidence of the crime committed and were properly introduced into evidence. Lawrence v. State, 780 So. 2d 652 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Credibility of witness.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow a defendant on trial for capital murder to attempt to impeach a former police detective who had been arrested for, but not convicted of bribery, with evidence of the arrest because the arrest was irrelevant to the credibility of the detective and the acts were too far removed to be of probative value; trial court's action did not deprive defendant of his right to confront the witness. Ellis v. State, 856 So. 2d 561 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

That a witness had some unmentioned and unrelated charges pending was not, in and of itself, probative of untruthfulness; therefore, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it sustained the state's objection. Moore v. State, 958 So. 2d 824 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 552 (Miss. 2007).

The credibility of a witness may be attacked by cross-examination and by opinion and reputation evidence, but not by an attempt to prove with extrinsic evidence that an answer given by the witness to an extraneous matter was incorrect. Feazell v. State, 750 So. 2d 1286 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Questioning of a murder victim's stepfather in regard to the truthfulness of the defendant could not be justified under subsection (a) of this rule because the defendant did not testify at her trial. Mosby v. State, 749 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Knowledge and opinions.

Trial court erred in excluding proffered evidence which may have established that witness had knowledge and an opinion as to drug informant's truth and veracity, since under the rules, defendant had the right to make his offer of proof. Cooper v. State, 628 So. 2d 1371 (Miss. 1993).

Scope of rebuttal evidence.

Although the state was properly permitted to impeach a statement in defense counsel's opening statement that the defendant in a murder prosecution had never pointed his pistol at anyone with evidence that he had done so about one year before the crime at issue, it was reversible error for the court to allow the other person involved in that incident to testify to the details of that incident. Slaughter v. State, 752 So. 2d 1092 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Sexual history.

In a proceeding in which the plaintiff sought to establish the identity of her child's father so as to participate in the wrongful death settlement arising from the death of the putative father, the Chancellor did not sufficiently narrow the scope of questioning regarding the plaintiff's sexual habits where he permitted the introduction of evidence as to her sexual relationships from a few months before the conception through the entire term of her pregnancy. Brown v. Jackson, 711 So. 2d 878 (Miss. 1998).

Truthfulness of victim.

In a prosecution for sexual battery characterized as a "he said, she said" case, the defendant was improperly precluded from introducing evidence of the reputation for truthfulness of the complaining witness where her character for truthfulness had already been attacked at the time the testimony was proffered. Vaughan v. State, 759 So. 2d 1092 (Miss. 1999).

Illustrative cases.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow testimony of a narcotics investigator relating to illegal gaming and drug activity at a bar, which was the establishment that a defendant was charged with robbing at gunpoint, because the proffered testimony revealed nothing other than a collateral matter and was irrelevant under Miss. R. Evid. 608 and 609. Croft v. State, 992 So. 2d 1151 (Miss. 2008).

Witness's juvenile court record was offered for general impeachment purposes, which was not permitted, and the record was not offered to show bias or interest in testifying and thus the trial court properly refused to allow the witness to be cross-examined thereby; the witness's prior instances of violence were inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 608(b) and the evidence was also inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(a), as it was offered to show that he was a violent person to create an inference that he acted in conformity with his propensity for violence. Williams v. State, 994 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 665 (Miss. 2008).

Where a son sought to set aside a warranty deed that transferred property from the son's mother to a daughter, the case was properly dismissed for failure to prosecute because, inter alia, although the daughter was not prejudiced by the unavailability of a long-time family attorney since the attorney could not have testified about the property deed because such testimony would be an effort to prove specific instances of conduct through extrinsic evidence in order to impeach the son, the daughter was prejudiced because of their mother's intervening death. Cox v. Cox, 976 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 2008).

In a drug case, a trial court properly rejected the proposed testimony of a defense witness regarding an informant allegedly using drugs previously with defendant; the informant had already denied on cross-examination that this had occurred. Moreover, an issue under Miss. R. Evid. 616 was not preserved for review since it was not raised at trial. Spann v. State, 970 So. 2d 135 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court's ruling, allowing the jury to hear a tape recording of a message to a confidential informant, fell under Miss. R. Evid. 608, and although the introduction of the recording might have been improper, any error was harmless and no reversal was required, as the court was unable to find where a substantial right of defendant's was affected by the ruling. Pittman v. State, 987 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 368 (Miss. July 31, 2008).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of marijuana within a correctional facility was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 608(a) because the circuit court did not err when it prohibited defendant's presentation of two witnesses since the jury heard exactly the evidence that defendant claimed that the circuit court improperly excluded; defendant could not have been prejudiced by prohibiting the same testimony from a judge that both defendant and a parole officer testified about. Jackson v. State, 962 So. 2d 649 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. 2007).

During cross-examination, the defense attempted to impeach an informant by showing that he had recently been convicted of grand larceny, but pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 608(b), grand larceny was not a crime generally considered to show an individuals tendency for truth and veracity; therefore, the informant's pending charge for grand larceny alone was not probative of his general truthfulness or untruthfulness, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the state's objection that the informant could not be impeached with his grand larceny conviction. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

It was not an error for the trial court to rule that under Miss. R. Evid. 608 a witness could be questioned about an alleged theft of the victim but that his answer could not be attacked with extrinsic evidence because Rule 608 did not allow further questioning; defendant's argument that he sought to introduce the evidence to show that the witness was too concerned with stealing money to accurately perceive what happened was not persuasive. Shumpert v. State, 935 So. 2d 962 (Miss. 2006).

In a prosecution for possession of a firearm by a felon, it was reversible error for the state to cross examine defense witnesses with regard to whether they would maintain their opinions regarding the defendant's reputation for truthfulness if told that he had also been charged with receiving stolen property, stealing a bicycle, not having a tag, leaving the scene of an accident, reckless driving, robbery, trespassing, driving without a license, and simple assault since (1) the state did not inform the court that it intended to cross examine as to specific acts of past conduct not resulting in a conviction, and (2) several of the defendant's misdeeds did not involve lying, deceit, or dishonesty and had absolutely no probative value whatsoever in regard to his character for truthfulness. Porter v. State, 735 So. 2d 987 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to sell cocaine, the court properly excluded evidence of prior prostitution by a state witness on the ground that such conduct did not involve truthfulness or untruthfulness. Harris v. State, 731 So. 2d 1125 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, the court properly excluded evidence pertaining to the victim's past history of drug violations since the defendant attempted to introduce this evidence for purposes strictly prohibited by subsection (b). McGowan v. State, 726 So. 2d 217 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

The defendant was properly precluded from introducing evidence that two assault victims broke into his car the night before the alleged assault since such break-in was an irrelevant collateral matter. Bingham v. State, 723 So. 2d 1189 (Ct. App. 1998).

Trial court's admission over defendant's objection, of testimony of alleged sexual acts with third party not contained in indictment, constituted reversible error. Nicholson v. State, 704 So. 2d 81 (Miss. 1997).

State's attempt to impeach defense witness with extrinsic evidence of specific instances of that witness' conduct was improper; rule provided for limited exploration of a witness' conduct, but on cross-examination, not on direct examination or by rebuttal testimony of a third party. Jackson v. State, 645 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 1994).

When a party seeks to cross-examine a witness about specific instances of past conduct probative of veracity under M.R.E. Rule 608 (b), trial judge should make specific findings of record under Rule 403. Brent v. State, 632 So. 2d 936 (Miss. 1994).

If a witness's past conduct did not involve lying, deceit, or dishonesty in some manner, it cannot be inquired into on cross-examination. Brent v. State, 632 So. 2d 936 (Miss. 1994).

Neither robbery nor marijuana use were probative of witness's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and therefore testimony concerning these activities was irrelevant and properly excluded. Johnston v. State, 618 So. 2d 90 (Miss. 1993).

Witness's testimony that defendant had a gun three days before assault was properly admitted, where defendant had denied having had possession of a gun on night of incident or several days prior to incident; testimony was not reputation or character evidence or impeachment on a collateral issue, since possession of a gun and the identity of the aggressor were central factual issues relevant to the merits. Lewis v. State, 580 So. 2d 1279 (Miss. 1991).

Rule 609. Impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

(a) General rule. For the purpose of attacking the character for truthfulness of a witness,

(1) evidence that (A) a nonparty witness has been convicted of a crime shall be admitted subject to Rule 403, if the crime was punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year under the law under which the witness was convicted, and (B) a party has been convicted of such a crime shall be admitted

if the court determines that the probative value of admitting this evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect to the party; and

(2) evidence that any witness has been convicted of a crime shall be admitted if it involved dishonesty or false statement, regardless of punishment.

(b) Time limit. Evidence of a conviction under this rule is not admissible if a period of more than ten years has elapsed since the date of the conviction or of the release of the witness from the confinement imposed for that conviction, whichever is the later date, unless the court determines, in the interests of justice, that the probative value of the conviction supported by the specific facts and circumstances substantially outweighs its prejudicial effect. However, evidence of a conviction more than ten years old as calculated herein is not admissible unless the proponent gives to the adverse party sufficient advance written notice of intent to use such evidence to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to contest the use of such evidence.

(c) Effect of pardon, annulment, expungement or certificate of rehabilitation. Evidence of a conviction is not admissible under this rule if (1) the conviction has been the subject of a pardon, annulment, expungement, certificate of rehabilitation, or other equivalent procedure based on a finding of the rehabilitation of the person convicted, and that person has not been convicted of a subsequent crime which was punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year, or (2) the conviction has been the subject of a pardon, annulment, or other equivalent procedure based on a finding of innocence.

(d) Juvenile adjudications. Evidence of juvenile adjudications is generally not admissible under this rule. The court may, however, in a criminal case allow evidence of a juvenile adjudication of a witness other than the accused if conviction of the offense would be admissible to attack the credibility of an adult and the court is satisfied that admission in evidence is necessary for a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence.

(e) Pendency of appeal. The pendency of an appeal therefrom does not render evidence of a conviction inadmissible. Evidence of the pendency of an appeal is admissible. (Amended May 2, 2002; amended effective July 1, 2009.)

COMMENT

Under Rule 609(a) crimes are divided into two categories for purposes of impeachment. 609(a)(1) deals with felony convictions and under the original version treated convictions of all witnesses the same. The second category, 609(a)(2), originally addressed crimes involving dishonesty or false statement, whether felonies or misdemeanors.

Rule 609(a)(1) was amended in 2002 to incorporate the rationale of decisions by the Mississippi Supreme Court which recognized the difference in the highly prejudicial effect of showing the convictions when the witness is the accused and the little prejudicial effect from such impeachment of other witnesses. It was reasoned that when the impeachment by convictions is of a witness other than the accused in a criminal case there is little or no unfair prejudice which can be caused to a party. Thus, the probative value on the credibility of the witness will almost always outweigh any prejudice. In White v. State, 785 So.2d 1059 (Miss.2001) it was held that the accused had the right, bolstered by his right of confrontation, to impeach a state's witness with his felony drug conviction. In Moore v. State, 787 So.2d 1282 (Miss.2001) the court held that the state was properly permitted to impeach a defense witness with his five prior convictions, noting that there was no prejudice against the accused.

The amendments here refer to parties instead of the accused to clearly apply to civil cases, as did the original rule. Under this amended rule, convictions offered under 609(a)(1) to impeach a party must be analyzed under the guidelines set forth in Peterson v. State, 518 So.2d 632 (Miss.1987) to determine if the probative value is great enough to overcome the presumed prejudicial effect to that party, and findings should be made on the record by the judge. Convictions offered to impeach any other witness are admissible unless the court is persuaded by the opponent that the probative value is substantially outweighed by negative factors included in Rule 403. A record of the findings on the issue is not required in that case. See Moore, above.

Convictions from any state or federal jurisdiction may be considered for admission under the rule.

The phrase "dishonesty or false statement" in 609(a)(2) means crimes such as perjury or subornation of perjury, false statement, fraud, forgery, embezzlement, false pretense or other offense in the nature of crimen falsi, the commission of which involves some element of deceit, untruthfulness, or falsification bearing on the witness' propensity to testify truthfully. Such convictions are peculiarly probative of credibility and are always to be admitted, not subject to the discretionary balancing by the judge.

Rule 609(a)(2) requires that the proponent have ready proof that the crime was in the nature of crimen falsi. Ordinarily, the statutory elements of the crime will indicate whether it is one of dishonesty or false statement. Where the deceitful nature of the crime is not apparent from the statute and the face of the judgment — as, for example, where the conviction simply records a finding of guilt for a statutory offense that does not reference deceit expressly — a proponent may offer information such as an indictment, a statement of admitted facts, or jury instructions to show that the factfinder had to find, or the defendant had to admit, an act of dishonesty or false statement in order for the witness to have been convicted. Cf. Taylor v. United States, 110 S.Ct. 2143 (1990) (providing that a trial court may look to a charging instrument or jury instructions to ascertain the nature of a prior offense where the statute is insufficiently clear on its face); Shepard v. United States, 125 S.Ct. 1254 (2005) (the inquiry to determine whether a guilty plea to a crime defined by a nongeneric statute necessarily admitted elements of the generic offense was limited to the charging document's terms, the terms of a plea agreement or transcript of colloquy between judge and defendant in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the defendant, or a comparable judicial record). But the rule does not contemplate a "mini-trial" in which the court plumbs the record of the previous proceeding to determine whether the crime was in the nature of crimen falsi.

The reference in former 609(a) to proving a conviction during cross-examination is eliminated because the conviction may have to be proved in rebuttal if the witness refuses to admit the prior conviction on cross-examination.

The first sentence of 609(a) uses the term "character for truthfulness" instead of the prior term "credibility," because the limitations of Rule 609 are not applicable if a conviction is admitted for a purpose other than to prove the witness's character for untruthfulness. See, e.g., United States v. Lopez, 979 F.2d 1024 (5th Cir. 1992) (Rule 609 was not applicable where the conviction was offered for purposes of contradiction). The use of the term "credibility" in subdivision (d) is retained, however, as that subdivision is intended to govern the use of a juvenile adjudication for any type of impeachment.

Subsection (b) imposes a time limitation on prior convictions. If the conviction occurred more than ten years earlier, it may not be used as impeachment evidence. The rationale underlying subsection (b) is based on fairness. A person's past should not be able to haunt the person for life. The judge may grant an exception in instances where the probativeness of the conviction substantially outweighs the prejudice. But, before the judge makes such a decision, the proponent must give the adversary sufficient notice so that the adversary may challenge the decision.

Prior to the rules Mississippi had no time limitation regarding prior convictions. The courts held only that the prior conviction should not be too remote in time from the case at bar. That principle obviously left a great deal of discretion with the trial judge in determining remoteness. Thus, the appellate court often upheld the use of prior convictions for impeachment which were far in excess of the ten-year limitation of Rule 609(b).

Subsection (c) expresses the public policy that a person who has been rehabilitated or whose conviction has been nullified based on a later finding of his innocence should not be tainted by this conviction. Subsection (c) does not apply to pardons which simply restore a person's civil rights. Rather, it is implicitly limited to cases in which rehabilitation has occurred or in which it can be shown that the person was innocent.

Subsection (d) prohibits impeachment based on juvenile adjudications. Reasons for this rule include the wish to free an adult from bearing the burden of a youthful mistake, the informality of youth court proceedings, and the confidential nature of those proceedings. See FRE 609, Advisory Committee's Notes.

In pre-rule Mississippi practice, the use of juvenile adjudications for impeachment purposes has been governed by M.C.A. § 43-21-561 which provides that no adjudication against a child shall be deemed a criminal conviction. Indeed, the juvenile offender is permitted by statute to deny the fact of the prior adjudication. However, the statute permits cross-examination by either the state or the defendant in a criminal action or the respondent in a juvenile adjudication proceeding regarding prior juvenile offenses for the limited purpose of showing bias and interest. In short, the evidence could be used in these limited circumstances but not to attack the general credibility of the witness.

Under Rule 609(d) the court has the discretion to allow impeachment of a witness, other than a criminal defendant, by a prior juvenile adjudication if the judge determines that it is necessary. The court's discretion extends only to witnesses other than the accused in a criminal case.

Subsection (e) reflects the presumption that exists in favor of a trial court's decision. Until overturned, that decision is deemed to be the correct decision. Once the prior conviction has been introduced, the adversary can present evidence that an appeal of that conviction is pending. In theory, this gives a sense of balance to the use of the prior conviction. However, in practice, evidence of a pending appeal has insufficient weight to balance the use of the prior conviction.

In general.

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for aggravated assault—he inflicted the injuries to the victim with a deadly weapon. Defendant "opened the door" regarding his credibility in his direct examination, hence, the line of questioning presented by the State was proper. Harris v. State, 892 So. 2d 830 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Given the constitutional right of a criminal defendant to confront those testifying against him, subsection (a)(1) allows full impeachment of prosecution witnesses without the requirement of a balancing test, except in extreme situations such as where the prosecution witness has a prior conviction that is both highly inflammatory and completely unrelated to the charges pending against the accused; such a prior conviction should be analyzed under the subsection (a)(1) probative/prejudicial balancing test. White v. State, 785 So. 2d 1059 (Miss. 2001).

So long as the prejudice/probative test of subsection (a)(1) is complied with, convictions resulting in death or imprisonment in excess of one year are admissible for impeachment purposes whether or not the conviction relates to the witness's veracity. White v. State, 785 So. 2d 1059 (Miss. 2001).

Where the victim did not testify or imply that he had never been in any prior difficulties with the authorities, the court properly refused to allow the defendant to introduce evidence that the victim had been convicted for house burglary, burglary of an automobile and grand larceny. Johnson v. State, 723 So. 2d 1205 (Ct. App. 1998).

Final hurdle to be cleared before declaring a prior conviction admissible for impeachment purposes is an on-the-record balancing of five factors: (1) impeachment value of the prior offense; (2) date of the prior conviction; (3) similarity between the past and presently charged offenses; (4) importance of defendant's testimony; and (5) whether credibility is central. Hopkins v. State, 639 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. 1993).

When weighing probative value of convictions not involving dishonesty or false statement against prejudicial effect of their admission, trial judge must consider: (1) impeachment value of prior crime, (2) point in time of conviction and witness' subsequent history, (3) similarity between past crime and charged crime, (4) importance of defendant's testimony, and (5) centrality of credibility issue. Jordan v. State, 592 So. 2d 522 (Miss. 1991).

In admitting convictions not involving dishonesty or false statement, trial judge must make an on-the-record determination that probative value of the evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect, and he should articulate his reasons for this finding; where this evidence is manifestly prejudicial to defendant and trial judge fails to make an on-the-record determination, the case must be reversed and remanded for new trial. Jordan v. State, 592 So. 2d 522 (Miss. 1991).

Trial judge must make his determination, that probative value of prior conviction outweighs its prejudicial effect, on the record. Johnson v. State, 525 So. 2d 809 (Miss. 1988).

Applicability.

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied because Miss. R. Evid. 609 had no bearing upon the use of prior convictions to enhance a sentence; moreover, the prior convictions in this case met the requirements under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, and there was no provision limiting the use of prior convictions that were over 10 years old. Shies v. State, 19 So. 3d 770 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 504 (Miss. 2009).

In appellant's capital murder case, the State was not required to obtain the criminal history on its witness because the witness's felony conviction occurred in 1983, almost seventeen years before the crime at issue, and whether impeachment of the witness concerning his seventeen-year-old conviction for burglary would have been admissible was doubtful. Additionally, there was no such request by the defense for the records. Howell v. State, 989 So. 2d 372 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not err in allowing the State to introduce evidence of defendant's prior conviction, and Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B) did not apply because the conviction was not used to impeach, but admitted during a redirect examination of a witness; once defendant's attorney opened the door by asking the witness if defendant had been arrested previously, the State was free to rebut the response with proof of defendant's prior conviction, and since defendant later admitted to the prior conviction while on the stand, the State was properly allowed to question defendant on the subject. Porter v. State, 869 So. 2d 414 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's conviction of armed robbery was affirmed where the speedy trial, improper testimony and impeachment, jury instruction, and weight of the evidence issues that she raised on appeal had no merit; the trial court properly attacked defendant's truthfulness under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(2) by producing evidence of a prior misdemeanor conviction for prescription forgery. Jones v. State, 846 So. 2d 1041 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 846 So. 2d 229 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

This rule does not apply to the use of a 14 year old conviction to classify a defendant as a habitual offender. Sanders v. State, 760 So. 2d 839 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Determinating probative value.

Defendant's conviction for burglary was inappropriate because the prosecutor impermissibly used defendant's prior conviction for attempted grand larceny as evidence of defendant's predisposition to steal to prove the element of intent of the indicted offense. Although the circuit court cited Miss. R. Evid. 609 as the basis for admitting evidence of the prior conviction, the record reflected no findings reflecting any consideration of the Peterson factors and without those findings, the appellate court was unable to discern that the circuit court found that the probative value of the prior conviction outweighed the R. 609 presumed prejudicial effect to defendant. Robinson v. State, 42 So. 3d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a prosecution witness's prior armed robbery conviction where the conviction was more than ten years old and not probative of the truth of the witness's testimony; hence, defendant's capital murder conviction was upheld. Martin v. State, 872 So. 2d 713 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

When the defendant objects to the admission of character evidence, the trial court must balance its probative value against the danger of unfair prejudice, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 105, 403, 609(a), and the court finds that the rule envisions an objection contemporaneous with the admission of the testimony; as the prior bad acts evidence was introduced by one defendant, any objection thereto by that defendant was waived, and because none of defendants objected to the closing argument that referred to the prior bad acts evidence, which was not unduly prejudicial in the first place, the court found that error was not preserved on appeal and the issue had no merit. Harris v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 80 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 861 So. 2d 1003, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 872 (Miss. 2003).

Although it was error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of the defendant's previous conviction without a determination on the record that the probative value of the evidence outweighed its prejudicial effect, the error was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of guilt. DeLoach v. State, 722 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1998).

Trial judge committed reversible error in failing to make on-the-record determination that probative value of defendant's prior conviction outweighed its prejudicial effect; judge's admission of prior conviction had a chilling effect, as defendant subsequently opted not to testify. Hickson v. State, 697 So. 2d 391 (Miss. 1997).

Trial court failed to conduct balancing test, under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule, to assess prejudicial impact of defendant's prior drug conviction in Tennessee along with its probative value in case at bar. Spraggins v. State, 606 So. 2d 592 (Miss. 1992).

Drug offenses.

In a prosecution for murder, the state was properly permitted to impeach a defense witness with his conviction for the sale of cocaine. Baldwin v. State, 784 So. 2d 148 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for selling crystal methamphetamine, the defendant failed to make a threshold showing that the prior out-of-state conviction of a confidential informant for possession of narcotics related to his veracity and, therefore, such evidence was properly excluded. White v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 41 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 1, 2000), reversed by, remanded by 785 So. 2d 1059, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 44 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, it was not error for the court to permit the impeachment of a defense witness with evidence of a prior conviction for possession of cocaine. McCullough v. State, 750 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 1999).

Harmless error.

Although the trial court should have determined on the record whether the probative value of admitting evidence of defendant's prior crimes outweighed its prejudicial effect, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B), due to the overwhelming weight of the evidence presented to the jury for the felony fleeing charge, the error was harmless. Kirkwood v. State, 53 So. 3d 7 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed in part by, reversed by, remanded in part by 52 So. 3d 1184, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 36 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper because, although a witness's convictions of burglary and fleeing from police were arguably unrelated to defendant's charge of capital murder, the trial court had the discretion to conduct a probative/prejudicial balancing test despite the fact that the witness was a non-party, Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1). Additionally, in the event the trial court did err in excluding the witness's prior convictions, the error was harmless due to the overwhelming weight of evidence against defendant. Catchings v. State, 39 So. 3d 943 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ denied by 39 So. 3d 5, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 382 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 132 S. Ct. 1546, 182 L. Ed. 2d 178, 2012 U.S. LEXIS 1556, 80 U.S.L.W. 3476 (U.S. 2012).

Where a co-indictee testified against defendant at his capital murder trial, the trial court violated Miss. R. Evid. 609(b) by excluding the co-indictee's prior felony convictions that were more than ten years old without conducting the balancing test under Miss. R. Evid. 403; however, this was harmless error. The trial judge allowed the co-indictee's most recent conviction for burglary and larceny to be introduced into evidence, which had more probative value than the older convictions. Spurlock v. State, 13 So. 3d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 14 So. 3d 731, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 343 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court erred in ruling that defendant's prior aggravated assault conviction could be admitted in his trial for aggravated assault if he testified; the evidence was more prejudicial than probative, but defendant never proffered what he would testify to if he testified, and as a result, the error was harmless in light of the overwhelming weight of the evidence against defendant. Walker v. State, 936 So. 2d 424 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In defendant's trial for capital murder, it was error for the trial court to have prevented defendant from using a State witness' recent grand larceny conviction for impeachment on the basis that said offense was not a "crimen falsi crime." Said conviction could have been used to impeach the witness under Miss. R. Evid. 609, since said crime was punishable by imprisonment in excess of one year, and because the probative value of that evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. On the other hand, because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming, and because said witness' testimony was cumulative to that of another witness, the trial court's error was harmless. Hammons v. State, 918 So. 2d 62 (Miss. 2005).

Although the trial court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff to impeach a defense witness with her prior conviction for embezzlement, such error was harmless in light of ample evidence introduced on behalf of the defendant. Baine v. River Oaks Convalescent Ctr., 791 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Juvenile adjudications.

Defendant sought to attack the victim's credibility and show that she had a motive to lie for ill will by introducing evidence at trial regarding a juvenile adjudication of a shoplifting charge, and notwithstanding the prohibition on the use of a juvenile adjudication for the purpose of impeachment, the crime of shoplifting could not be used for impeachment purposes because it was not a crime categorized as crimen falsi; thus, the trial court did not err in excluding defendant's questioning regarding the victim's juvenile shoplifting adjudication. Evans v. State, 984 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 289 (Miss. 2008).

In a criminal prosecution for burglary, the trial court did not err by refusing to allow defendant to use a witness's juvenile record for impeachment purposes; the charges against the witness were reduced to crimes that would not be admissible for impeachment purposes if committed by an adult. Sandefer v. State, 952 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine, evidence of a witness's juvenile adjudications was admissible under subsection (d) because it would have been admissible under subsection (a) to attack the credibility of an adult and because it was necessary for a fair determination of guilt or innocence; the witness admitted that he told the prosecutor that he was arrested for the crime for which the defendant was being tried and, therefore, it was necessary for the prosecution to show that he was arrested and sentenced to training school for other crimes for a fair determination of guilt or innocence and, furthermore, the witness opened the door for the prosecution to question him about his juvenile adjudications by stating that he had just gotten out of training school, which statement was not elicited by the prosecution. Simmons v. State, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 179 (Miss. May 13, 1999), subst. op., 746 So. 2d 302 (Miss. 1999).

Trial court did not err in prohibiting cross-examination of witness as to his juvenile record, where defense counsel had ample opportunity to interview witness before trial, explore his background and test the credibility of what he proposed to testify, and yet defense failed to indicate a specific reason or basis for asking witness about his juvenile record. Bass v. State, 597 So. 2d 182 (Miss. 1992).

Limiting instructions.

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of aggravated assault and rape was appropriate because defendant did not request a limiting instruction and was barred from bringing the issue on appeal; the trial judge was not obligated to provide a limiting instruction sua sponte regarding the admission of defendant's prior convictions. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Because the burden to request a limiting instruction falls upon defense counsel in the admittance of Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence, the burden falls upon defense counsel to request a limiting instruction in the context of the admittance of prior convictions through impeachment under Miss. R. Evid. 609. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Although the trial judge has a responsibility to give sua sponte a limiting instruction when prior convictions are sought to be admitted under subsection (a)(2), there is no per se reversible error rule when the trial court fails to give such an instruction, and such error is not excluded from a harmless error analysis. Bishop v. State, 771 So. 2d 397 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for forgery in the state presented evidence of four prior forgery convictions of the defendants, the trial judge committed reversible error in failing to give a limiting instruction sua sponte to ensure that the defendant's forgery conviction was based upon the evidence related to the crime at hand rather than his prior convictions for forgery. Robinson v. State, 735 So. 2d 208 (Miss. 1999).

Nonparty witnesses.

Prosecution only asked whether a defense witness was a convicted felony, which she agreed she was, and the prosecution did not mention that her conviction was for conspiring with defendant to bring drugs into a county jail; thus, the trial court did not improperly allow the witness to be impeached by her prior felony conviction under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1). Sessom v. State, 942 So. 2d 234 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 716 (Miss. 2006).

In defendant's trial on charges of violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-11-53, inducement to influence a public official to approve a property owner's construction project, the trial court did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses by limiting his cross-examination of the property owner because defendant sought to inquire about other lawsuits in which the property owner was involved and the trial court had determined that the property owner had not been convicted of any of the wrongdoings for which defense counsel wished to impeach his testimony, thus the trial court ruled that the testimony sought to be elicited from the property owner would not have been allowed by Miss. R. Evid. 609 and that it would have been unduly prejudicial, in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 403. Because the trial court's ruling was in accordance with the Mississippi Rules of Evidence, no abuse of discretion was present. Edmonson v. State, 906 So. 2d 73 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a capital murder case, the inmate's counsel were not ineffective for failing to challenge the testimony of the county sheriff who was in charge of the investigation of the inmate because (1) the trial court's refusal to admit evidence of the sheriff's conviction seven years after his testimony in the inmate's case was not an abuse of discretion under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1); (2) the sheriff's prior testimony was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 804; (3) the inmate's confrontation clause rights were not violated because he had been present when the testimony was given and was able to confront the sheriff; and (4) evidence from a civil lawsuit involving one of the sheriff's deputies could have done little harm to the sheriff's credibility. Wilcher v. State, 863 So. 2d 776 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 124 S. Ct. 2917, 159 L. Ed. 2d 821 (2004).

State's impeachment of defendant's witness by his prior convictions was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 609; since the witness was not a party, the trial court was obliged to consider the issue of prejudice. Al-Fatah v. State, 856 So. 2d 494 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 315 (Miss. 2003).

The trial court did not commit reversible error when it failed to conduct an on-the-record balancing test before allowing in evidence of the prior convictions of a nonparty defense witness as any prejudice suffered by the witness was irrelevant. Moore v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 264 (Miss. Dec. 21, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 787 So. 2d 1282, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 164 (Miss. 2001).

The defendant was entitled to reversal of his conviction and a remand for a new trial with instructions to allow the introduction of evidence of the prior burglary conviction of a witness for the state for impeachment purposes; the state's argument that the witness was its primary one any prejudice to him would unduly prejudice the state's case was flawed since the rule exists to protect testifying parties from being unduly prejudiced through admission of prior convictions but, since the defendant was not a party, any prejudice to him was irrelevant. Young v. State, 731 So. 2d 1145 (Miss. 1999).

Notice.

The admission into evidence of a previous conviction of the defendant that was more than 10 years old was error, notwithstanding the court's determination that the defendant was aware of the existence of the conviction and had been orally advised by the prosecution of the prosecution's intention to use it, as the state did not comply with the technical requirements of the rule with respect to notice; however, the error was harmless. Bishop v. State, 771 So. 2d 397 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Pending indictments.

In a prosecution for distribution of cocaine, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow the defendant to question a confidential informant regarding whether she had any pending indictments as the record contained no evidence of any such pending indictments and the informant's character and past were adequately put before the jury. Scott v. State, 796 So. 2d 959 (Miss. 2001).

Previous convictions.

Evidence of defendant's prior felony conviction was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 609 as defendant was convicted well past the ten-year limit of Miss. R. Evid. 609(b). Furthermore, it was clear that the probative value of the prior conviction was completely overshadowed by the prejudicial effect that it had. Williams v. State, 37 So. 3d 717 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Where defendant failed to proffer his testimony, defendant was procedurally barred from arguing that the trial court's ruling, which would have allowed the State to impeach defendant with a prior burglary conviction pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B), resulted in defendant's inability to put on a defense. McClellan v. State, 34 So. 3d 548 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because his arguments regarding the impeachment of witnesses were without merit; although the exact date of his conviction was not given, a sheriff's conviction was over 30 years old at the time of trial and was thus subject to the time limits of Miss. R. Evid. 609(b). Further, another witness's kidnapping conviction was over 40 years old and was thus subject to the time limitations contained in R. 609(b). Ross v. State, 22 So. 3d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Although defendant asked the court to apply the plain error doctrine, the court did not find that the State's line of questioning as to what prior convictions defendant had substantially affected his right to a fair trial when he openly admitted that he had a record of multiple convictions. Butler v. State, 16 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

When defendant introduced his record of prior convictions on his own initiative during direct examination, he effectively denied the trial court the opportunity to perform the appropriate balancing test under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B) and 403 so that it could determine whether the prior convictions constituted admissible evidence, plus when the State cross-examined defendant about his prior convictions, defense counsel failed to object; the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the State to question defendant about his prior convictions. Butler v. State, 16 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where defendant was charged with aggravated assault for firing a gun at the brother of his ex-girlfriend, the trial court did not err in precluding defendant from impeaching the brother with a prior conviction that was more than 10 years old. While defendant argued that the brother's conviction for possessing a firearm was probative because the brother denied threatening defendant or possessing a firearm on the day of the shooting, defendant confused the issue because the use of prior convictions was permissible to impeach the credibility of a witness but was not permissible to show a victim's propensity to violence when defendant alleged self-defense; because the conviction was not particularly probative of honesty and the event occurred in the presence of numerous witnesses, the brother's testimony was not so central to proof of defendant's guilt that the trial court's decision amounted to an abuse of discretion. McKinney v. State, 26 So. 3d 1065 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 48 (Miss. 2010).

In defendant's trial on a charge of aggravated assault regarding his stabbing of the woman with whom he lived, the trial court erred in permitting the State to elicit details of defendant's prior conviction for shooting a woman years earlier because, although prior convictions could be used to impeach a criminal defendant, the details of defendant's prior conviction were not used to impeach his testimony. Defendant clearly stated to the jury that he no longer carried a pistol because he was a convicted felon, and the State had already introduced evidence of defendant's prior conviction; as such, there was no need to impeach defendant's testimony on this issue, and the prosecutor's line of questioning into the details of defendant's prior conviction was inadmissible evidence. Thomas v. State, 19 So. 3d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 485 (Miss. 2009).

In a prosecution for selling cocaine to an undercover informant, defendant's prior conviction for possessing cocaine within 1,500 feet of a school was admissible in accordance with Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) with respect to intent as well as Miss. R. Evid. 609 to impeach defendant's claim of a set-up and law enforcement conspiracy. The trial judge conducted a Peterson analysis and a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test on the record. Young v. State, 13 So. 3d 339 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Although a trial court abused its discretion when it denied defendant the opportunity to re-cross-examine a victim about the victim's probation revocation, the error was harmless because defendant was allowed an extensive opportunity to impeach the victim regarding the victim's drug use and criminal history; the jury also heard evidence that the victim was smoking marijuana on the day of the shooting. Moore v. State, 1 So. 3d 871 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 59 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's criminal case, the trial court did not err in not allowing impeachment evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 609(b) because the witness's burglary conviction was 26 years old at the time defendant sought to use it for impeachment. Additionally, evidence of the 26-year-old conviction was not probative of that witness's credibility or an unfounded assertion that he was working as an informant for law enforcement. Vickers v. State, 994 So. 2d 200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 675 (Miss. 2008).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of aggravated assault and rape was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1)(B) because evidence of a prior conviction was admitted when he took the stand in his own defense; thus, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the state to question defendant about the prior conviction after defendant had volunteered such information. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that defendant's prior convictions for armed robbery and possession of cocaine, which would be referred to only as an unnamed felony because of the similarity with the current offense, would be admissible for impeachment purposes under Miss. R. Evid. 609 because: (1) defendant's credibility would be central to the case; and (2) the probative value of the prior convictions outweighed their prejudicial effect. McCoy v. State, 954 So. 2d 479 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in failing to allow the company to cross-examine the logging truck driver's safety expert as to his misdemeanor convictions for lack of safety; the witness was proffered as an expert on the basis that he had been "driving trucks for a number of years," and therefore, the jury should have been allowed to hear testimony elicited on cross-examination regarding his record of driving trucks during that period of time. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant's prior conviction of shooting into an occupied dwelling into evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 609 because he opened the door to the state's questions concerning the conviction, as he testified that he did not get angry with his loved ones and that he, at best, simply walked away if he started getting angry; the prior conviction involved defendant's shooting into his ex-girlfriend's house. White v. State, 962 So. 2d 728 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant was charged with drug offenses stemming from a transaction with a confidential informant, impeachment evidence of the informant's prior conviction for possession of a controlled substance was excluded by Miss. R. Evid. 609(b). The informant's testimony was not contradicted by any prior statements. Gray v. State, 921 So. 2d 393 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Finding against the company in the driver's action for damages was improper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 609 where the trial court erred in excluding an expert's misdemeanor convictions. The expert was thus allowed to testify as an expert on safety, opining that the company was unsafe in its practice while simultaneously precluding the company from cross-examining the expert on his own personal record of safety directly related to his alleged area of expertise. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 108 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 7, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 961 So. 2d 741, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 192 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In an aggravated assault case, a court erred by admitting evidence of defendant's prior aggravated assault conviction because the State's argument was that defendant did not act in self-defense in the current instance because his prior conviction for assault evidenced a lack of intent to act in self-defense. That line of logic represented precisely the sort of unfair prejudice prohibited by Miss. R. Evid. 404 and Miss. R. Evid. 609. Walker v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 728 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 11, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 936 So. 2d 424, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in allowing evidence of defendant's prior convictions to come into evidence as defendant had already testified to the fact that he had prior convictions. Hall v. State, 925 So. 2d 856 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 182 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not err by not allowing evidence of a witness's prior conviction under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1), as the evidence came in that the witness was a drug user and the state supreme court had stated that any prejudicial effect of a witness's prior conviction was irrelevant if the witness was not a party. Keys v. State, 909 So. 2d 757 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), remanded by 930 So. 2d 1263, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 1034 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant voluntarily waived his right to testify after being informed that his prior embezzlement conviction could be used against him for impeachment purposes; while defendant's enthusiasm for testifying might have suffered a chilling effect upon being advised by the trial judge that his embezzlement conviction could be used against him for impeachment purposes, that was the reality of the adversarial system. Additionally, as the impeaching crime of embezzlement was a Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(2) crime involving dishonesty or false statements, no balancing analysis was required for the admission of that prior conviction; thus, the trial court did not err in finding that the prior conviction would be admissible if defendant decided to testify. Jackson v. State, 910 So. 2d 658 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 904 So. 2d 184, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 402 (Miss. 2005).

While trial court erred in admitting evidence of defendant's prior convictions due to the similarity to the crime for which he was being tried, the error was harmless given other evidence including defendant's confession to the crime. Triplett v. State, 881 So. 2d 303 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a depraved-heart murder case, as the prior bad acts evidence was introduced by defendant himself through his direct examination, any objection he may have had concerning its entry into evidence was waived. Further, defendant did not object to the admissibility of this conviction until the State cross-examined him and there was nothing unduly prejudicial in the way the prosecutor cross-examined defendant. Harris v. State, 861 So. 2d 1003 (Miss. 2003).

Where the prosecuting attorney initially framed the prosecutor's motion to admit evidence of a prior conviction as being brought under Miss. R. Evid. 609, but the thrust of the prosecutor's argument was that the prior conviction was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), specifically to negate a claim of accident or mistake, and the trial court admitted the evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), defendant's claim that defendant elected not to testify based on the chilling effect of the trial court's erroneous ruling was rejected, as nothing in the issues raised or argued on appeal significantly challenged the trial court's ruling as to the evidence's admissibility under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b); in all events, the ruling based on Miss. R. Evid. 404, even if erroneous, did nothing to improperly interfere with defendant's right to testify in defendant's own defense. Vince v. State, 844 So. 2d 510 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court properly permitted the State to impeach a defense witness in a simple assault case by showing that he was serving a sentence of 30 years without parole; the fact that the witness was serving the equivalent of a life sentence and would have had nothing to lose if convicted of perjury was both relevant and probative, and there was little likelihood of unfair prejudice to defendant because there was no evidence that defendant was associated in any criminal activity or otherwise with the witness. Williams v. State, 797 So. 2d 372 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

State's cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses concerning the witness's prior aggravated assault conviction was, at best, harmless error because the testimony of the impeached witness was consistent with the stories of two other witnesses and the witness's testimony could not be of much help to defendant. Armstead v. State, 805 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In the prosecution of an inmate for assault on law enforcement officers, the state was properly permitted to introduce evidence that a defense witness was serving a term of 30 years imprisonment without parole since the fact that the witness was serving the equivalent of a life term without parole and would have nothing to lose if he should be convicted of perjury was both relevant and probative as to his credibility and bias. Williams v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 56 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 13, 2001), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 797 So. 2d 372, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 243 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for unlawful touching of a minor for lustful purposes, the defendant's prior conviction for grand larceny was properly introduced into evidence as relevant to his credibility as a witness. Lawler v. State, 770 So. 2d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Shoplifting is not a crimen falsi (i.e., a crime involving dishonesty or false statement) and, therefore, is not automatically admissible under subsection (a)(2). Laird v. State, 755 So. 2d 489 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The court did not abuse its discretion in granting the state's motion in limine to prevent the defense from cross-examining a witness regarding two offenses to which he had plead guilty, namely burglary and grand larceny, since such crimes are not crimes of falsehood. Bennett v. State, 738 So. 2d 300 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine, the court did not err in ruling that the defendant would be subject to cross examination about his prior felony convictions for robbery and burglary if he testified since such convictions could be used for impeachment purposes. Seals v. State, 740 So. 2d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The court properly allowed the introduction of evidence about the defendant's prior conviction for credit card fraud where the defendant, by his own admission, found a credit card and used it to purchase a television, a VCR, a radio, a ring, and a watch. Booker v. State, 716 So. 2d 1064 (Miss. 1998).

Defendant's prior convictions for petty larceny, shoplifting and gambling could not be used for impeachment purposes, as they were not properly considered crimes involving dishonesty or false statement. Blackman v. State, 659 So. 2d 583 (Miss. 1995).

A burglary conviction is not ordinarily admissible under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule; convictions under this rule should be limited to crimes in the nature of crimen falsi. Townsend v. State, 605 So. 2d 767 (Miss. 1992).

Sentencing.

This rule does not apply to convictions used for the purpose of enhancing charges or sentences. Fielder v. State, 749 So. 2d 1248 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Sexual offenses.

In a proceeding in which the plaintiff sought to establish the identity of her child's father so as to participate in the wrongful death settlement arising from the death of the putative father, the question of the plaintiff's committing a crime by having sex with a minor was inadmissible as she was not convicted for any such crime. Brown v. Jackson, 711 So. 2d 878 (Miss. 1998).

Illustrative cases.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow testimony of a narcotics investigator relating to illegal gaming and drug activity at a bar, which was the establishment that a defendant was charged with robbing at gunpoint, because the proffered testimony revealed nothing other than a collateral matter and was irrelevant under Miss. R. Evid. 608 and 609. Croft v. State, 992 So. 2d 1151 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to question defendant regarding a prior incident during which his ex-girlfriend's face was cut during an altercation because defendant was arrested as a result of the incident, as the arrest indicated that the incident was a "bad act." White v. State, 962 So. 2d 728 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce evidence of a conviction that was over 10 years old because defense counsel elicited testimony from defendant's sister indicating that defendant was a peaceable, law-abiding citizen; the prosecution was entitled to rebut the sister's testimony with evidence of defendant's 1980 conviction for possession of stolen property. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant should have been granted a continuance to discover past criminal "charges" against the confidential informant; however, any error was harmless as the jury was informed of illegal activity by the informant (cocaine use), and was sufficiently apprised of her questionable trustworthiness. Further, under Miss. R. Evid. 609, the charges were inadmissible for impeachment because there was no showing the charges resulted in convictions and because, even assuming the charges had resulted in conviction, the age and limited probative value of the charges rendered them inadmissible. Fuller v. State, 910 So. 2d 674 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

There is at least the possibility that a trial court's erroneous decision that a prior conviction may be used to impeach a testifying defendant may serve as such a deterrent that it will be seen as reversible error. On the other hand, once the trial court rules that a custodial statement is admissible, the State has the opportunity to offer it into evidence without regard to whether defendant takes the stand. Thus, where the trial court found defendant's statement bore directly on the central issue of defendant's guilt, rather than for some alternate and limited purpose such as witness impeachment, the trial court's ruling could not be seen as having had any chilling effect on defendant in deciding whether or not to take the stand. Bernardini v. State, 872 So. 2d 690 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant testified on direct examination that defendant had not sold drugs, that defendant was not a drug dealer, and that defendant had a prior drug conviction that had been overturned, defendant opened the door to the State's admission for use as impeachment evidence of three prior videotaped drug sales for which defendant had been charged. Pulliam v. State, 873 So. 2d 124 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

The court did not err in refusing to allow defense counsel to cross-examine a state witness regarding his prior felony burglary convictions as burglary does not involve dishonesty or false statement and the defense failed to present anything of probative value regarding the burglary convictions and their relation to the instant case. Mitchell v. State, 792 So. 2d 192 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 933, 122 S. Ct. 1308, 152 L. Ed. 2d 218 (2002).

The trial court did not err in refusing to allow the introduction of evidence regarding a 1981 conviction of a defense witness for embezzlement pursuant to the time limitation contained in the rule. Baine v. River Oaks Convalescent Ctr., 791 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The trial court did not err in not allowing the defense to impeach a prosecution witness relative to evidence of a prior conviction for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute on the basis that that the prejudicial effect outweighed the probative value of the evidence. Keys v. State, 739 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing the state to question the defendant regarding his prior conviction for second degree armed robbery, where the trial judge made an on-the-record determination that the probative value of the prior conviction outweighed any prejudicial effect. Lenox v. State, 727 So. 2d 753 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, the court properly allowed a prior armed robbery conviction and a prior purse snatching conviction into evidence where the prosecution made a prima facie showing that the conduct giving rise to the prior convictions was such that it reasonably bore upon the defendant's propensity for truthfulness and the trial judge then satisfied the requirements of subsection (a)(1) and made the appropriate on-the-record findings. McGowan v. State, 726 So. 2d 217 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for felonious driving under the influence and negligently causing the death of a pedestrian, the court committed reversible error when it refused to allow the defendant to present evidence of three prior burglary convictions of the state's key witness where the witness faced three counts of burglary, he cooperated with the state and was sentenced only to probation, and his testimony was the only evidence that the defendant drove negligently. Zoerner v. State, 725 So. 2d 811 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court did not err by excluding extortion conviction of deceased sheriff whose prior testimony during guilt phase of trial was read during defendant's resentencing trial. Wilcher v. State, 697 So. 2d 1087 (Miss. 1997), reh'g denied, 697 So. 2d 1191 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1053, 118 S. Ct. 705, 139 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1998), reh'g denied, — U.S. —, 118 S. Ct. 1181, 140 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1998).

Defendant opened the door for admissibility of evidence of a prior conviction for distribution of cocaine, and therefore evidence was properly introduced as normal impeachment evidence to rebut false statements made by defendant while testifying at trial. Johnson v. State, 666 So. 2d 499 (Miss. 1995).

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction for sexual battery, of touching a child for lustful purposes, should not have been admitted, because it was manifestly prejudicial and mere reference to it during trial prejudiced jury irreparably. Hopkins v. State, 639 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. 1993).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing prosecution to bring out the fact of defendant's armed robbery conviction for purpose of impeaching his credibility as a witness in his own behalf; State successfully demonstrated that the prior conviction involved stealing of another's money and personal property and had some intrinsic probative value regarding defendant's propensity for truthfulness while under oath. Bogard v. State, 624 So. 2d 1313 (Miss. 1993).

Trial judge erred in denying armed robbery defendant's motion in limine to prohibit State from introducing evidence of his prior rape convictions; defendant was manifestly prejudiced because his own testimony in support of his alibi defense was kept from the jury by his fear of the prejudicial effect of his prior convictions, and there was no showing of any countervailing probative value. Jordan v. State, 592 So. 2d 522 (Miss. 1991).

Trial court did not err in allowing introduction of robbery defendant's prior conviction for armed robbery; since State had two witnesses, credibility of defendant's testimony was crucial and should have been known to jury to help them reach a verdict. Hawkins v. State, 538 So. 2d 1204 (Miss. 1989).

Defendant's prior conviction for rape should have been kept out of evidence; since his only defense to pending rape charge was alibi, prior conviction put his alibi testimony in direct conflict to the finding of another jury, and his testimony was thus futile. Johnson v. State, 525 So. 2d 809 (Miss. 1988).

Rule 610. Religious beliefs or opinions.

Evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion is not admissible for the purpose of showing that by reason of their nature his credibility is impaired or enhanced.

COMMENT

This rule prohibits impeaching a witness by questioning him concerning his religious beliefs and opinions. It does not prohibit questioning him as to those beliefs and opinions when testing his bias or interest.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Religion as motivation.

Closing argument.

Where defendant was charged with sexual battery against his daughter and presented no evidence that he was sexually overcome by her, defendant was not entitled to refer to a biblical passage in his closing argument for an evidentiary purpose of attacking his daughter's credibility by using the conduct of Lot's daughters from the Bible to show that a daughter can sexually overcome her father. Wilson v. State, 72 So. 3d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 71 So. 3d 1207, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 513 (Miss. 2011).

Religion as motivation.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting tire manufacturer's employees who were testifying on behalf of the plaintiff in a products liability suit against the tire manufacturer to state that the reason they were testifying on behalf of the plaintiff was because their religious beliefs led them to believe it was the right thing to do; further, the tire manufacturer had opened the door to the employees testimony as to their motivation by referring to them as disgruntled employees. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co. v. Tuckier, 826 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 820, 123 S. Ct. 97, 154 L. Ed. 2d 27 (2002).

Rule 611. Mode and order of interrogation and presentation.

(a) Control by court. The court shall exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth, (2) avoid needless consumption of time, and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment.

(b) Scope of cross-examination. Cross-examination shall not be limited to the subject matter of the direct examination and matters affecting the credibility of the witness.

(c) Leading questions. Leading questions should not be used on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop his testimony. Ordinarily, leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions.

COMMENT

Subsection (a) is a verbatim restatement of M.R.C.P. 43(b)(1). Subsection (a) gives the court the discretion to control the order of interrogation. The three principles underlying an orderly presentation of evidence are effectiveness in determining the issues, avoidance of needless waste of time, and protection of the witness from harassment and embarrassment. Subsection (a) is designed in part to give the judge the discretion to determine whether presentation of the evidence must be in question-and-answer form or whether it may be in narrative form. See FRE 611, Advisory Committee's Notes.

Subsection (b) reflects prior Mississippi practice. Subsection (b) permits a wide-open cross-examination. In this respect Mississippi follows the English rule. See Weinstein's Evidence ¶¶ 611[02-03]. Under this wide-open cross-examination any matter may be probed that is relevant. Nonetheless, under Rule 611(a) the judge may still limit cross-examination to serve one of the purposes therein stated.

Rule 611(c) discusses the use of leading questions. It reflects common law practice. Leading questions as a general rule should not be used on direct examination since they suggest the answers the attorney wants from his own witness. This gives an unfair advantage to the party who is presenting his case. However, the judge has some discretion in allowing leading questions. Thus, leading questions are frequently used in developing preliminary matters. See Seals v. St. Regis Paper Company, 236 So.2d 388 (Miss. 1970); Thomas v. State, 217 So.2d 287 (Miss. 1969). When determining whether a child is competent to testify, a judge might also allow leading questions. See Allen v. State, 384 So.2d 605 (Miss. 1980). Other instances may occur with the witness whose recollection is exhausted and with the witness who has communication difficulties.

The last sentence gives a party the right of cross-examination when questioning witnesses who are hostile or when questioning an adverse party or someone identified with an adverse party. The issue of who may be considered as "identified with an adverse party" was confronted in Harris v. Buxton T.V., Inc., 460 So.2d 828 (Miss. 1984).

The Advisory Committee is cognizant of the Harris decision but considers the interpretation and application of the phrase "identified with the adverse party" to be broader than that expressed in Harris.

Assuming the witness is deemed sufficiently "identified with an adverse party," the use of leading questions falls within the area of control by the judge over "the mode and order of interrogating witnesses. . . ." Accordingly, the last sentence of 611(c) is phrased in words of discretion rather than command.

The rule also conforms to tradition in making the use of leading questions on cross-examination a matter of right. The purpose of the qualification "ordinarily" is to furnish a basis for denying the use of leading questions when the cross-examination is cross-examination in form only and not in fact, as, for example, the "cross-examination" of a party by his own counsel after being called by the opponent (savoring more of re-direct) or of an insured defendant who proves to be friendly to the plaintiff.

Bias.

Evidence that defendant had had an affair with witness's wife was probative of witness' bias and hostility toward defendant, and should have been allowed on cross-examination. Sayles v. State, 552 So. 2d 1383 (Miss. 1989).

Child witness.

In a prosecution for the rape of a 12-year-old girl, leading questions asked of the victim were proper where the victim testified as to the details of the event without any difficulty, but testified using terms in the vernacular, and the leading questions only clarified the terms used in order to obtain the anatomically correct terminology. Gandy v. State, 788 So. 2d 812 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The classic example of a situation ripe for leading questions on direct is where the witness is a child. Smith v. State, 733 So. 2d 793 (Miss. 1999).

Trial court did not err in allowing State to use leading questions in examining child victim of sexual abuse; leading questions were only used to develop victim's testimony and set stage for demonstration with dolls, and leading questions were by no means excessive in light of child's age. Jones v. State, 606 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. 1992).

Control by court.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the state's objection to defendant's cross-examination of victim relating to her failure to notice defendant's gunshot wound, where she had previously stated that she did not notice the wound; although Miss. R. Evid. 611(b) permits wide-open cross-examination, Miss. R. Evid. 611(a) provides the trial court the discretion necessary "to exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence," which includes preventing needless consumption of time in the proceedings. McLaurin v. State, 31 So. 3d 1263 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Expert witness.

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence plaintiff's expert's opinion evidence concerning codes an investigating officer used on the accident report because the expert had been qualified as an expert for accident reconstruction; plaintiff's attorney elicited the expert's testimony concerning the accident report and some of the coded information opened the door for the defense to pursue that line of questioning further. Fleming v. Floyd, 969 So. 2d 881 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by 969 So. 2d 868, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 651 (Miss. 2007).

State was entitled to cross-examine forensic psychologist on the basis of his opinions, including any medical records he considered in forming those opinions, and no medical privilege existed since defendant had placed his mental and emotional condition in issue. Holland v. State, 705 So. 2d 307 (Miss. 1997).

It was not an error for the trial court to grant the prosecution's request to treat a witness as an adverse witness where the witness's statement to police, that the door of the victim's vehicle was closed at the time of the shooting, supported the prosecution's theory that defendant did not act in self-defense in shooting the victim, but the witness's trial testimony, that the victim's vehicle's door was ajar, supported defendant's version of events. Bailey v. State, 952 So. 2d 225 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 166 (Miss. Mar. 1, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 167 (Miss. 2007).

Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's objection to the prosecution's questioning of its witness because the witness, defendant's girlfriend, became hostile during questioning; questioning was relevant for the purpose of impeaching the witness. Questioning was not harassing under Miss. R. Evid. 611(a) because it was not repetitive, no abusive language was used, and it was over in a matter of seconds. Brassfield v. State, 905 So. 2d 754 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant's nephew was called by the State to testify as to what timber was authorized by the victim for cutting, and began to vacillate, the trial judge properly granted the State permission to treat him as a hostile witness and to impeach his trial testimony, since under Miss. R. Evid. 611(c) the trial judge could have found that the nephew was a "witness identified with an adverse party."

Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion under Miss. R. Evid. 611(c) in permitting the prosecution to ask the witness leading questions, as the witness was a potentially hostile witness due to her relationship with defendant as defendant's girlfriend's mother. Neal v. State, 805 So. 2d 520 (Miss. 2002).

Trial court's failure to declare school psychologist a hostile witness was error, where his acts were the predicate for defendant's defense that she had been hypnotized; error was harmless, however, since defense counsel was able to ask psychologist leading questions anyway, resulting in no prejudice to defendant. Alexander v. State, 610 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 1992).

Brakeman of train was a witness identified with defendant railroad, an adverse party, and he was thereby subject to leading questions from plaintiff, and trial judge therefore erred when he failed to designate brakeman as an adverse witness. Slay v. Illinois Cent. G.R.R., 511 So. 2d 875 (Miss. 1987).

In action against city due to water damage, superintendent of meter reading division of city's water department was a person identified with an adverse party, namely the city, and he was thus a person whom plaintiff had the right to cross-examine. Maryland Cas. Co. v. City of Jackson, 493 So. 2d 955 (Miss. 1986).

If defendant is subject to potential liability in substantial part because of actions or omissions of witness, or if conduct of witness plays such an integral part in a transaction or occurrence which gives rise to defendant's potential liability so that defendant would have prima facie a claim for indemnity over against the witness, then that witness is ordinarily sufficiently identified with an adverse party and may be called as an adverse witness and interrogated by leading questions. Harris v. Buxton T.V., Inc., 460 So. 2d 828 (Miss. 1984).

Impeachment.

Defendant's sole reason for attempting to present to the jury evidence of a witness's mental condition — schizophrenia and bipolar illness — was for impeachment purposes; however, the facts of the case supported a finding that, if the trial court had allowed defendant's attorney to cross-examine the witness before the jury about the witness's mental condition, the evidence would not have supported defendant's theory that the witness hallucinated. Thus, the trial court was within its discretion to exclude the evidence because the prejudicial value of the evidence outweighed the probative value. Jackson v. State, 924 So. 2d 531 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 175 (Miss. 2006).

In a prosecution for felony driving under the influence and negligently causing the death of a pedestrian, the court erroneously refused to allow the defendant to present evidence that the state's key witness, whose testimony was largely uncorroborated, had had three prior burglary convictions but received only probation after cooperating with the state; such evidence was proper to impeach the witness' credibility. Zoerner v. State, 725 So. 2d 811 (Miss. 1998).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel's failure to object to the 50 alleged leading questions asked of the victim by the prosecutor constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. Harris v. State, 979 So. 2d 721 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for capital rape in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(1)(b) was proper because, while Miss. R. Evid. 611(c) disallowed the use of leading questions during direct examination, that general prohibition was qualified with the phrase "except as may be necessary to develop the witness's testimony." The classic example of a situation ripe for leading questions on direct was where the witness was a child and thus, the trial court did not err in allowing the leading questions that the State asked the victim. Gordon v. State, 977 So. 2d 420 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Even if the state should not have asked an officer leading questions when the officer was recalled to the stand, there was no showing of any prejudicial effect where one question was asked about his close proximity to defendant during a drug investigation. Walker v. State, 962 So. 2d 39 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 419 (Miss. 2007).

When determining whether a witness is identified with an adverse party for purposes of allowing leading questions under Mississippi R. Evid. 611(c), the trial court should determine from the facts and circumstances of the case whether the witness proposed to be called is one who is identified with the adverse party within the meaning and contemplation of the rule. Parks v. State, 930 So. 2d 383 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 611(c) because the name of the victim's daughter was not an issue at trial and the question on the part of the state was merely to provide a name for the victim's daughter in the development of his testimony concerning how he arrived at the emergency room after being shot; thus, the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection as to leading. Gates v. State, 936 So. 2d 335 (Miss. 2006).

Court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's objection to the prosecution's questioning of its witness because the witness, defendant's girlfriend, became hostile during questioning; questioning was relevant for the purpose of impeaching the witness. Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the prosecution to use leading questions pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 611(c). Brassfield v. State, 905 So. 2d 754 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

When a witness becomes a hostile witness, a trial court clearly does not abuse its discretion in allowing leading questions pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 611(c). Brassfield v. State, 905 So. 2d 754 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in allowing 15-year-old victim to testify through the use of leading questions, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 611(c), in defendant's statutory rape trial; although some leading questions were used in questioning the victim, there was colloquy in the record that revealed that the victim testified, on own accord, to each of the three sexual acts. Hence, defendant's conviction for three counts of statutory rape was upheld. Boggan v. State, 894 So. 2d 581 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 896 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 2005).

Although a few of the questions asked could be considered leading questions, Miss. R. Evid. 611(c), because of the age of the witnesses and the limited manner in which the questions were used, it was doubtful that the trial judge would have disallowed the questions; therefore, defendant would have benefitted little by an objection from counsel. Thus, defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was denied. Barrett v. State, 886 So. 2d 22 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 887 So. 2d 183 (Miss. 2004).

In a malpractice suit against a doctor and a hospital, where one of the doctor's theories of defense was that, if a heating pad was the cause of the patient's injuries, then the hospital was at fault, not him, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding there was sufficient adversity as to the theories of defense for each party to consider them adverse, and in allowing them to ask leading questions of one another's witnesses. Winters v. Wright, 869 So. 2d 357 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not err in allowing leading questions during direct examination because they were only used for the purpose of developing a witness' testimony. Crosby v. State, 856 So. 2d 523 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

The district attorney was properly permitted to examine a witness for the state with leading questions where the witness gave in-court testimony that differed significantly from her pretrial statement. Craft v. State, 764 So. 2d 1253 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a personal injury action in which the plaintiff called the defendant as an adverse witness during his case-in-chief, it was not error for the court to allow defense counsel, over the plaintiff's objection, to ask the defendant leading questions based on her "failure of memory and the passage of time" (the trial occurred 12 1/2 years after the incident at issue) or to then refuse to allow the plaintiff to re-cross-examine her. Nolan v. Brantley, 767 So. 2d 234 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for rape, sexual battery, and burglary, it was not reversible error for the state to ask leading questions of the victim where the victim was an 83 year old woman, who was beaten, raped, and sexually battered by her assailant and who was embarrassed and reluctant to testify about the incident. Price v. State, 749 So. 2d 166 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Rebuttal.

Trial court in medical malpractice action erred in refusing to allow plaintiff's expert witness to offer rebuttal testimony that certain medical treatises refuted by defendant's expert were, indeed, authoritative. Kiddy v. Lipscomb, 628 So. 2d 1355 (Miss. 1993).

Recalling witnesses.

Because the court allowed defendant to recall the State witness during his case-in-chief for inquiry once the defense had laid the proper evidentiary foundation, the trial court did not preclude testimony, but controlled the order of the testimony for the purposes of providing the proper evidentiary foundation for the admission of testimony pursuant to its authority under Miss. R. Evid. 611(a). Robinson v. State, 40 So. 3d 570 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 613 by denying the defense's request to call defendant's girlfriend on surrebuttal after a police investigator testified as a rebuttal witness about a phone conversation she had with the girlfriend because it was very likely that the girlfriend's testimony would not have changed from her original testimony. Fraise v. State, 17 So. 3d 160 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err in not allowing a witness to be recalled; the witness was called to testify on the fourth day of trial as the State's final witness and the decision was made in the interest of efficiency as contemplated by Miss. R. Evid. 611(a)(2). Williams v. State, 994 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 665 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not err by allowing the State to recall a witness to testify, after the witness had already testified on direct and cross, as the State did not call the witness for the purpose of redirect, but rather, a second direct. Also, defendant provided no law that indicated that recalling the witness was improper. Cooper v. State, 911 So. 2d 665 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

There is no hard and fast rule that a witness, once her testimony is complete, cannot be recalled to the stand; that is a matter vested in the sound discretion of the trial court. Ellis v. State, 799 So. 2d 159 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The court exercised reasonable control over the order of interrogating witnesses and there was no abuse where sheriff was recalled to confirm that he took the photos and they corroborated prior testimony regarding the scene of the crime at the time of his arrival and the position and identity of the victim. Robinson v. State, 749 So. 2d 1054 (Miss. 1999).

It was within trial court's discretion to allow prosecution witness to be recalled to the stand for purpose of introducing exhibit into evidence, where was no showing of abuse of discretion nor did defendant allege any prejudice. Ellis v. State, 661 So. 2d 177 (Miss. 1995).

Scope of cross-examination.

Defendant's convictions for manslaughter and rape were proper because a fingerprint expert admitted at trial and during the proffered examination that the FBI had formerly required a 12-point system in order to make a fingerprint identification, but the FBI abandoned that standard in favor of using the scientific methodology of examining the uniqueness of the print itself. The trial court did not improperly limit the cross-examination of the fingerprint expert at trial; defendant's argument that he was unable to sufficiently question the expert about whether the FBI required the use of a 12-point standard to properly identify the owner of a set of prints was without merit, Miss. R. Evid. 611(b). Brown v. State, 999 So. 2d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 44 (Miss. 2009).

Where defendant was convicted for killing his former girlfriend, given his testimony that her male friend had previously threatened him with a gun, whether or not the male friend owned a gun at the time of the alleged threats was relevant because it tended to increase or decrease, however minimally, the probability of the truth of defendant's testimony supporting his defense of self-defense. Therefore, the trial court abused its discretion when it prohibited the question on the male friend's prior gun ownership, even though same was ultimately found to constitute harmless error in the case at bar. Raiford v. State, 907 So. 2d 998 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a capital murder case, the trial court was within its discretion to limit defense counsel's cross-examination of the sheriff during the suppression hearing regarding the content of a co-conspirator's missing statements as everything the co-conspirator told the sheriff was in the sheriff's report, which the defense possessed, and defense counsel's questions exceeded the scope of the suppression hearing by asking the sheriff to testify as to the contents of the conversation. Byrom v. State, 863 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 71, 160 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2004).

Trial court did not err in refusing to allow eastern area annexation objectors to cross-examine the western area annexation objectors because the parties were not in opposition and essentially asserted the same argument that their area should not have been annexed to the city. Prestridge v. City of Petal, 841 So. 2d 1048 (Miss. 2003).

One accused of a crime has the right to broad and extensive cross-examination of the witnesses against him on any material matter as long as the issues are relevant. Kittler v. State, 830 So. 2d 1258 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 830 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Trial court did not err in refusing to allow the defense to cross-examine a Mississippi crime lab expert regarding an ongoing federal investigation as defendant neither made an offer of proof as to what the witness would have testified to or that the testimony would have been relevant to defendant's trial for possession of cocaine. Kittler v. State, 830 So. 2d 1258 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 830 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The trial judge did not err by limiting cross-examination of state's witnesses since (1) the trial judge did not preclude the defendant from asking the questions at issue altogether, but instead asked him to establish a proper predicate for the questions, and (2) the questions did not appear to be relevant to the case. Rochell v. State, 748 So. 2d 103 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for delivery of cocaine in which there was testimony that the defendant sold crack cocaine at a specified address, the court properly permitted cross-examination of the defendant with regard to whether the defendant was living or had ever lived at that address, as such fact would have made it more probable that he was there on the day of the transaction at issue. Ruffin v. State, 724 So. 2d 942 (Ct. App. 1998).

Contrary to his argument on appeal, record revealed that defendant was given wide latitude in his questions and was specifically permitted to question informant about any possible favorable treatment from police. Craft v. State, 656 So. 2d 1156 (Miss. 1995).

Trial court properly prohibited cross-examination on issue of rape victim's virginity, because whether victim was a virgin was irrelevant to whether she was raped. Heflin v. State, 643 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1994).

Prosecution witness' refusal to talk to defendant's attorney prior to trial was not indicative of lack of veracity, and trial judge correctly excluded this evidence as irrelevant. Sayles v. State, 552 So. 2d 1383 (Miss. 1989); Alexander v. State, 610 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 1992).

Time limitations.

Although trial court imposed a time limitation of two and one-half hours for each party to present his and her case, which seemed to be an extraordinarily short period of time for the trial court to consider the important issues of custody, division of property and alimony that were necessary to finally adjudicate the dissolution of a fifteen-year marriage, Miss. R. Evid. 611 permits judges to exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence in order to control the operation of trials and the smooth flow of the litigation process. The fact that the wife was allowed additional time and the husband was not, was not reversible error because the husband did not articulate the prejudice or harm that he would suffer by the trial court's time limitation nor did he move the court for additional time or proffer into the record what evidence he would have presented with additional time. Hammers v. Hammers, 890 So. 2d 944 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 892 So. 2d 824 (Miss. 2005).

The husband's right to due process was not violated when the judge limited the trial in a divorce proceeding to one day where (1) the husband could have requested a continuance, but did not; (2) the husband could have objected on the record to the time limit, but did not; (3) the record showed that the husband's counsel indicated a readiness to go forward at the end of the wife's case-in-chief after the husband's motion for a directed verdict was overruled by the trial court; and (4) there was no indication in the record from the husband that the time limits placed on the trial were problematic. Moore v. Moore, 757 So. 2d 1043 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Illustrative cases.

In a wrongful death action, the trial court erred in denying two heirs the right to participate fully in the trial; the heirs were denied the right to question the deceased child's mother, an employee, and the employee's coworker, the only witnesses who were present when the motor vehicle accident occurred. Dooley v. Byrd (In re Dooley), 64 So. 3d 951 (Miss. 2011).

Where defendant was charged with sexual battery against his daughter and presented no evidence that he was sexually overcome by her, defendant was not entitled to refer to a biblical passage in his closing argument for an evidentiary purpose of attacking his daughter's credibility by using the conduct of Lot's daughters from the Bible to show that a daughter can sexually overcome her father. Wilson v. State, 72 So. 3d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 71 So. 3d 1207, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 513 (Miss. 2011).

Trial judge's ruling that witnesses could be called only once to the witness stand violated the judge's discretion under Miss. R. Evid. 611(a) because the judge forced the defendant to present evidence by questioning two of the defendant's witnesses before the plaintiff finished presenting the plaintiff's case. Deviney Constr. Co. v. Marble, 60 So. 3d 797 (Miss. 2011).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by ruling that the State could ask an undercover officer if he could identify the person that sold him drugs when the officer was recalled by the State during an identification hearing, because defense counsel was given ample opportunity both in the presence of the jury and during voir dire to question the officer concerning the identification of defendant. Therefore, defendant was not denied his right to cross-examine the undercover police office in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 611. Johnson v. State, 908 So. 2d 100 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's brief testimony regarding her church activities was proper in as much as it was used to relax her at the beginning of her testimony and was not used to address her specific religious beliefs nor to bolster an image of credibility. Sherman v. Keith, 737 So. 2d 411 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Rule 612. Refreshing the memory of a witness.

If a witness uses a writing, recording or object to refresh his memory for the purpose of testifying, either (1) while testifying, or (2) before testifying, if the court in its discretion determines it is necessary in the interests of justice, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing, recording or object produced at the hearing, to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce into evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness. If it is claimed that the writing, recording or object contains matters not related to the subject matter of the testimony, the court shall examine the writing, recording or object in camera, excise any portions not related, and order delivery of the remainder to the party entitled thereto. Any portion withheld over objections shall be preserved and made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal. If a writing, recording or object is not produced or delivered pursuant to order under this rule, the court shall make any order justice requires, except that in criminal cases when the prosecution elects not to comply, the order shall be one striking the testimony or, if the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, declaring a mistrial. (Amended effective August 12, 1992.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective August 12, 1992, Rule 612 was amended to allow recordings and objects to be used to refresh a witness's memory. 603-605 So. 2d XXIV (West Miss. Cas. 1993).

COMMENT

Rule 612, while reflecting existing federal practice, deviates in some respects from pre-rule Mississippi practice. The purpose of Rule 612 is to stimulate memory in order to ascertain credible evidence.

If the witness uses a writing, recording or object (e.g., a photograph) while testifying, the adversary has the right to see such writing, recording or object, to cross-examine on the basis of these items, and to have the relevant portions introduced into evidence. If, on the other hand, the witness uses such items to refresh his memory before testifying, then it is within the trial court's discretion to allow the adversary to see them.

Additionally, the rule provides for an offer of proof when the trial court withholds certain portions of a writing, recording or object from the cross-examiner's use. The rule also provides sanctions for the occasions when such items are not produced pursuant to a court order.

The pre-rule Mississippi practice of using a writing to refresh a witness's memory has often been confused with the past recollection recorded exception to the hearsay rule. Prior to the rules, a party who simply wanted to refresh a witness's memory often felt compelled to satisfy the foundation requirements of the hearsay exception. Rule 612 eliminates this state of confusion and permits any writing, recording or object to be used, regardless of whether it is in compliance with the foundation requirements of the hearsay exception.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Generally.
Prior inconsistent statement.
Writing requirement.

Generally.

Two defendants' convictions for depraved-heart murder were appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 612 because even though any testimony that a state witness read from her prior statement was hearsay, the appellate court was unable to say that the trial court's decision regarding the witness's statement prejudiced either defendant; the record contained a great deal of other evidence of their guilt, including other testimony corroborating the witness's testimony. McDowell v. State, 984 So. 2d 1003 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 328 (Miss. 2008).

A necessary predicate for refreshing memory of witness with a writing is that it must appear that witness has no present memory and that present memory may be refreshed from the writing; the writing may be used even though it would not be admissible. Livingston v. State, 525 So. 2d 1300 (Miss. 1988).

Prior inconsistent statement.

A witness's inconsistent prior statement can be used to refresh the witness's memory. Blankenship v. State, 792 So. 2d 1009 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Writing requirement.

Trial court correctly excluded testimony that witness's memory had been refreshed by a conversation with another person; this rule is clearly limited to writing, and the testimony was really an original attempt to introduce inadmissible hearsay through the witness. Eastover Bank for Sav. v. Hall, 587 So. 2d 266 (Miss. 1991).

Rule 613. Prior statements of witnesses.

(a) Examining witness concerning prior statement. In examining a witness concerning a prior statement made by him, whether written or not, the statement need not be shown nor its contents disclosed to him at that time, but on request the same shall be shown or disclosed to opposing counsel.

(b) Extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statement of witness. Extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement by a witness is not admissible unless the witness is afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same and the opposite party is afforded an opportunity to interrogate him thereon, or the interests of justice otherwise require. This provision does not apply to admissions of a party-opponent as defined in Rule 801(d)(2).

COMMENT

Subsection (a) abolishes the requirement that a cross-examiner, prior to questioning the witness about a prior statement in writing, must first show this writing to the witness. This requirement was developed in The Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 284, 129 Eng.Rep. 976 (1820). Although it was abolished in Britain and later in our federal courts, the rule lingered on in Mississippi.

This rule explicitly applies to both written and oral statements.

The provision allowing disclosure to counsel is designed to protect against unwarranted insinuations that a statement has been made when the fact is to the contrary.

The rule does not defeat the application of Rule 1002 relating to the production of the original when the contents of a writing are sought to be proved. Nor does it defeat the application of M.R.C.P. 26(b)(3), entitling a person on request to a copy of his own statement, though the operation of the latter may be suspended temporarily.

Subsection (b) preserves the foundation requirement in The Queen's Case with some modifications when impeachment is by extrinsic evidence. The traditional insistence that the attention of the witness be directed to the statement on cross-examination is relaxed in favor of simply providing the witness an opportunity to explain and the opposite party an opportunity to examine the statement, with no specification of any particular time or sequence. Under this procedure, several collusive witnesses can be examined before disclosure of a joint prior inconsistent statement.

In order to allow for such eventualities as the witness becoming unavailable by the time the statement is discovered, a measure of discretion is conferred upon the judge.

The rule does not apply to impeachment by evidence of prior inconsistent conduct by virtue of the principles of expression unius. The use of inconsistent statements to impeach a hearsay declaration is treated in Rule 806.

Admission by party opponent.

Subsection (b) of this rule does not apply to admissions of a party-opponent as defined in M.R.E. 801(d)(2). Ratcliff v. State, 752 So. 2d 435 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Admission of prior inconsistent statements.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit a victim's police statement into evidence, despite defendant's claim the statement was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b), because the victim admitted on cross-examination that his police statement erroneously identified someone else, instead of defendant, as the person who had hit him in the face; despite refusing to allow extrinsic evidence of the victim's prior inconsistent statement, the circuit court allowed defendant to cross-examine the victim regarding the statement for impeachment purposes. Jones v. State, 64 So. 3d 1033 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

On appeal from her convictions for felonious child abuse, the appellate court found that there had been substantial testimony before the jury concerning prior inconsistent statements by the victim and therefore, an excluded exhibit was cumulative of other evidence and defendant suffered no prejudice from the failure to admit the extrinsic evidence, Miss. R. Evid. 613(b). Clark v. State, 40 So. 3d 531 (Miss. 2010).

On appeal from her convictions for felonious child abuse, the appellate court found that there had been substantial testimony before the jury concerning prior inconsistent statements by the victim and therefore, an excluded exhibit was cumulative of other evidence and defendant suffered no prejudice from the failure to admit the extrinsic evidence, Miss. R. Evid. 613(b). Clark v. State, 40 So. 3d 531 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not err when it denied a mistrial based on the prosecutor's comments on defendant's right to remain silent because at trial, defendant testified to a different sequence of events than he originally told detectives after his arrest, claiming the defenses of self-defense and heat-of-passion manslaughter; he put his credibility in issue by taking the stand and testifying to a different scenario than the one he provided previously to law enforcement. Therefore, the prosecutor's questions upon cross-examination were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 613 to show that defendant's prior statements were inconsistent with his statements at trial and to inquire about the novelty of the new sequence of events stated at trial. Robinson v. State, 40 So. 3d 570 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's trial on charges of sexual batttery and child fondling, the trial court did not err in permitting the State to introduce prior statements of the victim's mother in cross-examining her. Because the victim's mother testified that her daughter was lying about the abuse and because, by the time of trial, the mother had abandoned her child and resumed her residence with defendant, the mother's prior statements—including the affidavit that she signed under oath charging defendant with the child molestation of her daughter and her statement that defendant promised her that he would not touch her daughter again—were relevant and admissible. Tate v. State, 20 So. 3d 623 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court erred when it found that evidence of mere drinking, without sufficient proof of intoxication, was so prejudicial as to outweigh its probative value, rendering the evidence inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 403. This analysis incorrectly evaluated a prior inconsistent statement for the truth of the matter it asserted rather than evaluating the probative value of a prior inconsistent statement used to impeach the credibility of the accuser pursuant to Miss. R. Evid.

613. Mendenhall v. State, 18 So. 3d 915 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a statutory rape case, the prior sexual activity of a minor victim was properly excluded from evidence because defendant did not lay a proper predicate under Miss. R. Evid. 613; moreover, the exceptions to Miss. R. Evid. 412 did not apply, and defendant did not comply with the requirements of Rule 412. Ladd v. State, 969 So. 2d 141 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Information contained in the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) report and the justice court's computer print out containing his address was not a statement by defendant, and thus would not qualify as a prior inconsistent statement; therefore, as the two documents in question did not fall under either Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) or Miss. R. Evid. 613(b), the trial court erred in admitting them over defendant's objections, but the errors did not warrant reversal because they did not prejudice defendant. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because the two witnesses admitted making the prior inconsistent statements and explained them, extrinsic evidence of their statements could not be admitted into evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); thus, defendant's claim that he was denied the right to cross-examine the witnesses failed. Davis v. State, 970 So. 2d 164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2007).

Discrepancies in a child's prior statements regarding sexual abuse by defendant, a male relative, were not so damaging to the child's credibility as to have compelled the conclusion that the jury had abused its discretion in finding that she had truthfully related the events of the two encounters with defendant that led to the charges; the examining doctor testified, based on her professional experience, that it was not uncommon for a child sexual abuse victim to give different versions of events when talking to different people because, among other considerations, a child in that situation was often inclined to conceal or even deny matters if the child was made uncomfortable or fearful of the person making the inquiry. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Detective's testimony regarding statements given previously by a witness in an armed robbery case were admissible to impeach the witness as to the identity of the perpetrators; therefore, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony. Quinn v. State, 873 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 873 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in refusing to admit a witness's unsworn affidavit to impeach his trial testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b) because there was no contradiction between the affidavit and the witness' trial testimony regarding the manner in which he ejected defendant and the victim from a nightclub; however, the trial court erred in allowing an officer to read the statement into evidence. Everett v. State, 835 So. 2d 118 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The trial court committed no error by refusing to admit a prior statement into evidence where the witness admitted making the prior inconsistent statement, he did not deny it nor claim not to remember it, he frankly stated he was at a loss to explain why he had made the statement to the police, and he was extensively examined as to the inconsistencies and was cooperative. Shelton v. State, 728 So. 2d 105 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Once a witness "explains" a prior inconsistent statement by admitting it, the statement cannot be admitted into evidence. Conner v. State, 632 So. 2d 1239 (Miss. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 927, 115 S. Ct. 314, 130 L. Ed. 2d 276 (1994).

Availability to opposing counsel.

The trial court erred when it failed to make the prosecution give the defense a transcription of a statement previously obtained from a witness before using the statement to impeach the witness; however, since nothing new was gleaned from the use of the statement, the error was harmless. Jones v. State, 710 So. 2d 870 (Miss. 1998).

Impeachment.

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because his argument that he should have been allowed to impeach a witness with a prior inconsistent statement that she made to an investigator was without merit since the witness admitted to making the prior inconsistent statements. Once a witness explained a prior inconsistent statement by admitting it, extrinsic evidence of the statement could not be admitted into evidence, Miss. R. Evid. 613(a), (b). Ross v. State, 22 So. 3d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court violated defendant's right of confrontation by prohibiting defendant's impeachment of sole eyewitness with his prior inconsistent oral statement because the court's analysis incorrectly evaluated the prior inconsistent statement for the truth of matter it asserted rather than evaluating the probative value of the prior inconsistent statement used to impeach credibility of the accuser under Miss. R. Evid. 613(a). Mendenhall v. State, 18 So. 3d 915 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Circuit court did not err in permitting the impeachment of the accomplice where he made a number of denials and was evasive in his responses to the prosecutor; there was a rational theory under which his prior testimony could lead to a different conclusion from his testimony during defendant's trial. Ames v. State, 17 So. 3d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 433 (Miss. 2009).

Where defendant was charged with drug offenses stemming from a transaction with a confidential informant, impeachment evidence of the informant's prior conviction for possession of a controlled substance was excluded. The informant's testimony was not contradicted by any prior statements. Gray v. State, 921 So. 2d 393 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The state improperly cross-examined witnesses on prior inconsistent statements where no evidence was ever presented to prove that any of the alleged prior statements had ever actually been made. Flowers v. State, 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

Testimony by a witness that he decided to become a confidential informant because he needed the money could be an indication of bias or prejudice in favor of the state. Boyd v. State, 767 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where a witness to a murder initially indicated a lack of any knowledge of the assailant, apparently out of fear for her safety, but was then taken to police headquarters and gave a formal statement in which she claimed to be able to identify the defendant as the shooter and also testified at trial that the defendant was the shooter, her prior inconsistent statement at the scene was admissible to impeach her credibility. Brown v. State, 764 So. 2d 463 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for delivery of cocaine in which there was testimony that the defendant sold crack cocaine at a specified address and in which the defendant denied ever living at that address, the prosecution was properly allowed to impeach the defendant with his prior inconsistent statements in which he gave that address as his address. Ruffin v. State, 724 So. 2d 942 (Ct. App. 1998).

Trial court's exclusion of statement as hearsay was error, because it was a prior inconsistent statement that was not being offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, statement was being offered as circumstantial evidence from which jury could infer that trial testimony of declarant was unreliable. Hall v. State, 691 So. 2d 415 (Miss. 1997).

Opportunity to explain or deny statement.

Criminal, in his only sworn statement to the trial court, had testified that he had received a key to the victim's apartment from an apartment manager, and that in later depositions he refused to subject himself to cross-examination; testimony given by the criminal in his deposition that he knew the manager, had knowledge of other apartments in the complex, and had knowledge of a master key that would unlock all units including the unit in question, meant that the parties should have been given an opportunity to explore those matters. Doe v. Stegall, 900 So. 2d 363 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 898 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 2005).

Where defendant failed to give a witness an opportunity to deny or explain an inconsistency in an unsworn affidavit given to police regarding his location during a shooting, a trial court properly ruled that the statement was inadmissible.

Everett v. State, 835 So. 2d 118 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a murder and armed robbery case where an eyewitness did not deny making inconsistent statements and was allowed to explain the inconsistencies, there was no reason for the judge to admit the statements, which would have been superfluous or extrinsic evidence; the trial judge properly found that no purpose would be served in admitting the statement which the eyewitness had admitted to giving. Jones v. State, 856 So. 2d 389 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

One of the essential conditions to introducing a prior inconsistent statement for impeachment purposes is that, first, the witness has to be confronted with the statement and permitted to either (a) admit it and be given the opportunity to explain the inconsistency or (b) deny having made such a statement; this requirement is more than merely a technical rule to trip up the unwary. Toche v. Killebrew, 734 So. 2d 276 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

If counsel desires to impeach the testimony of a witness with some pretrial, out-of-court statement that is inconsistent with his trial testimony, it is only fair that witness, while he is on the stand, be asked about it, and be given an opportunity to explain or deny it, and it is manifestly unfair, after witness has been excused, to attempt to offer a pretrial inconsistent statement in the absence of laying any foundation. Whigham v. State, 611 So. 2d 988 (Miss. 1992).

Proper foundation.

There was error in the State's failure to offer proof that three defense witnesses lied during cross-examination. A line of questioning without evidentiary basis was found to be inflammatory and highly prejudicial, and was prejudicial to the case at bar. Flowers v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 67 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 842 So. 2d 531, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 149 (Miss. 2003).

Under this rule, impeachment no longer requires detailed prior examination of party with a disclosure of exact place, time, and persons present on occasion of a prior inconsistent statement; however, a reasonable predicate is still required to be laid. Harris v. State, 704 So. 2d 1286 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 827, 118 S. Ct. 90, 139 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1997).

When a witness fails to acknowledge making a statement, impeacher is obligated to offer proof establishing the making of that statement; trier of fact must have valid means to decide whether witness's claimed lack of recollection is anything more than a "refuge," and by being apprised of prior statement, the trier has such a means. Harrison v. State, 534 So. 2d 175 (Miss. 1988).

Because there was no prior statement from a testifying witness, and there was nothing in the record to establish that defendant agreed with his counsel's representation that he had read the deputies' statements, the court could not conclude that defendant had adopted his attorney's statements as his own. Thus, defendant's attorney's representations were not prior inconsistent statements under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b) and should not have been used for impeachment purposes under these circumstances. Lynch v. State, 24 So. 3d 1043 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Trial court violated Miss. R. Evid. 613(a) when it granted defense counsel permission to ask a shooting victim whether he consumed alcohol on the night of the shooting, but prohibited defense counsel from engaging in a full cross-examination as to whether the victim made a prior statement to the doctor the night of the shooting inconsistent with his trial testimony. The prior inconsistent statement at issue was highly probative of the credibility of the victim's testimony identifying the perpetrator of the crimes charged. Mendenhall v. State, 18 So. 3d 915 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not violate Miss. R. Evid. 613 by denying the defense's request to call defendant's girlfriend on surrebuttal after a police investigator testified as a rebuttal witness about a phone conversation she had with the girlfriend because it was very likely that the girlfriend's testimony would not have changed from her original testimony. Fraise v. State, 17 So. 3d 160 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a capital murder trial, the trial court properly refused to allow defendant to impeach a key state witness with prior inconsistent statements made in her statement to a defense expert and properly refused to admit the expert's statement into evidence; although elements of the statement taken by the expert might have been used to impeach the witness's testimony, introduction of the entire statement as impeachment testimony would have been inappropriate since a crucial element of the defense was undermining the witness's credibility. Ross v. State, 954 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court properly prohibited cross-examination on issue of rape victim's virginity, because whether victim was a virgin was irrelevant to whether she was raped. Heflin v. State, 643 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1994).

Illustrative cases.

Although defendant's mother's proposed testimony was proper extrinsic evidence to impeach the victim's earlier denial of bias against defendant, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 613(b), due to the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, the complained of error in failing to allow that testimony was harmless. Banks v. State, 45 So. 3d 676 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. Defendant failed to show how a witness's prior statement was inconsistent with his trial testimony for purposes of Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); the prior statement, while not identical to his trial testimony, could not be said to have possessed a reasonable tendency to discredit the witness's testimony. Williams v. State, 994 So. 2d 808 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 665 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated domestic violence against his girlfriend was appropriate because his mother's proffered testimony regarding the victim's recollection was consistent with the victim's testimony, and as such defendant's mother's testimony could not have been admissible as prior inconsistent testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1) and Miss. R. Evid. 613(b). Fugate v. State, 951 So. 2d 604 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where the only attempt by the prosecutor to prove that three defense witnesses had lied during cross-examination about statements made to one of the witnesses was to ask one question during redirect that was stricken from the record, there was error in the State's failure to offer proof that the witnesses had lied; the line of questioning concerning false testimony without evidentiary basis was inflammatory and highly prejudicial. Flowers v. State, 842 So. 2d 531 (Miss. 2003).

In defendants' murder trial, where the court limited the questioning by the State after a witness denied having made a statement to his wife and the State was not allowed to conduct further inquiry, the trial court was within its discretion in allowing the State to inquire about an alleged statement by the witness to his wife in an attempt to impeach the witness's prior testimony that the witness had never told anyone that the witness had killed. Caston v. State, 823 So. 2d 473 (Miss. 2002).

Plain error occurred when (1) the state attempted to impeach a witness by asking her whether she made a specific statement, (2) the witness flatly stated that she did not make the statement, and (3) the state failed to either show a basis in fact for the question or to offer a subsequent witness in rebuttal to prove that the witness' prior statement was true and that she lied. Flowers v. State, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 116 (Miss. May 11, 2000), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

Statement of paramour at divorce trial was properly admitted as a prior inconsistent statement, where she testified at trial, her prior statement was inconsistent with her later testimony, her prior statement was given under oath, and husband's attorney was given a fair opportunity to question her concerning her statement. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 639 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 1994).

Trial court did not err in refusing, on relevance grounds, to let manufacturer impeach father of accident victim with a prior inconsistent statement given to his liability insurer. Sperry-New Holland v. Prestage, 617 So. 2d 248 (Miss. 1993).

Rule 614. Calling and interrogation of witnesses by court.

(a) Calling by court. The court may, on its own motion or at the suggestion of a party, call witnesses, and all parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses thus called.

(b) Interrogation by court. The court may interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party.

(c) Objections. Objections to the calling of witnesses by the court or to interrogation by it may be made at the time or at the next available opportunity when the jury is not present.

COMMENT

Rule 614 is, in general, similar to Mississippi practice.

Subsection (a) reflects the recognized authority of the trial judge to call witnesses. When the court calls its own witness, any party has the right to cross-examine that witness.

Subsection (b) codifies the traditional authority, recognized in Mississippi and elsewhere, of the judge to interrogate the witness directly. The judge abuses this authority, however, when he abandons his judicial detachment and assumes an advocacy position. See Jones v. State, 223 Miss. 812, 79 So.2d 273 (1955), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 350 U.S. 869 [76 S.Ct. 116, 100 L.Ed. 770] (1955), rehearing denied, 350 U.S. 919 [76 S.Ct. 192, 100 L.Ed. 805 (1955); Rule 5.08, Uniform Criminal Rules of Circuit Court Practice. The appellate court can in such cases reverse for abuse of discretion. See Breland v. State, 180 Miss. 830, 178 So. 817 (1938).

The case of Griffin v. Tate, 171 Miss. 70, 156 So. 652 (1934), established guidelines for judicial interrogation which may be helpful in setting the parameters of Subsection (b). Griffin mentions by way of illustration some instances in which judicial interrogation would be appropriate: when a nervous witness needs to be calmed or is reluctant to testify or is confused as well as when the witness has important information which has not been elicited from him.

Subsection (c) is an attempt to relieve counsel from the embarrassing position of objecting in the jury's presence to the judge's interrogation. It allows, moreover, sufficient time for counsel to make the objections in time for corrective measures.

Interrogation by court.
Nonjury proceedings.

Interrogation by court.

Defendant's conviction for murder was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 614(b) because the trial judge did not ask questions in the presence of the jury and the trial judge was not advocating the position of the state and did not display partiality by asking a question to ensure that a photo would assist a forensic pathologist in describing the wounds that the victim received. McCain v. State, 971 So. 2d 608 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 700 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 553 U.S. 1056, 128 S. Ct. 2478, 171 L. Ed. 2d 772, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 4228, 76 U.S.L.W. 3620 (2008).

Drug conviction was reversed and remanded for a new trial; the judge's questioning of the defendant exceeded his authority by asking questions that went beyond clarifying questions as contemplated by Miss. R. Evid. 614(b), in an attempt to identify the confidential informant for the search warrant. Brent v. State, 929 So. 2d 952 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 292 (Miss. 2006).

In a child custody case, a judge did not err in asking the father questions regarding the secret tape recording of the wife's conversations with another man because such questioning was permitted under Miss. R. Evid. 614. Copeland v. Copeland, 904 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court's actions in questioning witnesses during defendant's trial for embezzlement of funds from a casino did not deprive defendant of a fair trial where the judge rephrased leading questions asked by the prosecutor, clarified the answers of casino employees regarding casino procedures, and had witnesses repeat answers that the judge had not been able to hear; defendant's failure to object to the alleged errors at trial waived the issue on appeal, and the alleged errors were not so severe as to justify waiving the contemporaneous objection rule. Golden v. State, 860 So. 2d 820 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

Because no objection was made regarding the chancellor's questions to the mother at the hearing to determine child visitation and custody, the issue was waived on appeal. Lacey v. Lacey, 822 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in questioning a witness as to whether she had denied having made certain statements to a deputy; to the contrary, the judge was attempting to discover the truth of the matter at issue in the midst of testimony from an extremely uncooperative witness and the question posed by the trial judge was a rephrasing or repetition of a line of questioning by the prosecutor with which the witness had refused to comply. Davis v. State, 811 So. 2d 346 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The trial judge operated within statutory and case law when she interrupted a witness to ask pertinent clarification questions which were remedial in nature in a proceeding to determine paternity. Groves v. Slaton, 733 So. 2d 349 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The judge properly called the co-defendant as the court's witness in order to allow both sides to cross-examine him due to his prior inconsistent statements since the court made every effort to maintain his impartiality where (1) the judge instructed the jury at great length both from the bench and in the written jury instructions to ensure that they understood that his calling the co-defendant did not indicate any opinion regarding the merits of the case or any favor to either side, (2) the judge also carefully instructed the jury on its duty to weigh evidence and evaluate witness credibility, and (3) the judge did not personally question the defendant. Gleeton v. State, 716 So. 2d 1083 (Miss. 1998).

Judge at murder trial did not act improperly in questioning witnesses and did not thereby assist State in prosecution of defendant; judge's questions were posed so that he could decide certain motions made by defense counsel prior to trial and questioning was done prior to empaneling of jury, and judge did no more than exercise authority granted him under this rule. Lanier v. State, 533 So. 2d 473 (Miss. 1988).

Nonjury proceedings.

At a hearing in which a mother was held in contempt of a visitation order, it was not error for the chancellor to question the mother, notwithstanding the assertion that the chancellor abandoned her impartiality and assumed an adversarial role, as the matter did not involve a jury and the concern regarding possible influence of a jury, therefore, did not arise. Grant v. Martin, 755 So. 2d 551 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 615. Exclusion of witnesses.

At the request of a party the court shall order witnesses excluded so that they cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses, and it may make the order of its own motion. This rule does not authorize exclusion of (1) a party who is a natural person, or (2) an officer or employee of a party which is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney, or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his cause.

COMMENT

The excluding or sequestering witnesses has long been recognized as a means of discouraging and exposing falsification, inaccuracy, and collusion. The rule of sequestration, "cross-examination" of a party by his own counsel after being called time-honored tradition in state trial practice. Prior to these Rules, Reagan Equipment Co. v. Vaughn Gin Co., 425 So.2d 1045 (Miss. 1983), provided guidance for implementation of "the rule."

Under Rule 615 exceptions are made for several categories of witnesses. First, parties are excepted because their exclusion would raise serious problems of confrontation and due process. Secondly, as the equivalent of the right of a natural-person party to be present, a party that is not a natural person is entitled to have a representative present. The third category includes a person such as an agent who handled the transaction being litigated, an expert needed to advise counsel during the litigation, or an expert witness who must hear the testimony of other witnesses in order to form an opinion which he will later state testimonially. Collins v. State, 361 So.2d 333 (Miss. 1978), provides guidance for permitting an expert to remain in the courtroom. In each instance the person's presence must be "shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his case."

The sequestration may arise from a motion of a party or from the court on its own motion. This differs from pre-rule Mississippi practice in which a judge would not invoke the rule unless requested.

This rule differs from former Mississippi practice whereunder a party could be excluded during his case-in-chief only after he had the choice of testifying before his other witnesses. Under this rule, a party may remain in the courtroom at all times.

This rule does not discuss sanctions for violation of the sequestration order. Under existing Mississippi law the court has the discretion to exclude the offending witness from testifying. See Johnson v. State, 346 So.2d 927 (Miss. 1977). The trial judge should not permit a witness who has violated the rule to testify unless he has first determined that the adversary would not be prejudiced by the violation of the rule. Other available remedies might be to strike the testimony of a witness who violated the rule, cite the witness for contempt, or allow a "full-bore" cross-examination. See Douglas v. State, 525 So.2d 1312 (Miss. 1988).

Illustrative cases.

In general.

Although the trial court may order witness exclusion on its own motion, it is not required to do so. Nance v. State, 766 So. 2d 111 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The Supreme Court will not per se reverse a trial court for failing to order a mistrial or to exclude testimony after a witness exclusion rule violation. Finley v. State, 725 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 1998).

Designated representative.

Where sheriff was a witness for State and remained in courtroom throughout proceedings, his presence did not warrant reversal of defendant's convictions; although prosecution's designation of sheriff as State's representative was insufficient, defendant failed to demonstrate any resulting prejudice, and thus any error was harmless. Jackson v. State, 684 So. 2d 1213 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1215, 117 S. Ct. 1703, 137 L. Ed. 2d 828 (1997).

Allowing chief investigator to sit at counsel table during trial as designated representative of State, as well as testify for State during guilt phase, did not taint jury deliberations by injection of sympathy into its decision. Russell v. State, 607 So. 2d 1107 (Miss. 1992).

Court at murder trial did not err in failing to sequester sheriff who later testified for State, where sheriff was needed in courtroom to control crowd, and judge was assured that sheriff had not come into any contact with jurors which would prejudice defendant. Perkins v. State, 600 So. 2d 938 (Miss. 1992).

Sheriff was not exempted from this rule simply by virtue of his being sheriff, where district attorney had not designated him as the State's representative. Douglas v. State, 525 So. 2d 1312 (Miss. 1988).

Expert witness.

Although a murder defendant had invoked the sequestration rule, the trial court did not err in allowing an expert witness for the State to remain in the courtroom during a witness's testimony in order to avoid the need to ask the expert hypothetical questions. Northup v. State, 793 So. 2d 618 (Miss. 2001).

Harmless error.

While the court erred in not allowing defendant's brother to testify on the ground that the defense had violated the court's sequestration rule, there was no evidence that had the jury heard the brother testify that the brother too was oblivious as to what the shooter was doing in the back of defendant's truck the outcome of the trial would have been any different. Hence, defendant's conviction for committing a drive-by shooting was upheld. Trotter v. State, 878 So. 2d 248 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Any error inherent in the presence of a witness in chambers while his testimony was being discussed was harmless since he was promptly ordered to leave when the matter was raised by defense counsel and any prejudice suffered by the defendant did not rise to the level of discretionary abuse by the trial judge. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Where the Chancellor found that witnesses in the court room were not prejudiced by the testimony that they heard, that testimony was not discussed in their presence, and that they only heard discussions regarding the burden of proof and documents used by a party's expert, the witnesses were not prejudiced and their testimony should not be excluded because the rule was violated. Brown v. Jackson, 711 So. 2d 878 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court did not err in allowing testimony of witness who had violated sequestration rule and heard a portion of trial testimony, where there was no evidence that witness deliberately attempted to circumvent the rule, and court held a hearing outside presence of jury to ascertain just what witness heard and to determine what, if any, prejudice defendant suffered, and defense counsel was given opportunity to fully cross-examine witness before the jury. Brown v. State, 682 So. 2d 340 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1127, 117 S. Ct. 1271, 137 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1997).

Although some other witnesses talked with witness about questions they had been asked, there was no error in allowing witness' testimony, where she was subject to a full-bore examination in presence of jury, and she stated that discussions in the witness room had no effect on how she would have testified, and her testimony was at best cumulative. Powell v. State, 662 So. 2d 1095 (Miss. 1995).

Prior proceedings.

There is no rule preventing a witness from being exposed to testimony in former proceedings, whether live or by transcript; the fact of such exposure in whatever form may be disclosed to a jury for its consideration, but it does not bar the witness. Lewis v. State, 580 So. 2d 1279 (Miss. 1991).

Rebuttal testimony.

Trial court did not err in violation of the witness sequestration rule in permitting the State to introduce the testimony of a victim's advocate who had been allowed to sit in on the majority of defendant's sexual battery trial because the victim's advocate was an unanticipated witness who left the courtroom as soon as it became apparent to the State that she would be called as a rebuttal witness and because her testimony was not based upon anything that could have been tailored to hearing other parts of the State's case-in-chief. Bolden v. State, 23 So. 3d 491 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 22 So. 3d 1193, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 614 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err in allowing the State to call a rebuttal witness who had remained in the courtroom after defendant had invoked the rule of sequestration as the trial court limited the witness's testimony on direct and allowed a full-bore cross-examination of the witness. Black v. State, 823 So. 2d 543 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The trial court did not err in failing to grant a mistrial based on a violation of the rule where (1) a witness testified in the case-in-chief and then remained in the courtroom for some time, and (2) when the state realized that she was going to be a rebuttal witness concerning the testimony of another witness, she was removed from the courtroom and was not present during the testimony of the other witness. Finley v. State, 725 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness for the state to testify in rebuttal after remaining in the courtroom after his testimony where the questions asked did not concern the subject matter of the proceeding and where a cross rebuttal examination was permitted. One 1979 Ford 15V v. State ex rel. Miss. Bureau of Narcotics, 721 So. 2d 631 (Miss. 1998).

Remaining in courtroom after testifying.

Defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for fondling a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because, inter alia: (1) the evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. (2) the trial court did not improperly limit cross-examination of the victim in violation of defendant's rights under USCS Const. Amend. 6 and Miss. Const. Art. III, § 26, because testimony concerning the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412; (3) since defendant failed to object at trial to the qualification of an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the issue was waived; and (4) under Miss. R. Evid. 615(3), the expert witness was properly allowed to remain in the court room so that she could base her opinion on facts learned at the trial pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Aguilar v. State, 955 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing a key state witness to remain in the courtroom after completing his testimony and being permanently excused. Rochell v. State, 748 So. 2d 103 (Miss. 1999).

Illustrative cases.

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, motion for postconviction relief was proper because his argument that he was denied a fair trial as a result of witness and juror misconduct was without merit. The submitted affidavits lacked any mention of what was discussed, if it pertained to the inmate's trial, or any indication, other than the inmate's unsupported claim of prejudice, that there was any possibility that what the witnesses discussed affected the outcome of the inmate's trial, or had anything to do with it whatsoever; assuming arguendo that the affidavits were accurate, the inmate failed to show such an adverse affect. Conway v. State, 48 So. 3d 588 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 627 (Miss. 2010).

Witness and witness's child, who was also slated to testify, were seen together during a break in the witness's testimony; the trial court did not err in refusing to preclude the child's testimony because there was no reason to believe that the child and the witness had discussed testimony. Harris v. State, 937 So. 2d 474 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's convictions for murder and aggravated assault were proper where a detective's testimony went to an uncontested and purely technical matter of the procedure for introducing a shotgun into evidence and establishing its chain of custody. Because of that, none of the reasons behind the witness sequestration rule, Miss. R. Evid. 615, were implicated. Johnson v. State, 910 So. 2d 1174 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Appellant could not show prejudice by the trial court in allowing a witness to return to the witness room after testifying; it did not appear that any material issue of the case was discussed. Though the case was discussed generally, the record was devoid of a showing that any witness had discussed his or her personal testimony with the others. Partain v. Sta-Home Health Agency of Jackson, Inc., 904 So. 2d 1112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in excluding from the courtroom certain witnesses after the sequestration rule, Miss. R. Evid. 615, was invoked because the 500 names of the other witnesses were not originally listed as parties on the original complaint pursuant to Miss. R. Civ. P. 10(a), and thus they were not considered parties. Prestridge v. City of Petal, 841 So. 2d 1048 (Miss. 2003).

The investigating officer was properly permitted to remain in the courtroom as the case agent; he qualified as a representative of the state, and the defendant raised no specific ways in which he was prejudiced by his being allowed to remain in the courtroom. Whittington v. State, 748 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 1999).

The court did not err in denying the defendant's motion that his mother be excluded from sequestration during the guilt phase of the trial, since the rule is mandatory in nature, and there was no evidence that his mother fit within one of the exceptions provided by the rule. Puckett v. State, 737 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 1999).

Where there was no clear evidence that witness sequestration rule was violated, it could not be said that husband in divorce action was prejudiced as a result, and without proof of collusion in witnesses' testimony, chancellor did not err in denying husband's motion for new trial based on violation of the rule. Bland v. Bland, 629 So. 2d 582 (Miss. 1993).

Where husband of aggravated assault victim spoke to witnesses about his wife's testimony, this violated the spirit of this rule; error was found harmless, however, in absence of any showing of prejudice to defendant. Lewis v. State, 580 So. 2d 1279 (Miss. 1991).

The trial judge was correct to deny the defendant a mistrial on the grounds of the improper contact between himself and his wife during a recess; the trial judge correctly treated the issue as a Rule 615 violation and allowed cross-examination in the presence of the jury on the improper contact. Hughes v. State, 735 So. 2d 238 (Miss. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680, (2000).

Rule 616. Bias of witness.

For the purpose of attacking the credibility of a witness, evidence of bias, prejudice, or interest of the witness for or against any party to the case is admissible. (Adopted effective March 1, 1989.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective March 1, 1989, the Court adopted amended Rule 616. 536-538 So. 2d XXXII (West Miss. Cas. 1989).

COMMENT

The common law permitted inquiry into a witness's bias, prejudice, or interest in a case for credibility purposes. See Ellis & Williams, Mississippi Evidence, § 4-4. The Mississippi Rules of Evidence did not originally include a rule permitting examination of a witness's bias, prejudice, or interest. Despite a similar omission in the Federal Rules of Evidence, the United States Supreme Court reaffirmed the common law use of impeachment by bias, prejudice, or interest in United States v. Abel, 469 U.S. 45, 105 S.Ct. 465, 83 L.Ed.2d 450 (1984). MRE 616 codifies this longstanding principle in Mississippi as well as the holding in United States v. Abel. MRE 616 tracks the language of Uniform Rule of Evidence 616.

In general.

Court rejected defendant's contention that the State violated Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) in asking the girlfriend whether defendant had coerced her to lie on the stand; given the change in the girlfriend's testimony from what she said in a previous statement, the State was permitted to present evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 616, and the question was not so inflammatory as to have constituted prosecutorial misconduct. Pipkins v. State, 878 So. 2d 119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

It is permissible to adduce evidence to the effect that a witness has exercised the right to refuse to discuss the case with a party, and to examine the witness in that regard. Lacy v. State, 629 So. 2d 591 (Miss. 1993).

Gangs.

In a prosecution for murder, the state was properly permitted to show that a defense witness was married to a member of the defendant's gang, notwithstanding the contention that such evidence was inadmissible as the only proper way to attack a witness's credibility is by opinion or reputation evidence relating to the wit-ness's character for truthfulness; a witness's credibility may be attacked by showing evidence of bias of the witness for any party to the case and the fact that the witness was married to a member of the defendant's gang sufficiently invoked considerations of bias on the part of the witness to permit the introduction of such evidence. Street v. State, 754 So. 2d 497 (Ct. App. 1999).

Prior crimes.

Where defendant argued that failure to admit documentary evidence of a murder indictment against the codefendant, who testified against defendant, was improper, defendant's claim failed; although evidence tending to show bias was admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 616, the evidence was needlessly cumulative under Miss. R. Evid. 403, as this evidence was already admitted by defense counsel, who read from the plea hearing transcript related to the codefendant's murder charge and ably cross-examined the codefendant about the codefendant's motive to lie. Smith v. State, 848 So. 2d 195 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where defendant fired shots at victim's legs, trial court did not err in prohibiting defense counsel from inquiring into victim's prior criminal history. McNair v. State, 814 So. 2d 153 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for felony driving under the influence and negligently causing the death of a pedestrian, the court committed reversible error when it refused to allow the defendant to present evidence that defendant had three prior burglary convictions, but received only probation as a result of cooperating with the state. Zoerner v. State, 725 So. 2d 811 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court in drug prosecution did not err in allowing district attorney to cross-examine defense witness as to whether he had ever been indicted for possession of cocaine, as this was admissible to show bias on part of witness. Bradley v. State, 562 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. 1990).

Racial prejudice.

There was no legitimate evidentiary purpose for defense counsel's questions to a witness concerning his feelings about black people, as the witness, the defendant, and the victim were all white. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

In a prosecution for the sale of less than one ounce of marijuana, defense counsel was properly precluded from questioning a state's witness who purchased the marijuana at issue from the defendant regarding his racial prejudices in order to show his prejudice against the defendant since the motive of the witness for telling a law enforcement officer about the pending drug transaction was not relevant to whether the defendant sold marijuana to the witness. Westbrook v. State, 770 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Remoteness.

Whether fight between defendant and confidential informant occurred twelve or twenty years before sale of crack cocaine by defendant to undercover agent, trial court did not err in ruling that evidence of fight was too remote to be allowed for impeachment purposes on cross-examination. Tillis v. State, 661 So. 2d 1139 (Miss. 1995).

Settlement agreements.

Settlement agreement between motorist and driver of truck which pulled in front of him gave truck driver an interest in the outcome of motorist's suit against truck driver's employer, and trial court erred in denying employer the right to show its driver's interest. W.J. Runyon & Son v. Davis, 605 So. 2d 38 (Miss. 1992).

Threats.

In a prosecution for discharging a shotgun into a dwelling, the court erroneously refused to permit defense counsel to question the owner of the house with regard to her attempt to obtain a loan from defense counsel and her statement, when denied, that her testimony would be harmful to the defendant. Johnson v. State, 756 So. 2d 4 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Illustrative cases.

Although defendant's mother's proposed testimony was proper extrinsic evidence to impeach the victim's earlier denial of bias against defendant, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 613(b) and 616, due to the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, the complained of error in failing to allow that testimony was harmless. Banks v. State, 45 So. 3d 676 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defense counsel was given an opportunity to explore bias sufficient to expose the jury to facts to assess the credibility of witnesses pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 616; petitioner inmate suffered no substantial violation of Confrontation Clause rights by the restrictions placed upon cross-examination of the witnesses. Manning v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120719 (N.D. Miss. Dec. 29, 2009).

During defendant's trial for possession of cocaine, a defense witness testified that she did not see defendant throw any drugs on the ground; during cross-examination, the prosecutor questioned the witness about her son's murder conviction, eliciting testimony that he himself had been the prosecutor at her son's murder trial. The trial court correctly permitted the State's cross-examination of a defense witness regarding her sons' criminal records under Miss. R. Evid. 616, because it was relevant and admissible to show her possible bias in her testimony against the State. Butler v. State, 19 So. 3d 111 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 490 (Miss. 2009).

In a medical malpractice action, evidence that a doctor's experts were all members of the same insurer was properly not admitted because the probative value of the evidence that the doctor's experts could incur a financial penalty of $ 136 if the patient was successful on her claim was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice resulting from the admission of evidence concerning the existence of a liability insurance policy. Wells v. Tucker, 997 So. 2d 908 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's criminal case, defendant's argument that he should have been allowed to cite the many times that a witness received favorable treatment by the police was erroneous. The witness was far from a material or key witness and there was nothing in the record that showed what the witness's arrests were for, their disposition, or even proof that the arrests occurred at all. Vickers v. State, 994 So. 2d 200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 675 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's proffer showed that not only did a witness believe that the prosecutor's office had the power to offer him leniency, but in fact his lawyer was working on it; that was permissible evidence of bias and interest, which defendant was entitled to show under Miss. R. Evid. 616, and without testimony about his beliefs of leniency, the jury was unable to consider if the change in the witness's statements to police and his testimony at trial was because he hoped to ingratiate himself to the district attorney's office. Davis v. State, 970 So. 2d 164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2007).

During the cross examination of a murder defendant's alibi witness and his purported eyewitness to shooting at issue, evidence was allowed establishing that neither of these witnesses had ever reported their valuable exculpatory evidence to investigating officers and that both witnesses had a personal friendship with the defendant as such evidence was admissible as an indication of their possible bias in favor of the defendant. Brown v. State, 764 So. 2d 463 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Defendant's claim that he should have been allowed to examine witness for prejudice based on an alleged criminal complaint witness had previously filed against defendant was denied where there was no evidence on the record describing this charge. Fields v. State, 758 So. 2d 440 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

A chancery court order forbidding the child abuse victim to be in the presence of her stepfather was valuable evidence to be considered in assessing the victim's mother's credibility as to whether she told her daughter to lie about visiting her home, and the order was therefore admissable. Herrington v. State, 690 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. 1997).

Rule 617. Use of closed circuit television to show child's testimony.

(a) Upon motion and hearing in camera, the trial court may order that the testimony of a child under the age of sixteen (16) years, that an unlawful sexual act, contact, intrusion, penetration or other sexual offense was committed upon him or her be taken outside of the courtroom and shown in the courtroom by means of closed-circuit television upon a finding that there is a substantial likelihood that the child will suffer traumatic emotional or mental distress if compelled to testify in open court and, in the case of a criminal prosecution, if compelled to testify in the presence of the accused.

(b) The motion may be filed by the child, his attorney, parent, legal guardian or guardian ad litem, the prosecuting attorney, or any party to the case. In addition, the court may act upon its own motion.

(c) Upon stipulation of the parties, the court may appoint a person, who is qualified as an expert in the field of child sexual abuse and who has dealt with the child in a therapeutic setting concerning the offense or act, to aid in formulating methods of questioning the child and to assist the court in interpreting the answers of the child.

(d) Closed circuit television testimony may be taken by any method not inconsistent with the Confrontation Clauses of the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Mississippi, the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, the Mississippi Uniform Criminal Rules of Circuit Court Practice, and these rules. In the case of a criminal prosecution, after a determination that the defendant's presence would cause a substantial likelihood of serious traumatic emotional or mental distress to the child, the trial court may exclude the defendant from the room where the testimony is taken. In any such case in which the defendant is so excluded, arrangements must be made for the defense attorney to be in continual contact with the defendant by any appropriate private electronic or telephonic method throughout the questioning. The defendant, the court and the jury must be able to observe the demeanor of the child witness at all times during the questioning.

(e) The court shall make specific findings of fact, on the record, as to the basis for its rulings under this rule.

(f) All parties must be represented by counsel at any taking of any testimony under this rule.

(g) This rule does not preclude, for purposes of identification of a defendant, the presence of both the victim and the defendant in the courtroom at the same time. (Adopted effective March 27, 1991.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective March 27, 1991, the Court adopted Rule 617. 574-576 So. 2d XXVIII (West Miss. Cas. 1991).

COMMENT

This rule provides an exceptional procedure for the taking of testimony from children said to have been the victims of sexual abuse. If this rule is applied in a criminal case, the rights of the defendant under the Confrontation Clauses of Federal and State Constitutions must be respected. Idaho v. Wright, 497 U.S. 805, 110 S.Ct. 3139, 111 L.Ed.2d 638 (1990); Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666 (1990); Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 (1988).

[Adopted effective March 27, 1991.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Confrontation.
Objection.
Suffering of traumatic and emotional distress.
Unavailability of child witness.

Confrontation.

In a case involving sexual abuse of children, defendant's Sixth Amendment claim was rejected because he failed to show that he was prejudiced by the denial of the right to view the demeanor of the children as they testified via closed circuit television, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 617. Therefore, defendant's motions for a mistrial and a new trial were properly denied. Rollins v. State, 970 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2007).

Objection.

In a case involving sexual abuse of children, defendant was unable to appeal based on a jury's inability to hear the testimony of children through a closed circuit television because his defense counsel specifically failed to object; at any rate, the record revealed that the trial judge's court administrator was in the courtroom with the jury during the closed-circuit testimony of the minor children, and that the court administrator was to immediately inform the trial judge if technical difficulties arose so that the problems could be remedied and questions and responses could be repeated. Rollins v. State, 970 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2007).

Suffering of traumatic and emotional distress.

Trial court conducted a hearing, outside the presence of the jury, in order to make a ruling regarding the giving of testimony of the children by closed circuit television; the parents testified that both children feared defendant because of threats which he made at the time of the abuse, and there was sufficient evidence to support that there was a substantial likelihood that the victims would suffer traumatic and emotional distress if they were compelled to come into court and testify; the witnesses established that both children were frightened of defendant, more than just nervousness, and that the use of closed circuit television for their testimony was necessary for their welfare. Bradley v. State, 921 So. 2d 385 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Unavailability of child witness.

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the county department of human services failed to show that the children at issue were unavailable and, therefore, their prior statements were not admissible under the tender years exception to the hearsay rule, where the department failed to show that there was no reasonable alternative means of testifying, such as closed-circuit television or videotape deposition, that would eliminate the trauma that would have been caused by in-person testimony in the presence of their parents. J. L. W. W. v. Clarke County Dep't of Human Servs., 759 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. 2000).

The procedural requirements of this rule are not incorporated into the "unavailability" analysis of Rule 804(a)(6); thus, whether a party filed a motion under this rule does not affect the determination of whether a child witness was unavailable within the meaning of Rule 804(a)(6). J.L.W.W. v. Clarke County Dep't of Human Servs., — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 476 (Miss. Ct. App. July 20, 1999), affirmed by 759 So. 2d 1183, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 92 (Miss. 2000).

ARTICLE VII. OPINIONS AND EXPERT TESTIMONY

Rule 701. Opinion testimony by lay witnesses.

If the witness is not testifying as an expert the witness's testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness, (b) helpful to the clear understanding of the testimony or the determination of a fact in issue, and (c) not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Rule 702. (Amended March 2, 1987, effective October 1, 1987; April 17, 2000, effective December 1, 2000. Amended effective May 29, 2003, to prohibit opinion testimony under Rule 701 based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Rule 702.)

COMMENT

The traditional rule regarding lay opinions has been, with some exceptions, to exclude them from evidence. Rule 701 is a departure from the traditional rule. It favors the admission of lay opinions when two considerations are met. The first consideration is the familiar requirement of first-hand knowledge or observation. The second consideration is that the witness's opinion must be helpful in resolving the issues. Rule 701, thus, provides flexibility when a witness has difficulty in expressing the witness's thoughts in language which does not reflect an opinion. Rule 701 is based on the recognition that there is often too thin a line between fact and opinion to determine which is which.

The 2003 amendment of Rule 701 makes it clear that the provision for lay opinion is not an avenue for admission of testimony based on scientific, technical or specialized knowledge which must be admitted only under the strictures of Rule 702.

In general.

Victim's opinion testimony regarding the value of the stolen desk was based on her personal knowledge that her husband paid $3,000 for the desk, her personal knowledge that antique furniture tended to appreciate rather than depreciate, and her personal knowledge that a similar desk was currently for sale for $4,399; the facts that the victim used to establish the value of the desk were all based on her personal knowledge, and there was no scientific or technical basis for her valuation of the desk and her opinion of the estimated value of the desk was therefore admissible. Thompson v. State, 910 So. 2d 60 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Testimony of lay witness at scene of accident that defendant, while at the accident scene, smelled of alcohol, and lay witness believed defendant to be drunk, coupled with testimony of nurse at hospital that defendant had slurred speech, smelled of alcohol, was unsteady, and appeared to have drunk too much alcohol, was admissible where defendant was charged with felony driving under the influence of alcohol causing death, as the combined testimony was rationally based on the respective witness's perception and helpful to understanding of defendant's state of intoxication. Havard v. State, 800 So. 2d 1193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Where, in order to express an opinion, a witness must possess some experience or expertise beyond that of the average, randomly selected adult, it is an expert opinion and not a lay opinion. Langston v. Kidder, 670 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1995).

Opinions admitted under this rule must be helpful to determination of case; questions which would merely allow witness to tell jury what result to reach are not permitted. Whittington v. State, 523 So. 2d 966 (Miss. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 923, 109 S. Ct. 304, 102 L. Ed. 2d 323 (1988).

Accident reconstruction.

Accident reconstructionist testified that given the slow speed at which the tractor trailer was turning, if the injured person (who skidded into the rear of the trailer), had been keeping a proper lookout and operating his vehicle under control at a safe speed, the accident would not have happened. Even though the testimony embraced an ultimate issue on the subject of negligence, such an invasion of the province of the jury was not absolutely barred, and it was not inadmissible as the testimony was helpful to the determination of the case. McKenzie v. Supervalu, Inc., 883 So. 2d 1188 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a prosecution for DUI manslaughter, the trial court erred when it allowed the introduction into evidence of a sketch of the accident scene that depicted the point of impact where the officer who drew the sketch was not an accident reconstruction expert, there was no evidence concerning debris or skid marks, and the vehicles were not on the road and had traveled post-impact beyond the point of impact. Ware v. State, 790 So. 2d 201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for DUI manslaughter, a police officer was properly permitted to state his lay opinion regarding the location of the point of impact between the defendant's vehicle and the victim's riding lawn mower as one need not be an expert accident reconstructionist to offer an opinion that tire marks appearing at the scene of accident indicate with some measure of precision the path the vehicle followed at the time of the accident. Jones v. State, 761 So. 2d 907 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Computer information.

A police officer was properly permitted to testify that he checked a computer for a document that the defendant claimed was on the hard drive, but did not find any such document. Boone v. State, 811 So. 2d 402 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Identification evidence.

An investigator's testimony was admissible as opinion testimony by a lay witness where it was not only based upon his personal perception of the gun's trigger tension, but was also based upon his past experiences with guns similar to the one used in the shooting. His testimony was further helpful to a determination by the jury of whether the shooting was accidental or intentional. Sheppard v. State, 910 So. 2d 1182 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trial court did not err in allowing the employee who identified defendant testify that defendant was the man in the videotape who was caught shoplifting, as under Miss. R. Evid. 701, the employee's face-to-face confrontation with defendant gave the employee a greater familiarity with defendant than the jury had. Ratliff v. State, 879 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Testimony of witnesses as to what a criminal suspect looked like was admissible evidence, as it was not opinion testimony, but rather merely a statement describing the suspect's appearance as the witnesses saw him and the opinions they formed based upon what they saw. Edwards v. State, 797 So. 2d 1049 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine in which the core of the defense was the issue of mistaken identity, the court committed reversible error when it refused to allow the defendant's mother to testify that she had viewed the videotape of the transaction at issue and was of the opinion that the person shown making the drug sale was not her son; the error could not be overlooked as harmless as a review of the evidence showed the court that there was a legitimate disputed issue of fact as to whether the person caught on camera was, in fact, the defendant. Bennett v. State, 757 So. 2d 1074 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Medical testimony.

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701, a lay witness could not render an opinion as to whether the symptoms exhibited by a patient were associated with infection. Vaughn v. Miss. Baptist Med. Ctr., 20 So. 3d 645 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of sexual battery, a nurse did not give improper opinion testimony regarding the dried secretions obtained during the administration of the victim's rape kit because the State questioned the nurse regarding hospital protocol in administering a rape kit, which was within her personal knowledge as a nurse who assisted doctors in performing the rape kit and because the nurse did not give any opinions beyond what she was qualified to render; the nurse's testimony helped the jury understand the process by which evidence was gathered and analyzed. The nurse did not state that the dried secretions were seminal fluid but only stated that a foreign substance was found by a process that was used to detect seminal fluid; this was not an opinion but was information gained through her personal observations and experiences. Bolden v. State, 23 So. 3d 491 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 22 So. 3d 1193, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 614 (Miss. 2009).

Neither the emergency physician nor the nurse practitioner's testimony constituted impermissible expert testimony where the testimony by the nurse practitioner merely provided information that she had gathered during her treatment of the driver and the physician merely examined the photographs in order to explain her initial diagnosis of the driver immediately after the injury occurred. APAC Miss., Inc. v. Johnson, 15 So. 3d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In an aggravated assault case, an orthopedic surgeon should have been qualified as an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702 and not been allowed to give a lay opinion under Miss. R. Evid. 701 because he was acting in his professional capacity when he testified that a broken bone was caused by high-energy force. However, the error was harmless because it did not deny a substantial right or render the trial fundamentally unfair; photographs of the injuries suffered by defendant's girlfriend were shown, and the girlfriend testified that defendant forced her out of the car, threw her down, kicked her, and stomped on her back. O'Neal v. State, 977 So. 2d 1252 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Doctor's testimony, in a medical malpractice suit where he was the defendant but not designated as an expert witness, was permissible where it was explanatory of the doctor's treatment of the patient and of his records and nursing records about the patient's care; however, some of the doctor's testimony as to the symptoms that the patient would have developed had the doctor negligently perforated the patient's bowel in a surgical procedure was clearly impermissible expert testimony. Therefore, the trial court erred in permitting the expert testimony; however, the error did not warrant reversal as the doctor's expert testimony was largely cumulative to that of his expert witnesses and the doctor presented no new information. Griffin v. McKenney, 877 So. 2d 425 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Opinions.

Although defendant argued a police officer provided inadmissible lay opinion testimony, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701, the only matter the officer testified to was that, in his opinion, it was necessary to send two detectives to determine whether defendant was selling drugs; the officer did not testify that, in his opinion, defendant was selling narcotics. Hosey v. State, 77 So. 3d 507 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 78 So. 3d 906, 2012 Miss. LEXIS 19 (Miss. 2012).

Defendant's argument that an investigator's testimony as to the path of the bullets was an area requiring expert testimony was without merit. The investigator's testimony was nothing more than his opinion based on his personal observations and the testimony was not intended to prove any ballistic evidence since defendant admitted to shooting the officers. Mayers v. State, 42 So. 3d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 42

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in allowing the sister of the decedent's to testify about the substance found in the decedent's pocket pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701. His sister stated that she was familiar with crystal meth, having smoked it as a teenager; she testified that she knew what it looked like and what it smelled like; she actually saw the substance that her mother found and opened the package and smelled it; and the substance smelled like ammonia, as did crystal meth. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

The trial court did not err in allowing an investigator with the Mississippi Department of Corrections to testify regarding the injuries to the victim of a prison stabbing; it was clear that the testimony was opinion testimony, rather than expert testimony, as the investigator simply testified about what he perceived the victim's injuries to have been after speaking with the victim, and furthermore, the testimony was not based on scientific, technical, or specialized knowledge. Kendrick v. State, 21 So. 3d 1186 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of a railway and an engineer in the decedent's wife's action alleging that they caused the wrongful death of her husband was appropriate because a witness's opinion was not admissible as lay testimony since it was based on scientific technical, or other specialized knowledge. In essence, the witness's opinion was that of an expert, except that he was not qualified as one. Kilhullen v. Kan. City S. Ry., 8 So. 3d 186 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), reversed by, remanded by 8 So. 3d 168, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 87 (Miss. 2009).

In a criminal prosecution for conspiracy to commit armed robbery, the store manager was permitted to give his lay opinion testimony as to the view of the safe from where he was standing. The manager was familiar with the store's layout so his testimony was based on personal knowledge under Miss. R. Evid. 701(a). Herring v. State, 938 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 752 (Miss. 2006).

Finding against the driver in her action for injuries resulting from a collision with a train at a railroad crossing was appropriate where a witness would not have qualified as an expert on the dynamics of accidents at the crossing; at best he was a lay witness whose opinions were rationally based on his perceptions. Bowman v. CSX Transp., Inc., 931 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a prosecution of defendant for vehicular homicide, opinion testimony from a prosecution witness that some glass he found at the base of a tree came from a passenger window rather than from the windshield did not require specialized knowledge of vehicle construction for which the witness was not qualified as an expert. Dunaway v. State, 919 So. 2d 67 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 35 (Miss. 2006).

Police testimony.

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701, which mirrors Fed. R. Evid. 701, there was no error in allowing a sheriff to detail his theory of the crime for the jury in a capital murder case because the sheriff was present at the crime scene and had first-hand knowledge of the facts from which he drew reasonable inferences. Manning v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120719 (N.D. Miss. Dec. 29, 2009).

Officer's descriptions of the victim's and defendant's wounds that he observed firsthand and their relative severity were factual descriptions that did not require expert testimony. Hicks v. State, 6 So. 3d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 161 (Miss. 2009).

Major's testimony concerning the manner in which he had ordinarily encountered cocaine during his career as a law enforcement officer was based on his experience and did not exceed what was allowed under Miss. R. Evid. 701. Barlow v. State, 8 So. 3d 196 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 204 (Miss. 2009).

In a rape case, there was no error in allowing a police officer to testify under Miss. R. Evid. 701 that there was evidence to show that a rape had taken place; he did not testify that defendant had committed the crime, but was recounting this belief based on his personal perception of the victim upon arriving at the crime scene. The officer saw that the victim was partially nude, and she had visible injuries to her face and body. McGriggs v. State, 987 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 641 (Miss. 2008).

In a criminal prosecution for murder and attempted arson, defendant argued that her written confession given to law enforcement was rendered involuntary because she suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder and borderline personality disorder; the circuit court did not err by admitting lay opinion testimony of defendant's mental status under Miss. R. Evid. 701. The investigating officer was permitted to testify that defendant did not appear to be suffering from any mental disease or illness; he did not have to be qualified as an expert prior to tendering his opinion. Brown v. State, 981 So. 2d 1007 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 222 (Miss. 2008).

Where defendant's blood alcohol content was over the legal limit, and while there was no eyewitness testimony that defendant in fact drove the car that hit the victim, there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to convict defendant of a DUI homicide under Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(1)(c) and (5) because: (1) the early morning time and rural location of the collision allowed the jury to form a reasonable inference that defendant drove the car that hit the victim; (2) the jury could have found based on the time and location that it was unlikely that defendant would have been walking in that area; (3) the jury could have reasonably inferred that defendant was at the scene of the collision because he drove one of the two cars involved in the collision and would not have been able to leave the scene of the accident; (4) the jury could have found that defendant's proximity to the collision and his status as the sole non-emergency personnel present indicated his involvement in the collision; (5) defendant told an officer that he could not remember how the collision happened, not that he did not know how the collision occurred; (6) defendant never mentioned anyone else who could have possibly been driving; and (7) pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701, the officer testified that he concluded that defendant was driving based on his presence, the presence of emergency responders, and common sense. Travis v. State, 972 So. 2d 674 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 1 (Miss. 2008).

In a DUI homicide case under Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(1)(c) and (5), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer's testimony that defendant was driving the car that hit the victim because the officer concluded that defendant was driving that car based on defendant's presence as the sole non-emergency personnel present at the scene, the presence of emergency responders, and common sense. Travis v. State, 972 So. 2d 674 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 1 (Miss. 2008).

In a murder trial, the investigating police officer testified that if a pistol had been fired when held by the handle, no gunpowder residue would have been present on one's hand, while if one fired a pistol and held it the way defendant claimed he had held the pistol, there would have been powder burns on one's person or clothing; while the officer was not designated as an expert, the latter testimony was admissible as it was based on his experience and perception as a law enforcement officer and he did not state his opinion of whether or not defendant held the pistol in the manner he claimed. Marbra v. State, 904 So. 2d 1169 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Detective's testimony that two people could murder the same person was not improper because it did not require any expertise and he was not testifying as an expert, and furthermore, because defendant's defense was that another person whom defendant had been with at the victim's residence was the more appropriate suspect, the testimony was helpful to the determination of a fact in issue. Bailey v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 508 (Miss. Ct. App. June 27, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 956 So. 2d 1016, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Officer's opinion as a lay witness that defendant appeared to be aiming at officers and seemed unsure of which one he wanted to shoot was admissible because the statements were rationally based on what the officer had observed. Stringer v. State, 862 So. 2d 566 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was charged with driving under the influence, the trial court did not commit reversible error under Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 704 in allowing police officers to give their opinions that defendant was under the influence because the opinions were rationally based on the perceptions of the officers, helpful to the trier of fact, and not based on scientific knowledge. Christian v. State, 859 So. 2d 1068 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Although the police officer had the opportunity to smell burning marijuana previously during his police career, this did not make him an expert on burning plant matter; the officer was properly allowed to express an opinion upon his personal observation and perception at the scene itself and any error in allowing the testimony was harmless because the substance found in the room, after testing, proved to be marijuana. Bailey v. State, 837 So. 2d 228 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Court rejected defendant's claim that a police officer's testimony was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 701; although the officer referred to the substance found in defendant's residence as a controlled substance, because the trial court gave the jury a curative instruction, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's refusal to grant a mistrial pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.12 on this basis. Mooneyham v. State, 842 So. 2d 579 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003).

A police officer was properly permitted to testify that, at the time of his arrest, the defendant was wearing boots with a tread pattern similar to a boot print found under the door knob of the victim's home as such testimony met the criteria set out by the rule and, as a 12-year veteran investigator, the officer's job was to notice details. Adams v. State, 794 So. 2d 1049 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The trial court did not err by admitting a police officer's testimony about his opinion that the defendant had burglarized a store, notwithstanding the argument that the statement did not meet the requirements for lay opinions under Rule 701 and that the officer had not been determined to be an expert as required for expert opinions under Rule 702, since the statement was made in the context of the officer's thought process during the investigation to explain why he acted and proceeded in the manner that he did. DeSalvo v. State, 776 So. 2d 704 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for robbery, it was error to allow a police officer to testify that, based on the victim's description of the events that occurred, the victim was subjected to strong-arm robbery since the issue of whether a robbery occurred was an issue for the jury to the decide and any rational juror could determine whether a robbery occurred without the comment from the officer. Holliday v. State, 758 So. 2d 1078 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Two police officers were improperly allowed to offer their opinion that the defendant intended to run them off the road when he swerved his vehicle at their patrol car; while the officers could have testified as whether the defendant appeared to deliberately or involuntarily swerve his vehicle since such question would only have called for a "common-sense observance," the prosecutor's request for the officers' opinions as to whether the defendant had the intent to run them off the road or to cause them injury went beyond the purview of the rule's requirement that the opinion must be rationally based on the perception of the witness. Morris v. State, 748 So. 2d 143 (Miss. 1999).

In a prosecution for murder, it was error to allow a police officer to comment on the similarity between a kitchen knife discovered in the defendant's dresser and a knife discovered near the victim's class ring, since the jury was clearly able to examine the knives themselves and draw lay conclusions; however, the error was harmless as the officer merely commented on what was plainly obvious and made no attempt to positively match the knives, he did he base his opinion on any expertise, and the knives were of little importance to the case. Hughes v. State, 735 So. 2d 238 (Miss. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680, (2000).

A police officer's testimony that a shoe print he observed on the kicked-in back door of the victim's home was of the same pattern as a pair of shoes he observed in the defendant's house was a permissible lay opinion. Smith v. State, 725 So. 2d 922 (Ct. App. 1998).

Trial court did not err in refusing to allow investigating police officers to give testimony, as lay witnesses, concerning cause of accident, where opinion which plaintiffs attempted to solicit was an expert opinion based on training and experience. Couch v. City of D'Iberville, 656 So. 2d 146 (Miss. 1995).

A police officer should not have been allowed to testify as either an expert witness or a lay witness where he was not tendered or qualified as an expert witness, and at the same time, lacked the firsthand knowledge necessary to be a lay witness; finally his testimony was duplicative and not helpful to the clear understanding of the fact at issue. Roberson v. State, 569 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 1990).

Testimony of officer, that after two-month investigation he and other officers were unable to identify anyone other than defendant who had been at scene of crime, was permissible lay opinion testimony, where it consisted of both fact and opinion, and was rationally based on officer's personal perceptions. Jackson v. State, 551 So. 2d 132 (Miss. 1989).

Trial court did not err by allowing officer to testify as a lay witness that, in her opinion, defective brake lights contributed to automobile accident; it did not take an expert to know that if brake lights were not functioning, an accident could occur. M & M Pipe & Pressure Vessel Fabricators, Inc. v. Roberts, 531 So. 2d 615 (Miss. 1988).

Sanity.

Non-expert witnesses may give their opinion as to sanity of defendant only if they first detail relevant facts known to them, based on events which they have observed, on which their opinion will be based. Conner v. State, 632 So. 2d 1239 (Miss. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 927, 115 S. Ct. 314, 130 L. Ed. 2d 276 (1994).

Slip and fall.

In an action to recover for injuries sustained in a slip and fall caused by paint spilled near a store end-cap display, a defense lay witness was properly not allowed to testify with regard to whether the end-cap was a corporate end-cap or an in-store end-cap where he had already testified unequivocally that he did not have firsthand knowledge as to whether the end-cap was a corporate end-cap or not. K-Mart Corp. v. Hardy, — So. 2d —, 199 Miss. LEXIS 102 (Miss. 1999).

Sobriety tests.

Trial court did not err in admitting the officer's testimony of the results of defendant's field sobriety tests because the walk and turn and the one-legged stand tests relied upon the officer's observation and did not require qualification as an expert. Pulido v. City of Oxford, 991 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 511 (Miss. 2008).

There was sufficient evidence for a driving under the influence conviction, even though there was no scientific evidence of intoxication because an officer's testimony regarding defendant's conduct, as well as the reading on a breath test and his refusal to cooperate with an Intoxilyzer test, showed that he was intoxicated; the officer did not have to qualify as an expert to so testify. Ouzts v. State, 947 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

A police officer need not be rendered an expert to give opinion testimony regarding the administration of field sobriety tests, including the horizontal gaze nystagmus test. Graves v. State, 761 So. 2d 950 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Testimony regarding state law.

The court erred wen it permitted two lay witnesses to testify regarding the history and requirements of the law in Mississippi with regard to stolen vehicles, searches and seizures of vehicles, and the authority of investigators to inspect automobile rebuilders, dealers, and salvage yards without search warrants, since only the trial judge can instruct the jury on the law. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

Illustrative cases.

Grant of summary judgment in favor of two lawyers in the clients' action claiming the lawyers had breached their fiduciary duty was improper because the trial court erred in applying a negligence standard to the clients' claims of breach of fiduciary duty. Because a lawyer's discretionary disbursement of the settlement funds to his clients did not implicate the kind of specialized knowledge implicated by Miss. R. Evid. 702, to the extent his testimony constituted opinion, it was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 701; therefore, the trial court erred in excluding the testimony regarding how he devised the settlement matrix and how he disbursed the settlement funds to his clients. Crist v. Loyacono, 65 So. 3d 837 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's convictions for conspiracy, burglary of a building other than a dwelling, attempted grand larceny, and attempted aggravated assault were appropriate because a statement by a witness that he was worried that the vehicle was going to come back and try to run over him again was rationally based upon what he had observed that night; the witness had personal knowledge as to what he felt, which was that defendant had attempted to run him over and might try again. That statement was allowable under Miss. R. Evid. 701. Commodore v. State, 994 So. 2d 864 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a murder case, defendant's objection that testimony regarding the trajectory of bullets fired into a car exceeded the proper scope of lay testimony and intruded into the realm of expert testimony was too late; moreover, even if there was error, it was harmless due to the cumulative nature of the testimony. Witnesses observed defendant shooting into an occupied vehicle from the doorway of her residence. Cooper v. State, 977 So. 2d 1220 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 141 (Miss. 2008).

Finding against the life insurance company in the beneficiary's action after her claim was denied was proper because the training of agents who solicited answers from prospective insureds that might result in material misrepresentations was pertinent to the resolution of the issues of the case and met the requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 701 and its comment; thus, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the testimony. United Am. Ins. Co. v. Merrill, 978 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 1185, 128 S. Ct. 1257, 170 L. Ed. 2d 68, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 1280, 76 U.S.L.W. 3439 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated domestic violence against his girlfriend was appropriate because, if defendant did not cause the victim's injuries, as he had claimed, and no one else could have subjected the victim to such injuries, the next obvious inquiry was to ask just how the victim ended up injured; in that sense, defendant's responses were helpful to the clear understanding of his statement and they were helpful to the determination of the fact in issue, which was whether defendant caused the victim's injuries. Fugate v. State, 951 So. 2d 604 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a prosecution of defendant for vehicular homicide, a prosecution witness's testimony about damaged trees at the accident scene consisted of lay opinions, did not stray into the realm of expert testimony, and was properly admitted by the trial court pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701. Dunaway v. State, 919 So. 2d 67 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 35 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 701 because an officer appropriately testified as to his personal experience with the use of the blades at issue and his first-hand observation of the scratches on the car during the course of his investigation; the court concluded that based on its review of the record, the trial court did not err in admitting the officer's testimony. Gates v. State, 936 So. 2d 335 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant, tried for embezzlement, was employed by the owner for approximately nine months and the owner testified that he had become familiar with defendant's handwriting during said period. By virtue of his familiarity with defendant's handwriting, the owner was fully qualified to offer his opinion as to whether or not the writing was in fact defendant's signature; such testimony was rationally based upon his perception, was helpful in making a determination of a fact in issue, was not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Miss. R. Evid. 702, and it therefore met the requirements for both Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 901(b)(2). Bell v. State, 910 So. 2d 640 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendants' conspiracy convictions were proper where testimony regarding a telephone conversation between one of the defendants and the other defendant's mother was permissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 701 because it was clear that the identities of the parties to the telephone call were facts at issue for the conspiracy prosecution. Thus, the warden's testimony would have been helpful to the jury in resolving that issue. Farris v. State, 906 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 701, an investigator properly testified that persons he interviewed were both frightened, because one does not have to be a behavioral psychologist to determine that someone is frightened, an emotion commonly experienced at one time or another by everybody. Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

Trial court erred in allowing a store employee to add commentary to a videotape that caught defendant shoplifting as the employee did not actually see defendant do the actions depicted on the videotape, but the error was harmless. Ratliff v. State, 879 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In defendant's capital murder case, where the victim's mother's testimony regarding her belief that defendant killed her daughter was rationally based on her perception of her feelings and beliefs at the time she wrote the letter, and helpful to the clear understanding of her testimony, namely what motivated her to write the letter to defendant, a court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the mother to testify as to her motivation for writing the letter to defendant. McGowen v. State, 859 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 2003).

In a negligence suit against the Mississippi Department of Transportation, the trial court properly allowed a witness who lived near the scene of the plaintiff's accident to testify about his opinion as to the cause of the accident — the accumulation of water at the site — and the causes of other accidents along the same stretch of highway, as the opinions were based on his firsthand knowledge gained from observing the road on which he had lived for 25 years; he had a familiarity with the road that the jury did not have. Miss. DOT v. Cargile, 847 So. 2d 258 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing a designated lay witness's testimony to stray into the realm of scientific, technical, and specialized knowledge that only could be admitted as expert testimony after assessment pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing a designated laywitness for a car manufacturer to testify as to how an air bag system in a car worked; however, the admission of the testimony was harmless error as the witness's description of how an air bag worked was neutral information that did not harm the plaintiffs. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Police officer's testimony regarding the type of shotgun shells he observed at the scene of a shooting did not constitute expert testimony; the officer was permitted to testify because the matter was within his personal knowledge, and the testimony was helpful to the trier of fact. Lane v. State, 841 So. 2d 1163 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Accident victim was clearly incompetent to testify regarding the victim's own medical prognosis and treatment. Haggerty v. Foster, 838 So. 2d 948 (Miss. 2002).

Even though defendant pleaded guilty to transferring cocaine, the person to whom defendant sold the cocaine and who was then shot because he could not pay, might have been competent to testify under Miss. R. Evid. 701 that the substance he purchased from defendant was, in fact, cocaine; unavailability of the cocaine for chemical analysis did not, therefore, result in there being an insufficient factual basis for defendant's plea when that fact was considered along with other evidence considered by the trial court prior to accepting the plea. Boddie v. State, 850 So. 2d 1205 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

In a burglary prosecution, testimony by a police officer that a white powdery substance on the defendant's clothing was consistent with the sheet rock powder found near the hole cut in a sheet rock wall was a lay opinion that required no specialized knowledge. Florence v. State, 786 So. 2d 409 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a divorce proceeding in which the wife's use of the Internet to meet men was at issue, it was error for the court to allow a counselor to testify with regard to Internet addiction and Internet pornography where the counselor was not qualified as an expert witness and had no personal knowledge of the wife's computer usage. Bower v. Bower, 758 So. 2d 405 (Miss. 2000).

Where welfare worker had no firsthand knowledge of how a baby ingested cocaine, her testimony was merely speculative and based on what she heard others say; it was therefore beyond her knowledge or expertise and created undue prejudice, constituting reversible error. Jones v. State, 678 So. 2d 707 (Miss. 1996).

Court at embezzlement trial erred in allowing store owner to state his opinions and interpretations of clerk's actions as depicted in surveillance videotape, where owner was not at store on day tape was made, and instances in which owner alleged that clerk was pocketing cash from register could not be viewed since clerk was turned away from camera. Wells v. State, 604 So. 2d 271 (Miss. 1992).

In a wrongful death action against arising from an incident in which a three-year old child was hit by a car and died in the parking lot of the defendant store, the court properly sustained an objection and refused to permit the plaintiff father to answer the question whether, ". . .If there had been any speed barriers in front of the Jitney Jungle, which would have slowed that car down, based entirely on your perception, would you have been able to get to Jeremy before that car hit him?" Jones v. Jitney Jungle Stores of Am., 730 So. 2d 555 (Miss. 1998).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

A landowner's opinion as to the value of property irrationally based on his perception (one based on factors not legally relevant), is inadmissible as it is simply irrelevant. Mitchell, May 19, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0192.

Rule 702. Testimony by experts.

If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case. (Amended effective May 29, 2003, to clarify the gatekeeping responsibilities of the court in evaluating the admissibility of expert testimony.)

COMMENT

The use of the hypothetical question has been justly criticized. Rule 702 permits an expert to testify by giving an opinion or any other form of testimony, such as an exposition. Rule 702 seeks to encourage the use of expert testimony in non-opinion form when counsel believes the trier can draw the requisite inference. The rule, however, does not abolish the use of opinions. As the FRE Advisory Committee's Note pointed out, it will still be possible for an expert to take the next step of suggesting the inference which should be drawn from applying the specialized knowledge to the facts.

As has long been the practice in Mississippi, Rule 702 recognizes that one may qualify as an expert in many fields in addition to science or medicine, such as real estate, cotton brokering, auto mechanics or plumbing. Boggs v. Eaton, 379 So.2d 520 (1980); Early-Gary, Inc. v. Walters, 294 So.2d 181 (Miss. 1974); Ludlow Corp. v. Arkwright-Boston Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 317 So.2d 47 (Miss. 1975). Rule 702 is the standard for the admission of expert testimony from such other fields as well as for scientific testimony. See Kuhmo Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137 (1999).

By the 2003 amendment of Rule 702, the Supreme Court clearly recognizes the gate keeping responsibility of the trial court to determine whether the expert testimony is relevant and reliable. This follows the 2000 adoption of a like amendment to Fed. R. Evid., 702 adopted in response to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. 509 U.S. 579 (1993). It is important to note that Rule 702 does not relax the traditional standards for determining that the witness is indeed qualified to speak an opinion on a matter within a purported field of knowledge, and that the factors mentioned in Daubert do not constitute an exclusive list of those to be considered in making the determination; Daubert's "list of factors was meant to be helpful, not definitive." Kuhmo, 526 U.S. at 151. In general.

Circuit judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the agent to testify about the results of the field test because defendant did not object to the State's failure to formally tender him as an expert. Cowan v. Miss. Bureau of Narcotics, 2 So. 3d 759 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Without its expert's opinion, in which there was no evidence that it was based on sound scientific principles, Miss. R. Evid. 702, the school district was unable to prove that the copper tubing which allegedly caused the fire was the same tubing installed by the company; the school district could not prove that the company was negligent in its installation. Smith v. Clement, 983 So. 2d 285 (Miss. 2008).

It was improper to allow testimony lumping the corporation, based on its size, into a hypothetical with other large companies that may have a history of intimidating and deceiving regulatory agencies; from the expert's line of testimony, the jury easily could have been misled into believing that the corporation was guilty of covering up alleged regulatory violations, and under a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing test, the expert's testimony was more prejudicial to the corporation than probative; there existed a real danger that the testimony would unfairly prejudice the corporation and mislead the jury with the accusations of hypothetical regulatory violations by the corporation. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Strong, 968 So. 2d 410 (Miss. 2007).

In a suit brought by parents of children burned in a school bus fire, the trial court improperly struck the expert's affidavit in the school district's subsequent indemnity action against a gas company that converted buses owned by the district from gasoline to propane use, because the parents and the district did not have an opportunity to be heard regarding the district's expert testimony on causation as contemplated by Miss. R. Evid. 702 and Daubert. Smith v. Clement, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 548 (Miss. Oct. 4, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 983 So. 2d 285, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 172, CCH Prod. Liab. Rep. P17970 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court erred in not granting a trial continuance to defendant company in a personal injury suit because the untimely designation of plaintiff's expert's 59 (versus 60) days prior to trial, the addition of a third theory of liability as to the company one week before trial, and the last-minute deposition of the expert, had the effect of working a severe prejudice on the company which could have been avoided had the trial court allowed a reasonable continuation of the trial. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant claimed that the testimony of the accident reconstructionist and the forensic toxicologist should have been excluded because the defense was not allowed to voir dire those witnesses about the principles and methods used in arriving at their opinions. However, the defense extensively cross-examined the witnesses at issue regarding the methods used to arrive at their opinions on speed determination and the qualifications to calibrate the machine used to determine the blood alcohol level of defendant; the trial court did not err in its handling of those matters and discovery was not improperly restricted as to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 9.04(A), where the defense claimed that the reports from the various expert witnesses of the State were insufficient, but where said cross-examination of experts and voir dire of other experts was allowed. Lawrence v. State, 931 So. 2d 600 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 345 (Miss. 2006).

In a condemnation proceeding, the trial court erred by failing to strike the testimony of the city's expert because his entire appraisal of the value of the private water utility was based on data from Public Service Commission (PSC) used to determine rates that did not include the value of property contributed by land developers. The testimony of the city's expert was not based on sufficient facts and data and was therefore unreliable and inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 702. Dedeaux Util. Co. v. City of Gulfport, 938 So. 2d 838 (Miss. 2006), remanded by 63 So. 3d 514, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 191 (Miss. 2011).

For expert testimony to be admissible, it must be both relevant and reliable; the party offering the testimony must show that the expert based his/her opinion not on opinions or speculation, but rather on scientific methods and procedures, and the trial judge assumes the critical role as a gatekeeper in assessing the value of the testimony. Webb v. Braswell, 930 So. 2d 387 (Miss. 2006).

Because the doctor, as the administratrix's expert, was not competent to offer opinions as to the standard of care of dialysis clinics, the appropriate monitoring of the dialysis process or the appropriate procedures in inserting and maintaining dialysis grafts, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, the circuit court properly granted summary judgment to the medical group. Lawrence v. State, 931 So. 2d 600 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 345 (Miss. 2006).

By languishing in her production of an expert witness, the patient did not have the evidence to establish the elements of proximate cause and damages; the first step in the process was a determination of known risks, and once the known risks were enumerated, they could be evaluated as to which were material; where a plaintiff charged that a doctor performed a procedure without first obtaining informed consent, the plaintiff's first task was to establish what were the known risks of the procedure, which required an expert opinion, and in order to establish that continuing pain was a known risk of the procedure, expert testimony was required. Jamison v. Kilgore, 903 So. 2d 45 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not err in allowing an expert witness to testify under Miss. R. Evid. 702, that CPR caused a tear in the anastomosis, even though the theory had not been subjected to peer review as it was scientific knowledge that would assist the trier of fact, and plaintiffs could challenge the opinion through cross-examination. Poole v. Avara, 908 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2005).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 103(a), defendant was procedurally barred from raising an issue on appeal because he did not contest a social worker's expert testimony at trial. However, defendant's claim was without merit because the social worker was properly allowed to testify in the child-fondling case regarding the social worker's forensic interview because she qualified as an expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702, and she did not opine as to the victim's truthfulness in the interview; rather she opined that the child's behavior and story were consistent with those of child sex abuse victims. Elkins v. State, 918 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 26 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 547 U.S. 1194, 126 S. Ct. 2865, 165 L. Ed. 2d 898, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4564, 74 U.S.L.W. 3685 (2006).

Trial court erred in allowing auto manufacturer's expert to provide lay testimony about air bag inflation technology court because the manufacturer failed to designate him as an expert before the deadline, and his "lay testimony" strayed into the realm of scientific, technical and specialized knowledge that could only be admitted as expert testimony after assessment pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702. Also the injured driver's family members were prejudiced by the expert's testimony as it rebutted their expert's testimony regarding their claim of defective design under the Mississippi Product Liability Act, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-1-63. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 21 (Miss. Jan. 13, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded in part by 904 So. 2d 1077, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 247 (Miss. 2005).

Frye test is abandoned and the modified Daubert test is adopted; Miss. R. Evid. 702, as amended, is to be applied to assess there liability and admissibility of expert testimony. Miss. Transp. Comm'n v. McLemore, 863 So. 2d 31 (Miss. 2003).

State's expert was recognized as an expert witness pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 in the field of forensic science specializing in substance identification; the trial court properly indicated that pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703, experts were allowed to base their opinion on things reasonably used by them to form these opinions, such that the testimony based on the machine's reading and the notes of the analyst was admissible. Lenoir v. State, 853 So. 2d 845 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

It is reversible error to allow expert testimony from a witness never qualified or tendered as an expert. Cotton v. State, 675 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1996).

Accident reconstruction.

During defendant's trial for DUI, the court did not abuse its discretion in accepting an accident reconstructionist as an expert witness; while the reconstructionist did not possess all of the skills of an accident reconstructionist on the date of the accident, the reconstructionist utilized skills acquired up to the date of the accident to make initial findings and finished the report only after acquiring skills from the final course. Harness v. State, 58 So. 3d 12 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 2010 Miss. LEXIS 270 (Miss. May 27, 2010), affirmed by 58 So. 3d 1, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 59 (Miss. 2011)supra.

Accident reconstructionist testified that given the slow speed at which the tractor trailer was turning, if the injured person (who skidded into the rear of the trailer), had been keeping a proper lookout and operating his vehicle under control at a safe speed, the accident would not have happened. Even though the testimony embraced an ultimate issue on the subject of negligence, such an invasion of the province of the jury was not absolutely barred, and it was not inadmissible as the testimony was helpful to the determination of the case. McKenzie v. Supervalu, Inc., 883 So. 2d 1188 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

A law enforcement officer may, with proper training and experience, qualify as an expert accident reconstructionist. Ware v. State, 790 So. 2d 201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In an action arising from an accident involving a mini-pickup truck that was towing an automobile that weighed more than the truck, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony of an accident reconstruction expert since (1) by the time the expert arrived at the scene of the accident, the scene was washed away and the evidence was gone, and (2) he lacked specialized knowledge to render an opinion with regard to other matters to which he might have testified. Watkins v. U-Haul Int'l, Inc., 770 So. 2d 970 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

A witness was qualified as an accident reconstruction expert where (1) he received specialized training and education at the University of Texas at Austin, the Society of Automatic Engineers for accident reconstruction, and the Institute of Police Technology and Management in Jacksonville, Florida, (2) he had previously been qualified to testify as to accident reconstruction in 47 states including Mississippi, and (3) he was a professional race car driver. Fielder v. Magnolia Bev. Co., 757 So. 2d 925 (Miss. 1999).

In a products liability action arising from an automobile accident allegedly caused by a defective ball joint on a pickup truck, the plaintiff's expert was fully qualified to testify as an expert in auto mechanics and his testimony did not require him to be qualified as an accident reconstruction expert where he had extensive experience as a professional mechanic and testified, inter alia, as to whether a ball stud was loose before the accident. GMC v. Pegues, 738 So. 2d 746 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Calculation of damages.

Adoption of the Daubert standard was not a basis for amending previous caselaw because the idea that the calculation of income for children should be based on the average income for a person in the community in which they lived was unfair and prejudicial, and would result in potentially disparate recoveries for children from affluent communities as opposed to children from less affluent areas. Spotlite Skating Rink, Inc. v. Barnes, 988 So. 2d 364 (Miss. 2008).

Chiropractic expert.

In a chiropractic malpractice action, testimony by the defendant chiropractor that he did not deviate from the standard of care necessarily required expertise in the field of chiropractics and, therefore, constituted expert testimony. McCaffrey v. Puckett, 784 So. 2d 197 (Miss. 2001).

Computer information.

Expert's use of a computer-aided design program to create a simulation of the expert's alternative design of a beam connecting the roof of a car to its body was sufficiently reliable for purposes of Miss. R. Evid. 702; the expert was not required to physically build a model of the alternative design in order to demonstrate its efficacy. Hyundai Motor Am. v. Applewhite, 53 So. 3d 749 (Miss. 2011).

The rule did not apply to testimony by a police officer that he had checked a computer for a document that the defendant claimed was on the hard drive, but did not find any such document; such testimony did not involve information difficult to comprehend or require additional focused training in computer use. Boone v. State, 811 So. 2d 402 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Credibility.

Expert's testimony was both relevant and reliable as a qualified third-party's evaluation of the situation was useful to the fact-finder and custody evaluation experts were often called to testify in modification matters, and the mother hired her own expert for the same purpose; the expert's credentials showed he had the skill, experience, and education to assist the trier of fact in the determination. The interviews were an appropriate, reliable method of gathering the information, and the chancellor was aware of the expert's limited time with the mother, which was in part due to her transience. Minter v. Minter, 29 So. 3d 840 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 134 (Miss. 2010).

Neither Miss. R. Evid. 702 nor its comment mentions any requirement that statements relied upon by an expert using proper, reliable, methodology also be found credible. Treasure Bay Corp. v. Ricard, 967 So. 2d 1235 (Miss. 2007).

Custody.

Chancellor found that he observed the doctor as an expert witness for several years and found him always to have the best interest of the child in mind, and he was never biased toward a specific parent; further, the mother did not file a motion in limine to exclude the expert's testimony before trial—the first time she raised the issue was at the hearing. Accordingly, the chancellor did not abuse his discretion in admitting the expert's testimony regarding the son's custody. Minter v. Minter, 29 So. 3d 840 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 134 (Miss. 2010).

Daubert hearing not requested.

There was nothing showing that defendant asked the trial court to conduct a Daubert hearing and the court could not rule on whether the trial court abused its discretion in failing to conduct a Daubert hearing when defendant failed to request one. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Dental expert.

In a capital murder case, a doctor was properly allowed to testify that defendant's dentition matched the bite marks on the victim's neck, breast, and arm because he possessed the knowledge, skill, experience, and training necessary to qualify as an expert in forensic odontology. Howard v. State, 853 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1197, 124 S. Ct. 1455, 158 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2004).

In a prosecution for felonious child abuse, it was not error for a dentist to testify that the victim's injuries were "serious", as legal conclusions are not per se prohibited. McBeath v. State, 739 So. 2d 451 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

A dentist was properly allowed to testify as an expert in wound pattern analysis where, in addition to his regular dental education, he had received extensive training in dental forensics from the United States Air Force, had conducted hundreds of death investigations over 19 years, had published and lectured extensively in the field, and had been accepted as an expert on wound pattern analysis in six or seven states. Puckett v. State, 737 So. 2d 322 (Miss. 1999).

Court at trial for driving under the influence did not err in refusing to allow defendant's expert dental witness to give his opinion regarding impact of defendant's bridge on his intoxilyzer test; question was not whether expert was qualified in making of dental appliances, but whether he had specialized knowledge regarding whether a partial bridge such as defendant's could affect results of an intoxilyzer test, and before a qualified expert's opinion could be received, it was required to rise above mere speculation. Goforth v. City of Ridgeland, 603 So. 2d 323 (Miss. 1992).

In the murder trial of a thirteen-year-old defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by not allowing an expert to testify regarding false confessions because in reviewing the Daubert factors, the proposed testimony did not satisfy Miss. R. Evid. 702 in that while the expert was qualified in her field, there was no empirical test available to determine whether a confession was truthful or not; the proponents of the theories were few; and there was no way to discern a rate of error. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 88 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 31, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion en banc at, modified and rehearing denied by 955 So. 2d 864, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 311 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Fingerprint expert.

Defendant's conviction for murder was proper where the introduction of fingerprint evidence had long been allowed to establish the identity of a party. Wright v. State, 915 So. 2d 527 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Fingerprint expert's testimony concerning his comparison of background materials lifted with latent print was properly admitted; fingerprint examination was a field of knowledge which had gained general acceptance, and comparison of background materials was necessarily involved in the practice of fingerprint examination. Wilson v. State, 574 So. 2d 1324 (Miss. 1990).

This rule did not apply to support admissibility of police officer's testimony as to freshness of fingerprint, because officer was never tendered as an expert. Roberson v. State, 569 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 1990).

Firearms expert.

Expert testimony as to the type of bullet that killed a victim was permissible in defendant's murder trial because the trial court accepted that the expert was qualified in the area of forensic pathology, terminal ballistics was a subfield of forensic pathology, and defendant was procedurally barred from challenging the expert's qualifications because he failed to object to them at trial. Keys v. State, 33 So. 3d 1143 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 228 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was appropriate because the trial court did not err in not qualifying defendant's proffered firearms expert. Although it was clear that the expert had vast experience with military and police training, there simply was not enough information available about the particular shotgun used by defendant to provide the necessary relevancy and reliability for the expert's testimony. Nelson v. State, 995 So. 2d 799 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 660 (Miss. 2008).

Forensic pathologist.

Defendant's manslaughter conviction was proper because the trial court did not err in admitting a forensic pathologist's testimony since he met the standard for admission of expert testimony. The expert testified that he obtained a medical degree, that he had pathology training, and that he had more than 30-years experience within the field of forensic pathology; there was no suggestion in the record that the testimony was based on unreliable principles and methods or that the expert misapplied the principles and methods to the facts of the case. Showers v. State, 70 So. 3d 241 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 69 So. 3d 767, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 444 (Miss. 2011).

In a capital murder trial, a forensic pathologist was qualified to give opinion evidence concerning the position of the gun that fired the fatal shot in relation to the bullet path; such evidence was well within his expertise as a physician trained in forensic pathology and was therefore properly admitted. Maye v. State, 49 So. 3d 1140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), vacated by, remanded by 49 So. 3d 1124, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 622 (Miss. 2010).

Expert testimony as to the cause and manner of the victim's death was permissible in defendant's murder trial because the trial court accepted, without objection from defendant, that the expert was qualified in the area of forensic pathology, and the expert did not testify that he was the State Medical Examiner, and, therefore, the expert was not required to be board certified by the American Board of Pathology. Keys v. State, 33 So. 3d 1143 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 228 (Miss. 2010).

It was not error under Miss. R. Evid. 702 to allow an expert in forensic pathology to testify about the position of the victim when he was shot, nor to describe the type pain, trauma, and suffering the victim could have experienced after being shot. Brown v. State, 33 So. 3d 1134 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 34 So. 3d 1176, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 225 (Miss. 2010).

There was no abuse of discretion in the admission of a forensic toxicologists's opinion that a defendant, who was charged with aggravated DUI, "possibly" was in the elimination phase at the time of the accident. Lepine v. State, 10 So. 3d 927 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in admitting the expert testimony of a forensic pathologist because his opinion testimony was based upon his observations of the victim's body, facts made known to him, and his observations of anatomical drawings and photographs at trial and the pathologist testified that he had reviewed the victim's medical records and was able to reach an opinion with a reasonable degree of medical certainty as to the cause and manner of the victim's death. Dixon v. State, 17 So. 3d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 451 (Miss. 2009).

In a murder trial, the court's admission of a forensic pathologist's expert testimony on blood spatter evidence was harmless. Even if such testimony had been excluded, the jury heard defendant admit to stabbing the victim multiple times and there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that defendant did not act in self-defense in killing the victim. Flaggs v. State, 999 So. 2d 393 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed, dismissed without prejudice by, writ of certiorari denied by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 37 (Miss. Jan. 22, 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 53 (Miss. 2009).

In a case where defendant was charged with capital murder after he slammed his car into a patrol car that was blocking his path during a chase, a trial court did not err by allowing a forensic pathologist to testify about an officer's location when he was killed because, under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the pathologist was allowed to testify as an expert that the wounds indicated that the officer was not inside the vehicle. White v. State, 964 So. 2d 1181 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant confessed to participating in the wife's plan to murder her husband, the circuit court erred by allowing an expert qualified in forensic pathology to give testimony concerning the two-shooter theory; there was no showing that the expert's testimony was based, not on opinions or speculation, but rather on scientific methods and procedures. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 7 (Miss. Jan. 4, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 955 So. 2d 787, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 349 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err in admitting the forensic pathologist's testimony concerning the autopsy, bruises on the victim's body consistent with defensive posturing, the trajectory of the bullet, and the cause and manner of the victim's death, where a foundation was laid showing the expert was well qualified; further, the issue of the quality of the autopsy photos went to their weight, not their admissibility. Ross v. State, 883 So. 2d 1181 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 883 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. 2004).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted the alleged murder weapon into evidence and permitted a forensic expert to testify that the victim was shot with the same type of weapon. Dycus v. State, 875 So. 2d 140 (Miss. 2004).

In defendant's capital murder case, a court did not err in allowing an expert to testify that a weapon matched the injury on the victim where defense counsel was given the opportunity to interview the expert about what his testimony would be, the expert said that he would testify that the mallet in the photograph was consistent with the injuries to the victim's head, but it would be impossible to say the mallet was the murder weapon, and defense counsel offered a general objection but did not ask for a continuance and did not specify a discovery violation. McGowen v. State, 859 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 2003).

An employee of the Mississippi Crime Laboratory was qualified to testify as an expert, notwithstanding that she had only reached the Forensic Scientist 1 level and that her work required supervision, where (1) she had been employed previously as an organic chemist and toxologist, (2) she had reviewed numerous articles and books on forensic science, drug chemistry, and drug analysis, and completed a 40 hour course with the Drug Enforcement Agency, and (3) she had also previously testified and been accepted as an expert throughout courts in the state of Mississippi. Grass v. State, 739 So. 2d 428 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The trial court properly accepted a physician as an expert in the field of forensic odontology where (1) the defendant and the state stipulated that there is a body of scientific knowledge which allows for the identification of individuals based upon bite mark examination on soft tissue, (2) there was sufficient evidence of the expert's qualifications, and (3) a defense expert begrudgingly admitted that there was nothing wrong with the technique he used in comparing the defendant's dental impressions to the bite marks on the victim. Brewer v. State, 725 So. 2d 106 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1027, 119 S. Ct. 1270, 143 L. Ed. 2d 365 (1999).

It is not the case that only board certified forensic pathologists are qualified to render expert opinions in matters relating to deaths arising out of traumatic injuries. Johnson v. State, — So. 2d —, 1998 Miss. App. LEXIS 998 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 18, 1998), reversed by, remanded by 754 So. 2d 1178, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 50 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, a forensic pathologist was properly permitted to testify that the murder victim was holding his hands in front of his face at the time that one of his gunshot wounds was sustained. Bell v. State, 725 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1122, 119 S. Ct. 1777, 143 L. Ed. 2d 805 (1999).

Given a pathologist's extensive forensic experience, it was possible for him to state that the projectile removed from a murder victim's body was consistent with a .22 caliber bullet; the pathologist admitted that he could not and did not make a conclusive determination of the caliber of the bullet, and, therefore, the court did not err in allowing him to testify that the caliber of the projectiles was consistent with a .22 caliber projectile. Dudley v. State, 719 So. 2d 180 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court did not err in permitting forensic pathologist to testify as to cause of victim's death, and to give opinions as to blood splatters on her clothing and debris in her throat; these matters were clearly within his field of expertise, and he gave a detailed basis for every conclusion he reached. Whittington v. State, 523 So. 2d 966 (Miss. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 923, 109 S. Ct. 304, 102 L. Ed. 2d 323 (1988).

Harmless error.

In a capital murder and arson case, even if the trial court erred in permitting a deputy marshal's testimony that the fires were intentionally set, the error was harmless as defendant was seen by numerous persons driving the victim's car and told his sister that he intended to burn it; he also told her that he intended to burn the victims's house minutes before the fire was discovered. Young v. State, 981 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 206 (Miss. 2008).

Human factors psychologist.

Trial court committed a clear error of judgment in excluding the expert testimony of a human factor's psychologist relating to the sufficiency of a car manufacturer's warning as to the danger of its auto air bag, on the ground that the witness was not an expert in auto air bag technology; further, the error was not harmless as the expert was the plaintiffs' sole warnings expert, and the substance of his testimony did not come in through any other route. Therefore, the plaintiffs were substantially prejudiced by the error. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Industry standards.

Directed verdict in favor of the medical providers in the patient's medical malpractice action was inappropriate because the patient's proffered expert was a neurologist who had never performed middle ear surgery, which was the type of surgery performed on the patient; thus, that proffered expert was unable to offer an opinion on the appropriate standard of care that was owed to the patient. Troupe v. McAuley, 955 So. 2d 848 (Miss. 2007).

Witness's opinion as to trucking industry standards and customs was derived from specialized knowledge and was therefore subject to disclosure in response to plaintiffs' expert witness interrogatory, and therefore trial court erred in allowing him to provide expert testimony. Langston v. Kidder, 670 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1995).

Legal expert.

Testimony of attorney called as expert in action brought by client against its lawyer was properly admitted, where it assisted jury in understanding extensive testimony of both client and lawyer, particularly as to construction law and the relationship between owner, contractor and surety in a construction project. Terrain Enters., Inc. v. Mockbee, 654 So. 2d 1122 (Miss. 1995).

Circuit court in legal malpractice action should have allowed expert testimony regarding reasonableness of the attorney's actions in filing suit. Stevens v. Lake, 615 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 1993).

Medical expert.

Summary judgment in favor of a doctor and a clinic was appropriate in a medical malpractice and wrongful death action because the obstetrician-gynecologist whom the parents had offered as an expert was unable to provide reliable testimony regarding the cause of their baby's death and, thus, the testimony was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 702. The expert was not a pathologist and did not present any scientific evidence that supported his opinion as to cause of death. In fact, the parents offered as an additional expert witness, a pathologist who gave an opinion different from the obstetrician-gynecologist's conclusion. Further, the expert did not study the placental tissues of the baby under a microscope. Finally, the autopsy report did not establish placental insufficiency as the cause of death. Worthy v. McNair, 37 So. 3d 609 (Miss. 2010).

In a personal injury action, a trial court's granting of a motion to strike the expert testimony of a doctor was arbitrary and clearly erroneous, and constituted an abuse of discretion, where the opinion of the doctor, a qualified obstetrician and gynecologist, was based on an interpretation of the medical records in light of the doctor's experience, training, and expertise. The doctor's opinion did not amount to mere speculation. It constituted a scientifically grounded theory of causation, not junk science. Maliyah Ashunti Hubbard v. McDonald's Corp., 41 So. 3d 670 (Miss. 2010).

Expert's affidavit was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 702 to establish a prima facie medical-negligence claim that defendant doctor failed to exercise reasonable care and skill in the surgical removal of spinal-cord stimulator from plaintiff patient because the affidavit contained no information regarding the field in which the expert was expected to testify, lacked any articulation of the applicable standard of care, and did not contain underlying facts explaining how the doctor allegedly deviated from the standard of care. Sanders v. Wiseman, 29 So. 3d 138 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in allowing a toxicologist to testify to the effects of the use of methamphetamine on the decedent's body. The widow did not object to the expert's use of the words "could have" as being an improper legal standard pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 and 703 and she was provided notice of the contents of the expert's opinion, which included the issue of fatigue. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the witness's testimony regarding the efficacy of interventions to prolong plaintiff's pregnancy where the witness could produce no support for his opinion, other than his own personal experience. Hill v. Mills, 26 So. 3d 322 (Miss. 2010).

In a medical malpractice action brought by patient's personal representative alleging patient's death to have been due to complications arising out of a femoral angiogram, the trial court did not err in striking the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness, a surgeon, who had sufficient knowledge, skill, training, education, and experience to qualify him to testify as an expert in general surgery, but failed to establish that he had any special training or knowledge in the field of cardiology sufficient to qualify him as an expert in that field. McDaniel v. Pidikiti, 39 So. 3d 952 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, nursing experts are not qualified to opine as to medical causation and are unable to establish the necessary element of proximate cause. Vaughn v. Miss. Baptist Med. Ctr., 20 So. 3d 645 (Miss. 2009).

Plaintiff patient's expert witness—a nurse—possessed the requisite knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education to be qualified as an expert in the field of nursing and was qualified to testify, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, concerning the standard of care and any deviations on the part of the hospital nursing staff from that standard of care. However, she could not testify as to medical causation. Vaughn v. Miss. Baptist Med. Ctr., 20 So. 3d 645 (Miss. 2009).

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, the trial court properly excluded a doctor's expert testimony because the doctor was not familiar with the standard of care to which a thoracic surgeon performing the surgery at issue was held, and there was no basis in the record to show that the doctor was familiar with the requirements of a surgical team—he was an expert in internal medicine, not surgery. Paige v. Miss. Baptist Med. Ctr., 31 So. 3d 637 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Medical experts' testimony was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because their qualifications were not legitimately questioned, and their testimony was sufficiently relevant and reliable regarding the causal connection between the neurotoxin in the adhesive to the illnesses the employees suffered while working on the glue line. Franklin Corp. v. Tedford, 18 So. 3d 215 (Miss. 2009).

Medical experts' testimony was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because their qualifications were not legitimately questioned, and their testimony was sufficiently relevant and reliable regarding the causal connection between the neurotoxin in the adhesive to the illnesses the employees suffered while working on the glue line. Franklin Corp. v. Tedford, 18 So. 3d 215 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court properly admitted a physician's testimony in defendant's trial for capital murder when the physician's background, training, and experience qualified the physician as an expert. Lima v. State, 7 So. 3d 903 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court properly granted a physician's and a center's motions to strike because neither of the widow's experts could testify as to the appropriate standard of care in the widow's medical malpractice/wrongful death action. Naomi Ruth McDonald v. Mem'l Hosp., 8 So. 3d 175 (Miss. 2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing expert witnesses to testify regarding scientific evidence on neurological impact of 1-BP on humans, which was a relatively new field of study with limited reliable methodology, because the experts' qualifications were not legitimately questioned, and their testimony was sufficiently relevant and reliable. Franklin Corp. v. Tedford, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 169 (Miss. Apr. 16, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 18 So. 3d 215, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 426 (Miss. 2009).

Although a medical license was not the sine qua non for a patient's medical expert to qualify in a medical negligence action, it had to be shown that the proposed expert had to know a great deal regarding the subject of his testimony. Not only could it not be said that the proposed expert was a specialist in neurosurgery as the State of Mississippi prohibited him from practicing neurosurgery, but the court could not find that the proposed expert was qualified based on his specialized knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education because the very reason he was not allowed to practice neurosurgery was that he was found to have deficiencies in his medical knowledge, specifically in the areas of spinal and intra cranial topics. Caldwell v. Warren, 2 So. 3d 751 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where an expert's testimony as to the driver's disability resulting from injuries received in a motor vehicle accident was not based on a comprehensive exam, the trial court erred in awarding the driver damages for disability. City of Jackson v. Spann, 4 So. 3d 1029 (Miss. 2009).

Expert's testimony met the requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 702, where it was based on sufficient facts of data in the form of the decedent's medical reports and medical publications; it was the produce of reliable principles and methods gleaned from the records, publications, and the expert's medical experience; and the trial judge found the expert would reliably apply the principles and methods to the facts of the case. Univ. Med. Ctr. v. Martin, 994 So. 2d 740 (Miss. Nov. 13, 2008).

In a medical malpractice and wrongful death case, the trial court did not err in permitting four expert witnesses who specialized in forensic pathology, forensic toxicology, pharmacology and toxicology, and gastroenterology and internal medicine to testify as to the condition of the deceased patient and the standard of care required of defendant doctor, who was an internist with a specialty in infectious diseases, because the expert witnesses sufficient established their familiarity with the standards of the doctor's specialty. Causey v. Sanders, 998 So. 2d 393 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of child under the age of 14 was appropriate because the admission of the testimony of a forensic interviewer and a doctor who was an expert in forensic interviewing and child abuse was not erroneous. The record did not show that those witnesses failed to reliably apply the principles of their expertise to the case. Carter v. State, 996 So. 2d 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 43 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of the State's expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 who did not physically evaluate the victim but merely reviewed his medical records because peer review by publication was only one factor on a non-exhaustive list of factors for admissibility, defendant had the opportunity to discredit the expert's theories by cross-examination, and the court found no merit to defendant's argument that since there was not yet board certification for child abuse and neglect that the expert could not qualify as an expert in child abuse. Middleton v. State, 980 So. 2d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of the State's expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because he was well qualified to present testimony as an expert in the field of pediatrics, he had over 30 publications regarding his specialty, he had given many lectures regarding pediatrics and pediatric trauma, he had lectured on shaken baby syndrome, and he testified that shaken baby syndrome was a widely accepted theory but admitted that there were a few well-respected physicians who disagreed. Middleton v. State, 980 So. 2d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of the State's expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because he was properly certified as an expert witness in pediatric radiology and the expert, as the victim's treating pediatric radiologist, was properly allowed to testify to his impressions regarding the causes of the victim's injuries, which he observed on the MRIs and CT scans of the victim. His initial reports were entered as exhibits and he testified about those findings at trial. Middleton v. State, 980 So. 2d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

There was no error in allowing the expert opinion of a victim's treating physician under Miss. R. Evid. 702 in a rape case because the physician did not render an opinion that the victim had been raped, but he merely recounted his perceptions about her physical condition upon arrival and noted that the vagina was not lacerated during consensual sex. McGriggs v. State, 987 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 641 (Miss. 2008).

In an aggravated assault case, an orthopedic surgeon should have been qualified as an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702 and not been allowed to give a lay opinion under Miss. R. Evid. 701 because he was acting in his professional capacity when he testified that a broken bone was caused by high-energy force. However, the error was harmless because it did not deny a substantial right or render the trial fundamentally unfair; photographs of the injuries suffered by defendant's girlfriend were shown, and the girlfriend testified that defendant forced her out of the car, threw her down, kicked her, and stomped on her back. O'Neal v. State, 977 So. 2d 1252 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case filed under the Mississippi Tort Claims Act, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 11-46-1 et seq., a trial court did not err by allowing expert testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because a witness did not have to be a pulmonologist in order to opine on matters concerning aspiration pneumonia; the witness had received specialized training and knowledge in medical school and by treating other patients. Univ. of Miss. Med. Ctr. v. Pounders, 970 So. 2d 141 (Miss. 2007).

Where a patient sustained a chemical burn from an intravenous chemotherapy treatment, an expert nurse was properly allowed to testify in the medical negligence action because the expert was a licensed nurse, familiar with the current standards of chemotherapy administration, and called to testify whether the administration of the drugs was done properly, she testified as to areas within her expertise. Sacks v. Necaise, 991 So. 2d 615 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 460 (Miss. Sept. 25, 2008).

In a wrongful death action, there was no error in partially excluding an expert's testimony; the parties conducted an extensive voir dire of the expert's qualifications to testify to the treatment that should have been provided to a decedent in light of his extreme weight loss, and the trial judge ruled that the expert was not familiar enough with those treatment options to offer an expert opinion. Mariner Health Care, Inc. v. Estate of Edwards, 964 So. 2d 1138 (Miss. 2007).

Expert's only testimony regarding traits of sexually abused children did not address similarities the victim shared with other sexually abused children, but noted that she differed from 98% of the other sexually abused children, and the expert's testimony also focused on the results of her physical examination of the victim, rather than child sexual abuse profiles; thus, the expert did not make improper generalizations about child abuse victims and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert's testimony pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702. Poynor v. State, 962 So. 2d 68 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2007).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the doctor in a medical malpractice action was appropriate because the trial court properly found that the patient's witness-doctor was not qualified to testify as to the standard of care of an internist; additionally, the alleged negligence of the doctor did not fall under the layman's exception. Hubbard v. Wansley, 954 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2007).

State's expert witness's only testimony regarding traits of sexually abused children did not address similarities defendant's first victim shared with other sexually abused children, but noted that the first victim differed from 98 percent of the other sexually abused children; thus, the expert did not make improper generalizations about child abuse victims, and therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert's testimony pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702. Poynor v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 857 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 21, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 962 So. 2d 68, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 292 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not commit plain error by admitting the son's expert's testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because, inter alia: (1) the expert's failure to consider lack of cardiac impairment did not render his testimony unreliable; and (2) the medical center did not question the expert about his experience with abdominal compartment syndrome. Univ. of Miss. Med. Ctr. v. Peacock, 972 So. 2d 619 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 5 (Miss. 2008).

Physician that served as a general medical officer in the air force, a flight surgeon for the national guard, and performed or assisted in numerous orthopedic surgeries was qualified as an expert to testify regarding injuries suffered to a mental patient's leg during an attempted escape. Miss. Dep't of Mental Health v. Hall, 936 So. 2d 917 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's manslaughter conviction was proper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 where the doctor was not asked to testify outside of his area of expertise in discussing the pattern of shot wounds on the victim's torso, describing the marks that would have been present had the victim been holding some item, such as a gun, between himself and defendant at the time of the shooting. Moore v. State, 932 So. 2d 833 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 780 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 520 (Miss. 2006).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 702, a pediatrician was allowed to assist the jury in understanding the evidence by presenting his opinion of the child's injuries because he was qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education. Under the guidance of Rule 702, the doctor could explain the nature of the injury to the child and the instrument which may have caused the bruising. McClain v. State, 929 So. 2d 946 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 294 (Miss. 2006).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the medical center in the executor's action for medical malpractice and wrongful death was improper because, the expert in question's training, experience, and corresponding knowledge, indicated that he was qualified as to the general standard of care. Partin v. N. Miss. Med. Ctr., Inc., 929 So. 2d 924 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 290 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 298 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 299 (Miss. 2006).

Based on a physician's experience and treatment of an abuse victim, there was a sufficient foundation for the physician to opine under Miss. R. Evid. 702 as to whether head injuries suffered by a minor child were accidental or not in a felony child abuse case. Wells v. State, 913 So. 2d 1053 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Because the unchallenged expert testimony at trial established that the decedent's stroke was not a foreseeable consequence of the alleged negligence which led to the decedent's fall, the estate was not permitted to recover damages related to the stroke, whether or not it was caused by the fall at issue in the personal injury action. City of Jackson v. Estate of Stewart, 908 So. 2d 703 (Miss. 2005).

In a products liability case arising from use of a prescription drug, a court erred by failing to grant the drug company's motion for a new trial because the medical testimony provided by plaintiffs failed to address and account for the innumerable preexisting conditions and other causative factors which were much more likely than the drug in question to have caused plaintiffs' symptoms. Janssen Pharmaceutica, Inc. v. Bailey, 878 So. 2d 31 (Miss. 2004).

In a wrongful death case, a court did not abuse its discretion in excluding defendant's expert's testimony where the testimony of the expert would have been cumulative to defendant's other expert testimony. Eckman v. Moore, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 552 (Miss. Oct. 23, 2003), opinion withdrawn by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 310 (Miss. Mar. 25, 2004), substituted opinion at 876 So. 2d 975, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 287 (Miss. 2004).

In a case where defendant was convicted of murder for the shooting death of his wife, the circuit judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing a doctor to testify as to the victim's brain injuries, as the doctor had personally observed the victim's motor function and brain activity. Jones v. State, 857 So. 2d 740 (Miss. 2003).

Doctor's testimony, in a medical malpractice suit where he was the defendant but not designated as an expert witness, was permissible where it was explanatory of the doctor's treatment of the patient and of his records and nursing records about the patient's care; however, some of the doctor's testimony as to the symptoms that the patient would have developed had the doctor negligently perforated the patient's bowel in a surgical procedure was clearly impermissible expert testimony. Therefore, the trial court erred in permitting the expert testimony; however, the error did not warrant reversal as the doctor's expert testimony was largely cumulative to that of his expert witnesses and the doctor presented no new information. Griffin v. McKenney, 877 So. 2d 425 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Even if the State's experts, two doctors, had never published any articles on child abuse, they were properly allowed to give opinions based on their prior experience with children in the emergency room. Kolberg v. State, 829 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 981, 123 S. Ct. 1787, 155 L. Ed. 2d 672 (2003).

An emergency room physician with 25 years experience in family practice and emergency medicine was qualified to give expert testimony in a rape prosecution regarding the gynecological aspects of his treatment and examination of the 11 and 13 year old victims. Simmons v. State, 722 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1998).

Trial court did not err in admitting testimony of State's expert pathologist who wrote two autopsy reports which differed in some respects; pathologist was subject to rigorous cross-examination, and jury had both autopsy reports as well as pathologist's explanation for writing two reports. Taylor v. State, 672 So. 2d 1246 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 994, 117 S. Ct. 486, 136 L. Ed. 2d 379 (1996).

Trial court erred in allowing examining physician to testify that child had been sexually traumatized, where the physician was not qualified as a psychiatrist or psychologist, and gave no evidence of any specialized training in field of child sexual abuse. Goodson v. State, 566 So. 2d 1142 (Miss. 1990).

Mental health expert.

In a sexual battery and touching of a child for lustful purposes case, the expert testimony of the four-year-old victim's therapist was properly admitted as it satisfied Miss. R. Evid. 702 and the Daubert standard. The expert's testimony was reliable, based on her experience as a child therapist since for over 25 years, her treatment of hundreds of children who had been sexually abused, and her qualification as an expert on prior occasions. Bishop v. State, 982 So. 2d 371 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate where a doctor did not impermissibly testify that the victim's brother, a child witness, was telling the truth during their interview in which he described his brother's death at the hands of defendant. Rather, the doctor testified about the indicators that she looked for during a forensic interview with a child victim/witness and then described the witness's demeanor and mannerisms during their interview. Osborne v. State, 942 So. 2d 193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 714 (Miss. 2006).

From the colloquies set forth in the record, the child psychologist did not offer a direct opinion that the child fondling victim was telling the truth. However, whether his testimony ran afoul of the prohibition against syndrome testimony was a closer question; while the psychologist did not specifically testify that the victim displayed the "so-called typical characteristics" of child-victims of sexual abuse, he came very close, but there was no reversible error because defendant never objected to the testimony on the basis that he urged on appeal. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 904 So. 2d 184 (Miss. 2005).

In a student's suit against a school district and others based on her alleged sexual assault by male students, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the defendants' expert (a master's level psychometrist and licensed counselor, whose practice included counseling in sexual abuse cases) to testify as to her credibility, as he testified that he had "seen" over 2800 children who had been sexually abused, and had testified in an unspecified number of trials involving child sexual abuse. T.K. v. Simpson County Sch. Dist., 846 So. 2d 312 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Since the state of mind or the mental health of accused is not an element of the offense of rape, doctor's testimony regarding defendant's mental health status would not have been helpful to jury in determining any fact in issue, and it was thus properly excluded. Ellis v. State, 667 So. 2d 599 (Miss. 1995).

Expert testimony was appropriate, and would be helpful to trier of fact, in proceeding to terminate parental rights based on mental illness of both natural parents. Lauderdale County Dep't of Human Servs. ex rel. Barnett v. T.H.G., 614 So. 2d 377 (Miss. 1992).

There was no error in allowing a forensic psychologist to testify for State in rebuttal to testimony of clinical psychologist called by defense, as the forensic psychologist's specialized knowledge was likely to assist jury in understanding evidence as it related to murder defendant's psychological makeup. Turner v. State, 573 So. 2d 657 (Miss. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 910, 111 S. Ct. 1695, 114 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1991).

Necessity for expert testimony.

Denial of a driver and passenger's motion for a new trial in their negligence action after the jury found in favor of the other driver was improper because the driver and passenger were denied their right to a fair trial. In part, the jury was given no expert testimony to use to draw a conclusion as to the negligence of the parties and without such testimony, the jury did not have sufficient information from which to reach a verdict. Denham v. Holmes, 60 So. 3d 803 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by, remanded by 60 So. 3d 773, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 192 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's argument that an investigator's testimony as to the path of the bullets was an area requiring expert testimony was without merit. The investigator's testimony was nothing more than his opinion based on his personal observations and the testimony was not intended to prove any ballistic evidence since defendant admitted to shooting the officers. Mayers v. State, 42 So. 3d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 42 So. 3d 24, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 437 (Miss. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err excluding two of the widow's experts from testifying on the issue of the taillight visibility and in allowing two of the trucking company's lay witnesses to render opinions on taillight visibility; dirt on the taillights was not of a nature that required an expert opinion because the jury had enough knowledge to discern whether the photographs depicted dirt on the taillights. Further, neither of the widow's experts were at the scene of the accident; the trucking company's lay witnesses were at the scene moments after the collision; and the lay witnesses testified about their personal knowledge and observations. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Record failed to reflect that the guardian ad litem possessed the qualifications to investigate child abuse, to determine substantiation, to interview children regarding allegations of sexual abuse, or to make any expert conclusions as to whether the allegations were substantiated or not; the determination as to whether sexual abuse occurred was a factual determination to be made by the chancellor. The chancellor was not provided any factual information regarding any inquiry as to the sexual abuse of the children and no qualified opinion of any facts derived therefrom. thus no accurate conclusion could properly be drawn. Jones v. Jones, 43 So. 3d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 463 (Miss. 2010).

In a statutory rape case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to appoint an expert where defendant did not show that it would have aided his defense that semen had been planted in the victim's vagina; defendant did not want an expert to testify at trial, but only requested assistance with cross-examination. Since he was able to conduct such without the aid of an expert, there was no due process violation. Ladd v. State, 969 So. 2d 141 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Summary judgment was properly granted to a doctor and a hospital in a medical malpractice action because the expert testimony offered by a patient's wife was insufficient since it did not articulate an objective standard; expert testimony was required to establish causation for a death that occurred several days after an overdose in a hospital, and it was also required to show why a doctor should have conducted a particular test in response to the overdose. Maxwell v. Baptist Mem'l Hospital-DeSoto, Inc., 958 So. 2d 284 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a death penalty case, counsel was not ineffective for failing to obtain expert testimony to show that the victim's body position was "staged" because it was doubtful that expert testimony regarding the positioning of the body would have likely resulted in a different verdict; the victim was found nude from the waist down with her shorts and underwear bunched at one ankle, as well as with five gunshot wounds to her head. Powers v. State, 945 So. 2d 386 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 551 U.S. 1149, 127 S. Ct. 3006, 168 L. Ed. 2d 733, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 8389, 75 U.S.L.W. 3695 (2007).

In a medical malpractice action, no expert was needed to explain to a jury the issue of whether a a nurse breached the standard of care when she told a minor patient's mother that a surgical procedure was going well when, in fact, the doctor had first begun the procedure on the patient's wrong eye. Smith v. Gilmore Mem. Hosp., Inc., 952 So. 2d 245 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by 952 So. 2d 177, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 179 (Miss. 2007).

Summary judgment was properly granted for the doctor on a patient's informed consent and malpractice claims because the patient failed to present expert medical testimony which was required to establish what type of warning the doctor should have given her about the risks of facial laser resurfacing and the treatment proximally causing her injury. McMichael v. Howell, 919 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 2005).

Expert did not have to testify that the particular desk owned by the victim was worth more than $250 where it was not necessary to establish a precise value on the stolen desk but merely to establish that the desk had a value that was greater than $250; it was common knowledge and not exclusively within the knowledge of an expert that antique furniture tended to appreciate, rather than depreciate, in value, and there was no need to rely on a complex economic model to establish the market value of an item that could be comparably priced. Thompson v. State, 910 So. 2d 60 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a case involving the destruction of trees, a trial court did not err in denying a motion for a new trial based on a failure to allow expert testimony because such testimony was not admissible to determine whether punitive damages were appropriate. Smith v. Parkerson Lumber, Inc., 888 So. 2d 1197 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Expert testimony is required in order to prove professional negligence by an attorney. Hence, summary judgment was properly awarded to an attorney in a client's legal malpractice/negligence action because the client failed to designate, offer, or list any expert on her list of witnesses who could support her allegations of legal malpractice. Montgomery v. Woolbright, 904 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. — 2004).

In an action arising from an accident involving a mini-pickup truck that was towing an automobile that weighed more than the truck, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony of an professor of mechanical engineering as the matters to which he would have testified either were resolved by stipulations or were matters of common knowledge. Watkins v. U-Haul Int'l, Inc., 770 So. 2d 970 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

At trial for embezzlement, store owner's knowledgeable testimony regarding retail business and standard operating procedures of cash registers was a contribution of something different requiring qualification as expert testimony and opinion under M.R.E. 702. Wells v. State, 604 So. 2d 271 (Miss. 1992).

Opinions.

Trial court abused its discretion in finding the expert opinion unsupported by a factual basis or otherwise incompetent on the issue of causation. Nothing in the record suggested that the expert's methodology was flawed or that the expert was not qualified to render such an opinion. Rhaly v. Waste Mgmt. of Miss., Inc., 43 So. 3d 509 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Officer's opinion testimony was properly admitted into evidence in defendant's trial for vehicular manslaughter while driving under the influence because the officer was a certified accident reconstructionist, and the officer was qualified as an expert in both state and federal courts. Hudspeth v. State, 28 So. 3d 600 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 89 (Miss. 2010).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding certain testimony from defendant's expert witness as it was irrelevant, but he allowed the expert to testify regarding his other conclusions. Grant v. State, 8 So. 3d 213 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 207 (Miss. 2009).

Expert's testimony was unreliable and therefore inadmissible under the Daubert standard because none of the studies upon which he relied supported his opinion that benzene exposure caused small-cell lymphocytic lymphoma. Watts v. Radiator Specialty Co., 990 So. 2d 143 (Miss. 2008).

No evidence supported a finding that a clinical social worker's opinion (offered by husband) on child custody was either based upon sufficient facts or data or the product of reliable principles and methods as required by Miss. R. Evid. 702; to the contrary, the social worker's testimony was that her opinions were derived from unrecorded sessions with the child, without independent verification of the truthfulness vel non of the allegations, and based upon her five-week training and instincts. Giannaris v. Giannaris, 960 So. 2d 462 (Miss. 2007).

Admission of expert testimony in a capital murder case under Miss. R. Evid. 702 regarding a "two-shooter" theory to the exclusion of a single-shooter theory was prejudicial error because the testimony was based on opinion or speculation rather than scientific methods and procedures and was the only evidence other than defendant's contested confession to support the state's theory of defendant's guilt. Edmonds v. State, 955 So. 2d 787 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 1064, 128 S. Ct. 708, 169 L. Ed. 2d 557, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 12868, 76 U.S.L.W. 3287 (2007).

In defendant's trial for capital murder as a result of felonious abuse of a child, testimony as to the possible causes of the deceased child's injuries was not outside the scope of the state's expert witness because the testimony was relevant, and the testimony was helpful for the jury. Berry v. State, 980 So. 2d 936 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 204 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of marijuana within a correctional facility was appropriate because a witness's testimony did not exceed the scope of Miss. R. Evid. 702 since that witness did not opine as to whether the passed item at issue was marijuana; the witnesses never attempted to explain defendant's or his client's actions on the videotape. Jackson v. State, 962 So. 2d 649 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court erred in not excluding a driver's expert's opinion, both as a sanction under Miss. R. Civ. P. 37 and Miss. R. Evid. 702, because the expert's opinion was not based on sufficient facts; the expert based his opinion on the driver's misstatements. Gilbert v. Ireland, 949 So. 2d 784 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 949 So. 2d 37, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 153 (Miss. 2007).

Testimony of a highly-skilled, specially educated engineer presented by auto manufacturers was that of an expert witness because he was asked to make and explain highly technical calculations, apply his results to industry standards, and explain why the testing and calculations he approved were necessary. Because he had been permitted to testify as a "lay witness" only, the trial court abused its discretion in permitting the expanded scope of his testimony. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

In the wife's civil action against the tobacco company and retailers, claiming that the cigarettes sold to her husband were defective and unreasonably dangerous, because Miss. R. Evid. 703 allowed an expert to form an opinion on facts or data that was inadmissible and because forensic psychiatry had been recognized as a proper field of expertise, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, no error was committed by the trial court in allowing the tobacco company's expert to form an opinion on and to testify regarding whether the decedent could have stopped smoking at any time. Nunnally v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 869 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing a designated lay witness's testimony to stray into the realm of scientific, technical, and specialized knowledge that only could be admitted as expert testimony after assessment pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

A police officer did not give an opinion as contemplated by the rule; instead, he merely answered questions based upon his experience as a narcotics officer when he explained his determinations that certain evidence was relevant to the charges against the defendants and should be recovered during a search. Jones v. State, 754 So. 2d 476 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Police testimony.

In a criminal case, an officer is allowed to describe first-hand observations of injuries, but the officer cannot give expert testimony without first being qualified under Miss. R. Evid. 702. Hicks v. State, 6 So. 3d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 161 (Miss. 2009).

In an aggravated domestic assault case, for purposes of expert testimony, to the extent that the officer blurred the line between fact and opinion testimony with regard to his testimony that he would have expected defendant to have more severe injuries if he had been defending himself against a knife attack, any error was harmless in light of the overwhelming weight of the evidence of his guilt, including (1) the photographs of the victim's injuries; (2) the photographs of the ironing board he used to beat the victim; (3) the photographs of defendant's injuries; and (4) the testimony of the victim and her neighbor. Hicks v. State, 6 So. 3d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 161 (Miss. 2009).

In a criminal prosecution for murder and attempted arson, defendant argued that her written confession given to law enforcement was rendered involuntary because she suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder and borderline personality disorder; the circuit court did not err by admitting lay opinion testimony of defendant's mental status under Miss. R. Evid. 701. The investigating officer was permitted to testify that defendant did not appear to be suffering from any mental disease or illness; because the officer's testimony was based on his personal observation, it was not an expert opinion under Miss. R. Evid. 702. Brown v. State, 981 So. 2d 1007 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 222 (Miss. 2008).

Court erred in determining that cash found during a police search of appellant's bedroom was forfeitable on the ground that it was found in close proximity to drug paraphernalia because no evidence supported the finding that a brass container attached to a Brillo pad, a piece of foil with holes in it, and plastic bags qualified as drug paraphernalia. The testimony of a police officer who had attended drug schools could not have been considered expert testimony because the city did not qualify him as an expert witness at trial. Evans v. City of Aberdeen, 925 So. 2d 850 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), affirmed by 926 So. 2d 181, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 120 (Miss. 2006).

While the detective should not have been permitted to testify as to the result of a DNA study because he was not an expert, it was harmless because an expert also testified as to the results. Bailey v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 508 (Miss. Ct. App. June 27, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 956 So. 2d 1016, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case involving possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, there was no specific objection relating to expert testimony on the value and packaging of the cocaine by police; the objection made was based on relevance, so the issue of expertise was not preserved for appellate review. Dixon v. State, 953 So. 2d 1117 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), affirmed by 953 So. 2d 1108, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 210 (Miss. 2007).

At defendant's trial for armed robbery, where a police officer testified about yellow marks on currency found on defendant as coming from markers used to check for counterfeits and further that the officer had learned after the arrest that such marks eventually disappear, such testimony was improperly admitted because it required specialized knowledge and the officer had not been qualified as an expert; however, on appeal the court held that the error was harmless in light of the store clerk's identification of defendant, a regular customer, as the robber and other evidence of defendant's guilt. Rash v. State, 840 So. 2d 774 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The trial court did not err by admitting a police officer's testimony about his opinion that the defendant had burglarized a store, notwithstanding the argument that the statement did not meet the requirements for lay opinions under Rule 701 and that the officer had not been determined to be an expert as required for expert opinions under Rule 702, since the statement was made in the context of the officer's thought process during the investigation to explain why he acted and proceeded in the manner that he did. DeSalvo v. State, 776 So. 2d 704 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where police detective attempted to explain to jury mechanical features of brand of gun allegedly used, and gave his opinion that weapon would not fire unless a specific sequence of events was followed, he was required to reveal particular knowledge about the pistol, and his testimony constituted expert opinion for which he should have been qualified. Cotton v. State, 675 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1996).

Testimony of FBI agent was of assistance to jury and was properly allowed, where he not only testified that pieces of cloth found at murder site and at defendant's home looked like exact matches, but he also demonstrated that tears and cuts on pieces of cloth matched exactly. Davis v. State, 660 So. 2d 1228 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1192, 116 S. Ct. 1684, 134 L. Ed. 2d 785 (1996).

Although police department investigator had vast experience in the reconstruction of traffic accidents, he had no expertise in either engineering or road construction, and it remained within trial court's discretion to allow only limited portions of his testimony. Couch v. City of D'Iberville, 656 So. 2d 146 (Miss. 1995).

If any specialized knowledge, however obtained, was needed for investigating officer to express an opinion as to whether defective tire was the only contributing factor in causing car accident, testimony was that of an expert. Roberts v. Grafe Auto Co., 701 So. 2d 1093 (Miss. 1997).

Qualification of expert.

Grant of summary judgment in favor of a hospital in the patient's medical-malpractice claim was appropriate, in part because the mere fact that an expert was a gastroenterologist did not preclude him from testifying to the standards of ER care. Hans v. Mem'l Hosp., 40 So. 3d 1270 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In a medical negligence case, the affidavit of plaintiff's expert was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because, in part, the affidavit did not explain how the expert, a general surgeon, was qualified to testify about the standard of care applicable to an anesthesiologist and pain-management specialist such as defendant doctor. Sanders v. Wiseman, 29 So. 3d 138 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Trial court did not err in allowing a witness to testify as an expert in police pursuit because the witness had extensive experience, skill, and knowledge of police pursuit, which were derived from working for a police department, various police driving schools, and his experience in teaching police-pursuit programs. Giles v. Brown, 31 So. 3d 1232 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 31 So. 3d 1217, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 178 (Miss. 2010).

Investor service company and an estate alleged derivative and individual shareholder claims against a corporation. A trial court abused its discretion in excluding expert testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because an expert was qualified to testify as to damages although the expert was not currently licensed as a Certified Public Accountant. Investor Res. Servs. v. Cato, 15 So. 3d 412 (Miss. 2009).

Worker's expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 was not qualified to testify about the adequacy of warnings provided regarding the sander and dust collection system manufactured by the two separate manufacturers that allowed sawdust to build up in barrels, and combusted, exploded, and injured the worker when one of the barrels was opened after the sander was used on finished wood. Thus, despite the expert's work as a mechanical engineering professor, he lacked the expertise and training to testify about whether the warnings on the products were adequate. Tucker v. Rees-Memphis, Inc., 17 So. 3d 122 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 437 (Miss. 2009).

In a wrongful death suit stemming from a collision at a railway crossing, the trial court erred in excluding the affidavit from plaintiff's engineering expert, who opined that a clear line of sight did not exist at the crossing, and in granting summary judgment in favor of the railway company because an accident reconstructionist was not the only professional qualified to make line-of-sight determinations; the engineer possessed sufficient professional qualifications, including a bachelor of science degree in engineering, to collect relevant line-of-sight data using appropriate engineering instruments and devices and input that data into a recognized line-of-sight equation and to determine from those calculations that the obstructions at the site prevented the decedent from seeing the approaching train until he was dangerously close to the railroad track. His affidavit should not have been excluded from consideration in response to the railway company's summary judgment motion, and his opinion was sufficient to establish the existence of a question of material fact that precluded summary judgment. Kilhullen v. Kan. City S. Ry., 8 So. 3d 168 (Miss. 2009).

Although a proposed defense expert was qualified to testify as a firearm expert, he was not qualified to testify as a shooting reconstruction expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because defendant failed to present sufficient qualifications regarding the proposed expert and failed to sufficiently explain the reasoning behind his theory that the shooting was accidental. Christian v. State, 998 So. 2d 1019 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's convictions for manslaughter and rape were proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing expert testimony regarding the characteristics of hair samples recovered from the crime scene. The testimony provided was based on the expert's expertise, skill, and experience in the field of forensic hair examination; the expert's testimony was helpful to the jury in formulating its verdict. Brown v. State, 999 So. 2d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 44 (Miss. 2009).

In a rape case, a treating physician, who had worked in an emergency room for several years and had training as a family practitioner, was qualified to give an expert opinion that a rape victim's level of intoxication was mild and would not have affected her ability to recall. McGriggs v. State, 987 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 641 (Miss. 2008).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of a railway and an engineer in the decedent's wife's action alleging that they caused the wrongful death of her husband was appropriate because an expert witness had no training or experience regarding accident reconstruction, but his testimony amounted to such. Therefore, he was not qualified to render an expert opinion in that area. Kilhullen v. Kan. City S. Ry., 8 So. 3d 186 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), reversed by, remanded by 8 So. 3d 168, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 87 (Miss. 2009).

Deputy state fire marshal's job was to investigate suspicious fires and to determine where the fires started and their causes; in qualifying as an expert witness, he testified that he had been doing that type of work for 24 years and that his training was updated annually. Without any objections by the defense, he was accepted by the trial court as an expert witness in arson investigation and crime scene diagrams, in accordance with Miss. R. Evid. 702; thus, the trial court did not err in accepting him as an expert witness in that area. Colburn v. State, 990 So. 2d 206 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 472 (Miss. 2008).

Patient alleged that the trial court erred in not disqualifying a physician's expert in a medical malpractice suit, but the finding of expert testimony reliability was fact-intensive and dependent on a case-by-case review and determination; the record reflected that the expert sufficiently overcame an alleged conflict with medical literature, and based on the record the trial court did not err in qualifying the expert to render an expert opinion. Bass v. Bobo, 980 So. 2d 944 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 203 (Miss. 2008).

Forensic interviewer was properly accepted as an expert witness because she possessed specialized knowledge through her education, training, and her professional experience in the field of forensic interviewing and her knowledge in the form of her opinion could have been helpful to the jury in deciding whether the victim was sexually abused by defendant; the expert's opinion was based on sufficient facts, and her testimony was the product of reliable principles and methods such that she was suitably positioned to opine that characteristics of the victim's interview statements were consistent with sexually abused children. Williams v. State, 970 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case involving a dispute over which son was a proper conservator over a father and his estate, a trial court did not err by failing to admit one son's testimony about the father's medical diagnosis and treatment because the son was not qualified as an expert; moreover, there was no prejudice since the evidence was largely cumulative. Cole v. Cole (In re Cole), 958 So. 2d 276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because defendant failed to object to the qualifications of the expert witness, he was procedurally barred from raising that issue on appeal. Poynor v. State, 962 So. 2d 68 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2007).

Where an injured employee sued the railroad for injuries sustained while mounting a moving locomotive when a foot slipped, the trial judge did not abuse discretion in allowing testimony from an expert in the field of operating and safety rules; the expert had 13 years of experience in the railroad industry as a claim agent, he had worked with attorneys, insurance companies, state transportation departments, and private industries on the topic of railroad safety regulations. Canadian Nat'l/Ill. Cent. R.R. v. Hall, 953 So. 2d 1084 (Miss. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in allowing the logging truck driver's expert to testify as an expert witness because the trial judge did not allow voir dire of the expert that would have gone directly to the issue of his qualifications to testify in the field of expertise he claimed: wood yard loading and unloading, and wood yard safety; the trial court should have allowed the company to question whether the expert's testimony conflicted with the techniques and practices of his purported field and what those techniques and practices actually were. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in allowing the logging truck driver's expert to testify as an expert witness because trial testimony showed that the witness clearly was not qualified to testify in his purported field of knowledge because, although those questions were later answered on direct and cross-examination, the proper arena in which to have discussed those issues was voir dire. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in allowing the logging truck driver's expert to testify as an expert witness because the "foundational facts" on which the witness based his testimony were insufficient as a matter of law because his statement that the condition of the company's wood yard, of which he knew nothing about, could have caused shifting of the log's on a truck, was "mere guess or conjecture" because the expert had not been at the wood yard on the day in question and could not remember the last time he had been there. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in allowing the logging truck driver's expert to testify as an expert witness because he was unqualified to testify as to the duty of the company to provide an unbinding rack at its woodyard; although he testified emphatically that an unbinding rack would have caught the log that injured the driver, he was at a loss to explain exactly how an unbinding rack would have accomplished that feat, and terefore his opinion was purely unsupported speculation. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

In a personal injury suit brought against a paper company, the trial court erred in failing to allow the company to cross-examine plaintiff driver's safety expert as to his misdemeanor convictions for lack of safety; the witness was proffered as an expert on the basis that he had been "driving trucks for a number of years," and therefore the jury should have been allowed to hear testimony elicited on cross-examination regarding his record of driving trucks during that period of time. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

Finding against the company in the driver's action for damages was improper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 where the trial court erred in allowing the driver's expert to testify as an expert witness. The trial court's failure to allow more extensive voir dire of the expert as to his qualifications made it impossible to determine whether he was truly qualified in his purported field. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 108 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 7, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 961 So. 2d 741, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 192 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for fondling a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because, inter alia: (1) the evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, (2) the trial court did not improperly limit cross-examination of the victim in violation of defendant's rights under USCS Const. Amend. 6 and Miss. Const. Art. III, § 26, because testimony concerning the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412; (3) since defendant failed to object at trial to the qualification of an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the issue was waived; and (4) under Miss. R. Evid. 615(3), the expert witness was properly allowed to remain in the court room so that she could base her opinion on facts learned at the trial pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Aguilar v. State, 955 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Because defendant failed to object to an expert witness's qualification as an expert, defendant was procedurally barred from raising that issue on appeal. Poynor v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 857 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 21, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 962 So. 2d 68, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 292 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied based on the qualifications of an expert who took dental molds in a capital case because the issue was procedurally barred since it could have been raised at trial or on direct appeal; even if it was not, defendant did not contend that improper methods were used in creating the molds, that they were not an accurate replica, or that the expert was in fact unqualified. Howard v. State, 945 So. 2d 326 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 829, 128 S. Ct. 49, 169 L. Ed. 2d 43, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 9278, 76 U.S.L.W. 3157 (2007).

Finding against the driver in her action for injuries resulting from a collision with a train at a railroad crossing was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 where the disqualification of the driver's "expert" witness was not in error because the witness did not possess any knowledge, skill, experience, or education in the interpretation of the data tables produced by the machinery in question. Bowman v. CSX Transp., Inc., 931 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Directed verdict in favor of the sheriff and county in the family's action alleging reckless disregard by an auxiliary deputy sheriff concerning an accident involving the deputy and their son was appropriate where the trial court did not err by not allowing an accident reconstructionist to give his expert opinion regarding the use of proper police procedures in emergency situations because he was clearly not qualified; the accident reconstructionist, by his own admission, established that he did not have any more training or education regarding police procedures than any other law enforcement officer in Mississippi. Peebles v. Winston County, 929 So. 2d 385 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in allowing a forensic pathologist to give expert testimony on toxicology in defendant's trial for DUI manslaughter because although expert testimony was limited to matters within the witness's demonstrated area of expertise under Miss. R. Evid. 702, nothing in Mississippi law prohibited the witness from being qualified as an expert in more than one field. Cowart v. State, 910 So. 2d 726 (Miss. Ct. App. — 2005).

Police officer was not testifying as an expert witness where the testimony presented by the officer, as to how the gun physically worked, required no particular skill or training and was not beyond the knowledge of a layman; additionally, the testimony was given during rebuttal and the State was not required to disclose rebuttal witnesses in discovery. Fairley v. State, 871 So. 2d 1282 (Miss. 2003).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing the physician's witness to testify as an expert where the witness had been qualified and accepted as an expert and the witness testified that he had reviewed the records and based his opinion on knowledge beyond that of a lay person. Daughtry v. Kuiper, 852 So. 2d 675 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a wrongful death action, the trial court properly instructed the jury to disregard any questions or responses of a project manager with respect to the application or non-application of guidelines for shipboard elevators, with respect to compliance or non-compliance of the elevator system at issue, because the project manager was determined to not be an expert nor designated as an expert, and the questions posed were not fact questions. Crane Co. v. Kitzinger, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. Jan. 30, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded en banc by 860 So. 2d 1196, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 689 (Miss. 2003).

In a prosecution for an armed robbery that occurred in a casino parking lot, an employee in the surveillance department of the casino was properly qualified to testify as an expert where she had received three years of on-the-job-training on video surveillance and interpretation and her testimony revealed that she was trained on identifying specific objects and events from the casino surveillance cameras. Johnson v. State, 784 So. 2d 991 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In an action arising from a collision between a train and a car, an expert was properly permitted to testify regarding loss of enjoyment of life, notwithstanding the existence of some honest dispute as to whether his testimony was generally accepted in his field. Kansas City S. Ry. v. Johnson, 798 So. 2d 374 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 816, 122 S. Ct. 43, 151 L. Ed. 2d 15 (2001).

In an action arising from the operation of an automobile "chop shop," the trial court did not err in allowing an expert in the field of vehicle identification to testify regarding (1) damages and repairs to automobiles, (2) whether vehicles were repairable or were total losses, (3) whether particular rivets were factory originals or homemade, and (4) whether or not particular pieces of sheet metal had been repaired, given the expert's experience in the Highway Patrol and the International Association of Auto Theft Investigators and the fact that he had been accepted as an expert in the field of vehicle identification in numerous court throughout Mississippi and also in federal courts in four states. Logan v. State, 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

It was not an error or an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to accept a witness as an expert in the fields of molecular biology and DNA analysis where she had specialized knowledge of DNA analysis to assist the trier of fact, had testified as a DNA expert in over 100 cases, and had given the population statistics in 98 percent of those cases. Baldwin v. State, 757 So. 2d 227 (Miss. 2000).

Under the guidelines of the Rule 702, the trial judge serves as a "gatekeeper" in ruling on the admissibility of expert testimony. Watkins v. U-Haul Int'l, Inc., 770 So. 2d 970 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Decision as to whether an expert is qualified rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. T.K. Stanley, Inc. v. Cason, 614 So. 2d 942 (Miss. 1992).

Where neither party thoroughly examined expert regarding basis of his testimony, this did not render his testimony inadmissible, since predicate facts supporting expert testimony were only required to be available in some colorable form, and expert's testimony that common knowledge supported his findings was sufficient to meet this standard. Materials Transp. Co. v. Newman, 656 So. 2d 1199 (Miss. 1995).

In considering admissibility of expert's testimony, court asks whether field of expertise is one in which it has been scientifically established that due investigation and study in conformity with techniques and practices generally accepted within the field will produce a valid opinion. Wilson v. State, 574 So. 2d 1324 (Miss. 1990).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in disqualifying plaintiffs' expert witnesses, and absent expert testimony, record was devoid of significant, probative evidence from which a genuine issue of material fact could derive, and summary judgment for defendant was therefore proper. Palmer v. Biloxi Regional Medical Ctr., 564 So. 2d 1346 (Miss. 1990).

Test of whether or not an expert witness is qualified to testify is whether witness possesses peculiar knowledge or information regarding subject matter which is not likely to be possessed by a layman. May v. State, 524 So. 2d 957 (Miss. 1988).

Real estate.

Landowner's expert appraiser's opinion as to the diminution in value of the remainder of the landowner's property occasioned by the taking of an easement for a pipeline should have been excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because he failed to offer admissible market-data or comparable-sales evidence. Gulf S. Pipeline Co., LP v. Pitre, 35 So. 3d 494 (Miss. 2010).

In a case in which a pipeline company sought to acquire by eminent domain a right-of-way and easement through a land owner's property, the trial court did not err in allowing the jury to consider the testimony of the owner's expert witness regarding the value of the owner's property; expert's testimony was competent and relevant, and it was for the jury to pass upon the testimony's credibility and weight. Gulf South Pipeline Co., LP v. Pitre, 35 So. 3d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 35 So. 3d 494, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 199 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court was presented with affirmative proof that a partition by sale under Miss. Code Ann. § 11-21-11 was in the best interests of the parties and thus the trial court did not err by ordering the property to be sold and dividing the proceeds equally between appellants and appellee as co-tenants; an expert on real estate appraisals testified that it was his opinion that the properties were to be sold rather than being partitioned in kind, the court found no error in the appraisal of the properties and believed that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in relying on the report, and the trial court did not rely solely on the appraisal, but also considered the parties' recommendations and did not abuse its discretion in assigning more weight to the expert's opinion. Georgian v. Harrington, 990 So. 2d 813 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Owners' expert's testimony in a condemnation case, that land within 750 feet of a proposed interstate would be more adversely affected by the highway construction than the rest of the owners' property, was entirely speculative since it failed to comport with the Daubert and Kumho Tire factors, and the trial court reversibly erred in admitting it. Miss. Transp. Comm'n v. McLemore, 863 So. 2d 31 (Miss. 2003).

Real estate professional was qualified as an expert under this rule and trial court did not err in allowing his appraisal testimony, despite his retirement and question regarding lack of license, where he had been a real estate broker for 30 years and had done some 11,000 appraisals during that time. Watts v. Lawrence, 703 So. 2d 236 (Miss. 1997).

Relationship to § 11-1-61.

Miss. Code Ann. § 11-1-61 does not conflict with the Mississippi Rules of Evidence, which govern evidentiary matters, including the qualification of expert witnesses, Miss. R. Evid. 702. Blake v. Clein, 903 So. 2d 710 (Miss. 2005).

Sobriety tests.

Trial court did not err in admitting the officer's testimony of the results of defendant's field sobriety tests because the walk and turn and the one-legged stand tests relied upon the officer's observation and did not require qualification as an expert. Pulido v. City of Oxford, 991 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 511 (Miss. 2008).

Where plaintiff sued a casino and a bar for wrongful death pursuant to Mississippi's Dram Shop Act, Miss. Code Ann. § 67-3-73, plaintiff's expert testified that the driver who killed decedent was visibly intoxicated when he was served alcohol at the bar based on Intoxilyzer results taken an hour after the accident indicating a BAC of 0.088%. Under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the expert's testimony was sufficiently reliable to create a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the driver was served alcohol at the bar while he was visibly intoxicated. Treasure Bay Corp. v. Ricard, 967 So. 2d 1235 (Miss. 2007).

A police officer need not be rendered an expert to give opinion testimony regarding the administration of field sobriety tests, including the horizontal gaze nystagmus test. Graves v. State, 761 So. 2d 950 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Soil mechanics expert.

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, in connection with a wrongful death action, an expert in soil mechanics was permitted to testify about the soil conditions where an industrial accident had taken place; this was proper because the expert's testimony assisted the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or determining whether the company was negligent in failing to conduct soil tests or any further site preparation. Coho Res., Inc. v. McCarthy, 829 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2002).

Illustrative cases.

In a sexual battery case, an expert's testimony was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because he had a degree in psychology and a Ph.D. in clinical psychology, he had been a psychologist for forty years, and he testified that the victim demonstrated behavior consistent with a victim of sexual abuse, not that she was a victim of sexual abuse. Collins v. State, 70 So. 3d 1144 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of a window manufacturer and seller in the homeowners' action against them concerning leaking windows was appropriate because the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the homeowners' expert from providing expert testimony since he utilized no methodology, much less a scientifically recognized one. Therefore, even assuming that the circuit court abused its discretion on the qualification issue, which it did not, the application of relevance and reliability principles also called for the exclusion of the testimony. McKee v. Bowers Window & Door Co., 64 So. 3d 926 (Miss. 2011).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of two lawyers in the clients' action claiming the lawyers had breached their fiduciary duty was improper because the trial court erred in applying a negligence standard to the clients' claims of breach of fiduciary duty. Because a lawyer's discretionary disbursement of the settlement funds to his clients did not implicate the kind of specialized knowledge implicated by Miss. R. Evid. 702, to the extent his testimony constituted opinion, it was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 701; therefore, the trial court erred in excluding the testimony regarding how he devised the settlement matrix and how he disbursed the settlement funds to his clients. Crist v. Loyacono, 65 So. 3d 837 (Miss. 2011).

Exclusion of expert testimony in a negligence action was improper, in part, because the jury should have been able to weigh the credibility of the expert's distance and timing estimates, which largely were based on facts in the record and would have aided the jury. Denham v. Holmes, 60 So. 3d 773 (Miss. 2011).

Exclusion of expert testimony in a negligence action was proper, in part, because the expert failed to connect the dots between the skid marks and the existing physical evidence and thus, his conclusion regarding causation was unreliable. Moreover, the expert's conclusion regarding whether the driver had created an immediate hazard was not based on specialized, technical, or scientific knowledge. Denham v. Holmes, 60 So. 3d 773 (Miss. 2011).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the other driver in the passenger's negligence action for injuries that she received in a car accident was inappropriate because an oral surgeon's testimony was admissible; he testified that his opinion was based on his knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education as an orthopedic surgeon and his testimony was sufficient to establish the element of proximate cause and was admissible for the jury to consider in the apportionment of damages. The other driver, as the driver of the second car to hit the vehicle in which the passenger was riding, was responsible only for the amount of the passenger's damages that were based on his fault allocated by the jury in accord with Miss. Code Ann. § 85-5-7. Lopez v. McClellan, — So. 3d —, 2010 Miss. App. LEXIS 214 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 27, 2010), appeal dismissed by 2010 Miss. App. LEXIS 480 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 7, 2010).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder during the commission of a robbery were proper because it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to find that a DNA Section Chief at the Mississippi Crime Laboratory's testimony was based on sufficient data and was the product of reliable methods. Cross-examination and presentation of contrary evidence were the appropriate means of attacking any aspects of the expert's testimony; however, the defense chose neither to cross-examine him nor to object to his testimony at trial. Gillett v. State, 56 So. 3d 469 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 132 S. Ct. 844, 181 L. Ed. 2d 552, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 8944, 80 U.S.L.W. 3355 (U.S. 2011).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the widow's argument that the trial court erred by denying her motion in limine pertaining to evidence by the trucking company's expert that the decedent had methamphetamine in his blood at the time of the collision was without merit. The expert had been qualified as an expert; the widow did not object to him being qualified as an expert; and the expert's opinions were credibility issues for the jury to resolve. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because issue of visibility, or lack thereof, of the trailer was presented to the jury for consideration. The testimony on visibility was not expressed in terms of the decedent's actual ability to see the truck on the night of the accident; however, without the decedent's testimony, which unfortunately was not possible in the case, any testimony concerning that issue was properly excluded. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because his expert witness was not erroneously excluded. An expert in criminal investigations was prepared to testify that the officers were deficient in their investigation into the victim's murder; however, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the proffered testimony had been adequately covered by the cross-examination of the officers and that the expert had failed to establish the reliability of his testimony under Daubert. Ross v. State, 22 So. 3d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing expert witnesses to testify regarding scientific evidence on neurological impact of 1-BP on humans, which was a relatively new field of study with limited reliable methodology, because the experts' qualifications were not legitimately questioned, and their testimony was sufficiently relevant and reliable. Franklin Corp. v. Tedford, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 169 (Miss. Apr. 16, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 18 So. 3d 215, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 426 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial on a charge of sexual battery, a nurse did not give improper opinion testimony regarding the dried secretions obtained during the administration of the victim's rape kit because the State questioned the nurse regarding hospital protocol in administering a rape kit, which was within her personal knowledge as a nurse who assisted doctors in performing the rape kit and because the nurse did not give any opinions beyond what she was qualified to render; the nurse's testimony helped the jury understand the process by which evidence was gathered and analyzed. The nurse did not state that the dried secretions were seminal fluid but only stated that a foreign substance was found by a process that was used to detect seminal fluid; this was not an opinion but was information gained through her personal observations and experiences. Bolden v. State, 23 So. 3d 491 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 22 So. 3d 1193, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 614 (Miss. 2009).

In plaintiff's suit against the manufacturer of a forklift, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702; the expert did not conduct any personal interviews, nor did he prepare his own fact sheet regarding the incident. The methods employed by the expert were "result-oriented tests," and he could not point to any literature where "real-life testing" methodology was employed; the Court of Appeals of Mississippi held that the expert's findings were speculative and that his methodology failed to meet the Daubert standard. Townsend v. Doosan Infracore Am. Corp., 3 So. 3d 150 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's vehicular homicide case, the trial court did not err by allowing the State's expert witness to testify regarding defendant's level of impairment because the trial court found that the expert used an established methodology for testing the presence of hydrocodone and used acceptable protocol to form his expert opinion, and the expert's method of determining the level of hydrocodone in defendant's system prior to the administration of her blood test could be tested. Teston v. State, 44 So. 3d 977 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 44 So. 3d 969, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 520 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for fondling his seven-year-old daughter was appropriate even though it was erroneous for the trial court to permit the clinical director to testify as to the veracity of the child. However, even though the admission of the challenged testimony was error, it was not reversible, in part because the jury had the opportunity to evaluate the child since she testified before the jury; therefore, even if the bar was not in place, admitting the director's testimony was not erroneous. Golden v. State, 984 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court properly determined that the deputy state fire marshal's expert testimony would assist the jury in understanding the evidence because (1) he testified about the origin and cause of the fire; (2) he properly utilized the methods of his training and expertise in arson to formulate an opinion based on the facts he encountered; (3) an investigation of the appliances and heaters in the house revealed that they were not the cause of the fire; (4) in his opinion, he determined the area of origin of the fire was the front living room and the adjoining den area; (5) he testified about pour patterns noted on the floor in that area, which indicated that a flammable liquid had been poured over the area; (6) he excluded all accidental causes of the fire; and (7) during cross-examination, he explained that the negative test results did not exclude the possibility that there were flammable liquids in the pour pattern; it just possibly meant that there was not enough flammable liquid remaining to create a positive test result. Colburn v. State, 990 So. 2d 206 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 472 (Miss. 2008).

During defendant's murder trial, it was reasonable for defense counsel not to hire an expert witness to discover whether there was evidence of another shooter who might have killed the victim at close range where defendant confessed to shooting the victim three times, which was consistent with evidence presented in the autopsy report and witnesses' testimony. Davis v. State, 980 So. 2d 951 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 205 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing the parents' expert to testify under Miss. R. Evid. 702 hypothetically that a CT scan of the son would have shown a midline shift had it been performed on an earlier date because such testimony was not based on sufficient facts or data; therefore, the physicians were entitled to a new trial. Bullock v. Lott, 964 So. 2d 1119 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court's ruling that there was no factual basis for a police commander's conclusion that the cause of the decedent's death from a shooting was the apartment complex's failure to have any security guards or other security measures was correct because there was no factual basis for his conclusions; there was no evidence to support the commander's conclusion that security guards would have expelled the shooter from the apartment complex's premises as there was no indication that the shooter was not at the apartment complex by invitation, and there was no record evidence supporting the commander's conclusion that the apartment complex's lighting was inadequate and that that inadequacy contributed to the decedent's death. Davis v. Christian Bhd. Homes of Jackson, Miss., Inc., 957 So. 2d 390 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a personal injury case, a court properly admitted defendant's expert's testimony because the expert stated that he was basing his testimony and opinions on multiple pieces of evidence, including the layout of the accident scene, witness testimony, and the opinions and findings of the officer who investigated the scene; on the stand, the expert explained how each of those pieces of evidence supported his finding that plaintiff was following too closely to the driver at the time of the accident, and the expert also testified regarding his extensive training and experience in investigating accidents and their causes and explained how scientific principles supported his findings. Walker v. Gann, 955 So. 2d 920 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a capital murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a defense expert's testimony regarding his inability to destroy a wallet by burning it; the expert's testimony regarding statements made to him by the witness were inadmissible since the introduction of any such statements would have been mere commentary on the veracity of a witness, which was not appropriate expert testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 702, and while the expert was proffered to be an expert on police investigatory techniques, his proffer failed to establish the reliability of his testimony under Daubert and McLemore. Ross v. State, 954 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by certifying a fire inspector as an expert and allowing her testify because: (1) no prior expert qualification in a court of law was necessary under Miss. R. Evid. 702; (2) her Daubert testimony revealed extensive training in fire and arson investigation; and (3) nothing in her testimony suggested that she manipulated the facts to fit her opinion. Taylor v. State, 954 So. 2d 944 (Miss. 2007).

In defendant's drug case, the court did not err in allowing the state's expert witness to testify as to what ephedrine and pseudoephedrine were used for in the realm of drug manufacturing because, in light of the witness's direct testimony on his training of the "chemical properties of various controlled substances," it was not clearly erroneous for the trial court to allow an expert in the fields of drug analysis and identification to testify as to the chemical make up of methamphetamine. Cook v. State, 953 So. 2d 271 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a premises liability case, it was not error to exclude the price of two surgeries from a doctor's testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 702 because he did not state with medical certainty that the surgeries were necessary. Kidd v. McRae's Stores P'ship, 951 So. 2d 622 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's murder conviction was proper because a witness testified as an expert witness and her opinion regarding DNA evidence was not prohibited as long as it was based upon sufficient facts or data; the testimony was the product of reliable principles and methods, the witness reliably applied the principles and methods, and there was no indication that the witness's testimony violated Miss. R. Evid. 702. Bailey v. State, 956 So. 2d 1016 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant confessed to participating in the wife's plan to murder her husband, the circuit court did not err in excluding the testimony of an expert concerning involuntary confessions; during the Daubert hearing, the expert admitted her theories could not be empirically tested. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 7 (Miss. Jan. 4, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 955 So. 2d 787, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 349 (Miss. 2007).

In a child custody case, a social worker was properly determined to be an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702 based on her education and experience, and the social worker was allowed to testify regarding her therapy sessions with the child under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4). Giannaris v. Giannaris, 962 So. 2d 574 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by, remanded in part by 960 So. 2d 462, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 399 (Miss. 2007).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the company and subcontractors in the students' and teachers' action for the alleged fear of future disease due to asbestos exposure was appropriate because no genuine issue of material fact existed as to the evidence necessary to demonstrate a rational basis for the fear of future disease; additionally, a doctor's opinion was not based on sufficient facts; therefore, his testimony failed the reliability prong of the Daubert/McLemore test as well as the requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 702. Brooks v. Stone Architecture, P.A., 934 So. 2d 350 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Summary judgment in favor of defendant casket company on a products liability claim was proper because no expert testimony was presented that demonstrated that the alternative glue would have allowed the wooden casket to last for an "indefinite" period of time. Moss v. Batesville Casket Co., 935 So. 2d 393 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's capital murder convictions were proper where nothing in the record supported defendant's assertion that the State intentionally presented false testimony; the defense failed to demonstrate that the doctor's testimony was in fact false; and the doctor's credibility as a witness at trial rested with the jury. Rubenstein v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 789 (Miss. Dec. 1, 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. Aug. 10, 2006), substituted opinion at, remanded by 941 So. 2d 735, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court properly held that the first expert witness's testimony concerning a Luminol test had the tendency to show that defendant committed the murder; thus, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 401, the trial court did not err in allowing the evidence to be admitted. Jackson v. State, 924 So. 2d 531 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 175 (Miss. 2006).

Where defendant appealed his conviction of three counts of fondling child victims, asserting that the testimony of the State's expert forensic interviewer should not have been allowed because the forensic interviewer could not cite evidence that her methods had ever been independently tested, nor could she shed any light on the rate of error regarding her interviewing methods, and the expert's methods were unreliable, as there was no single accrediting or sanctioning body for the field of forensic interviewing, and the State properly countered that (1) the area of investigations of sexual abuse cases, especially through interviews, was a competent area of expertise, (2) the expert's testimony was based upon sufficient facts and data, as she testified in detail how she conducted her interview with the victim and what the victim told her; (3) the testimony was the product of reliable principles and methods, despite the general consensus within the field that there was no single "right way" to conduct an interview; and (4) the expert applied the principles and methods of her interviewing skills reliably to the facts of the case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the expert testimony. Mooneyham v. State, 915 So. 2d 1102 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant, tried for embezzlement, was employed by the owner for approximately nine months and the owner testified that he had become familiar with defendant's handwriting during said period. By virtue of his familiarity with defendant's handwriting, the owner was fully qualified to offer his opinion as to whether or not the writing was in fact defendant's signature; such testimony was rationally based upon his perception, was helpful in making a determination of a fact in issue, was not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Miss. R. Evid. 702, and it therefore met the requirements for both Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 901(b)(2). Bell v. State, 910 So. 2d 640 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Finding in favor of the patient in his medical malpractice action was improper where the trial court erred in allowing the testimony of an orthopaedic surgeon because that doctor was not qualified to testify as to the standard of care in August of 1995 since he was still in his residency in Austria and had not completed his own orthopedic training at that time. Blake v. Clein, 903 So. 2d 710 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court erred in excluding defense expert toxicologist's videotaped deposition testimony regarding the deceased truck driver's BAC and lack of narcolepsy medicine because it was central to main issue of how the fatal one-vehicle accident occurred and the auto manufacturer's defense. The Supreme Court of Mississippi has held that it constitutes reversible error to restrict an expert's testimony about the main issue in the case. GMC v. Myles, 905 So. 2d 535 (Miss. 2005).

In a family's wrongful death suit against the department of transportation and the decedents' insurer, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the family's expert to testify as an expert witness as he was qualified to testify as an expert in the field of forestry and his testimony was helpful to the jury on the issue of what caused the tree to fall and fatally injure the decedents. The trial judge limited expert's testimony to forestry issues within his knowledge and his personal observations of the tree, and he was not allowed to give testimony outside his expertise and education. Alfa Ins. Corp. v. Ryals, 918 So. 2d 676 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining an objection to testimony regarding the standards applicable to an elevator used on an oil rig because the witness was not qualified as an expert; moreover, a company's argument concerning the personal knowledge of the witness was without merit. Crane Co. v. Kitzinger, 860 So. 2d 1196 (Miss. 2003).

In a malpractice suit in which a patient claimed she was burned by a heating unit used during surgery, the trial court erred in not allowing the patient's expert to testify as to the standard of care for using the heating pad, but the error was harmless as the expert testified that the unit's instruction manual required defendant doctor to prescribe the use and to dictate the temperature setting, and that defendant failed to follow these procedures, and the patient was able to get her theory of the case as to the cause of her injuries before the jury. Winters v. Wright, 869 So. 2d 357 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court acted within its discretion in a medical malpractice case in excluding a nurse's testimony as to a statement made by a doctor based on the court's prior ruling; which excluded expert testimony by the doctor, and on the plaintiff's declination to opening the door to expert testimony by the doctor. Griffin v. McKenney, 877 So. 2d 425 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court properly allowed sufficiency of warning testimony from the defendant's expert witness, where its earlier ruling to deny the plaintiff's expert witness from testifying as to the same subject was incorrect, because both experts should have been allowed to relate their knowledge of warnings to the problem of air bags, because, as the plaintiff's expert testified, it was the generally accepted methodology for human factors experts to apply their knowledge of human behavior to different types of problems. Miss. R. Evid. 702. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing DNA identification testimony, as the State's expert testified that the test was performed in accordance with FBI standards and was accredited by organizations consisting of scientists, law enforcement agents, and lawyers who wrote guidelines for DNA testing facilities across the country. Moody v. State, 841 So. 2d 1067 (Miss. 2003).

In a motorist's suit against a county, his expert, a traffic engineer, should have been allowed to testify as to whether a curve required signs, whether warnings complied with the Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices, and whether the county failed to provide adequate warnings. Donaldson v. Covington County, 846 So. 2d 219 (Miss. 2003).

Where a mother and father had divorced, resumed living together, had another child, and separated, a vocational rehabilitation expert was properly allowed to testify as to the economic value of the mother's contribution to the family under Miss. R. Evid. 702. Wooldridge v. Wooldridge, 856 So. 2d 446 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

Chancellor in a divorce case erred in precluding the husband's expert from opining as to the value of the husband's dental practice and office building, as the denial of this testimony was contrary to the intent of Miss. R. Evid. 702. Singley v. Singley, 846 So. 2d 1004 (Miss. 2002).

Trial court's decision not to disallow the testimony of a psychologist and a psychiatrist as expert witnesses for defendant which testimony embodying the view that defendant did not fit the profile of a sex offender was not arbitrary or clearly erroneous in light of their expressed opinion that no scientifically acceptable profile of a sex offender existed. Earnest v. State, 805 So. 2d 599 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

In the sentencing phase of a prosecution for capital murder and armed robbery, a psychologist was properly precluded from testifying concerning what life would be like for a minor in prison for life without the possibility of parole, where the proffer stated that he would testify only to generalities and he had never even examined the defendant or any of his records. Eskridge v. State, 765 So. 2d 508 (Miss. 2000).

It was well within the judge's discretion to admit expert testimony describing a child's behavior as common with that of a sexually abused child, and there was no abuse of discretion where the expert testimony was offered as substantive evidence of abuse and was not describing a syndrome. Crawford v. State, 754 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. 2000).

In an action for breach of contract and fraud arising from the purchase by the defendant of insurance for the plaintiff's car after she allowed her own policy to lapse, it was reversible error for the court to allow the plaintiff's insurance experts to testify outside their stated areas of expertise where one witness had no expertise, and the other had never sold insurance in Mississippi. GMAC v. Baymon, 732 So. 2d 262 (Miss. 1999).

Expert testimony was not necessary to establish the standard of care that an insurance agent owes to his client; case did not involve underwriting or actuarial tables but was a negligence case based on discussion of client's application for insurance, a matter that a layman could understand based on common sense and practical experience. Lovett v. Bradford, 676 So. 2d 893 (Miss. 1996).

Trial court erred in admitting expert testimony on subject of tax preparations and calculations, and loss of use of income; chancellor did not need assistance understanding such evidence and testimony was instead offered to help chancellor determine amount of damages suffered, but this was not relevant since it was not a fact at issue, and therefore testimony should not have been admitted. Century 21 Deep S. Properties, Ltd. v. Corson, 612 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 1992).

Where witness was allowed to express his opinions concerning value, normal street usage and customary packaging of marijuana based upon his training and experience as a narcotics officer, he was an expert and should have been tendered as such to have his qualifications tested through voir dire before being allowed to offer expert opinions. Sample v. State, 643 So. 2d 524 (Miss. 1994).

Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of expert economist as to plaintiff's future economic losses, since issues concerning his opinion went to the weight or credibility of the evidence, not its admissibility. Flight Line v. Tanksley, 608 So. 2d 1149 (Miss. 1992).

Rule 703. Bases of opinion testimony by experts.

The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to him at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence.

COMMENT

There are three possible sources which may produce an expert's facts or data. Practice in Mississippi already recognizes two of them: (1) where the expert bases his opinion on personal observation, and (2) where he bases it either on a hypothetical question presented to him at trial or on the trial testimony of others which the expert has heard while sitting in the courtroom. See Collins v. State, 361 So.2d 333 (Miss. 1978). The new practice under Rule 703 brings a third source: the presentation of data to the expert outside of court and other than by his personal observation. The Advisory Committee's Note to FRE 703 presents a persuasive rationale for the use of the third source. A physician, for example, bases his medical diagnosis of his patient on many sources. Most of his sources are admissible in evidence but only with the expenditure of substantial time in producing and examining various authenticating witnesses. Since these sources provide the doctor with information that he utilizes in making life-and-death decisions, his validation of them ought to be sufficient for trial, especially since he can be cross-examined.

Admissibility.

In a capital murder trial, the trial court did not err in admitting the expert testimony of a forensic pathologist because his opinion testimony was based upon his observations of the victim's body, facts made known to him, and his observations of anatomical drawings and photographs at trial and the pathologist testified that he had reviewed the victim's medical records and was able to reach an opinion with a reasonable degree of medical certainty as to the cause and manner of the victim's death. Dixon v. State, 17 So. 3d 1099 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 451 (Miss. 2009).

Because an expert in an eminent domain action had little or no knowledge as to the valuation of a business sign based on the cost approach, his testimony based on a quote from a sign company should have been stricken since he was merely acting as a conduit for hearsay about another expert's opinion, in violation of Miss. R. Evid. 703; however, additur was not an appropriate remedy in this case because the jury verdict was based on inadmissible evidence. Martin v. Miss. Transp. Comm'n, 953 So. 2d 1163 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for manslaughter was proper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703 where the trial court did not err in admitting expert testimony. The doctor's validation of the paramedics' information was sufficient to serve as a basis for his expert medical opinion, the evidence was relevant, and the expert was subject to the crucible of cross-examination. Miller v. State, 919 So. 2d 1137 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting the forensic pathologist's testimony concerning the autopsy, bruises on the victim's body consistent with defensive posturing, the trajectory of the bullet, and the cause and manner of the victim's of death, where a foundation was laid showing the expert was well qualified; further, the issue of the quality of the autopsy photos went to their weight, not their admissibility. Ross v. State, 883 So. 2d 1181 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 883 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. 2004).

In the wife's civil action against the tobacoo company and retailers, claiming that the cigarettes sold to her husband were defective and unreasonably dangerous, because Miss. R. Evid. 703 allowed an expert to form an opinion on facts or data that was inadmissible and because forensic psychiatry had been recognized as a proper field of expertise pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702, no error was committed by the trial court in allowing the tobacco company's expert to form an opinion on and to testify regarding whether the decedent could have stopped smoking at any time. Nunnally v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 869 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the State's expert witness to testify where the trial court recognized the witness as an expert witness, who was an employee of the Mississippi Crime Lab at the time the test was performed; the expert's testimony would be based on the machine's reading and the notes of the analyst, and was therefore admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Lenoir v. State, 853 So. 2d 845 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Although the trial court based its denial of an expert witness's testimony, who had relied on an inadmissible accident report in forming his opinions, on an incorrect legal standard, which constituted an abuse of discretion, the party which presented the expert witness suffered no prejudice from the error because the expert witness was able to testify to the same conclusions based on other information. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 703, the proper inquiry for determining whether to allow an expert to base an opinion on inadmissible evidence is whether the inadmissible evidence is of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the field. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Expert was qualified to testify regarding his forensic testing performed on the Fila Olympic shoes but he went a step further and testified, based on what was told to him by the Fila representative, that if he had performed an analysis on the Fila Grant Hill II MID shoes, those, too, would have been consistent with the impressions. This statement was only offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted and therefore, his testimony regarding the shoe impressions was based on hearsay and was erroneously admitted. Flowers v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 67 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 842 So. 2d 531, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 149 (Miss. 2003).

State's mental health professional's testimony that petitoner's ability to appreciate the criminality of his conduct and his ability to conform his conduct at the time of the crime were not impaired was properly admitted, as the expert based his opinions on documents in the defense expert's file, audiotapes of that expert's interviews with petitioner, and petitioner's videotaped and written confessions; he had not been obliged under Miss. R. Evid. 703 to actually interview petitioner. Woodward v. State, 843 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2003).

In a medical malpractice action, testimony by an expert was improperly excluded, even though he had not treated the plaintiff; this fact went to the weight of the expert's testimony, rather than its admissibility. McCaffrey v. Puckett, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 256 (Miss. Dec. 21, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 784 So. 2d 197, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 119 (Miss. 2001).

DNA tests.

There was no violation of the defendant's right to confront witnesses against him when a witness testified about DNA evidence, notwithstanding that the witness did not perform the actual tests on the various DNA samples collected from the defendant, where she did perform the scientific analysis of the data obtained. Byrd v. State, 741 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Exclusion.

Exclusion of portions of an expert's deposition testimony that referred to an excluded expert or his report was proper in light of the fact that the excluded expert had been excluded; thus, insertion of that excluded expert's opinions into the record through the expert's deposition testimony was impermissible. O'Keeffe v. Biloxi Casino Corp., 76 So. 3d 726 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 78 So. 3d 906, 2012 Miss. LEXIS 5 (Miss. 2012).

Hearsay.

In a capital murder case, testimony by a forensics expert regarding shoe impressions was based on hearsay and was erroneously admitted by the trial court, because the expert testified based on what was told to him by a representative of the shoe company. Flowers v. State, 842 So. 2d 531 (Miss. 2003).

In a prosecution for murder, a physician was properly permitted to testify that a forensic anthropologist was present at the autopsy of the victim, that the anthropologist's comments were "confirmatory" of his own findings, and that the anthropologist's comments were "something that is reasonably and customarily relied upon by forensic pathologists . . . in forming opinions." Jones v. State, 776 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 2000).

In an action against a natural gas company for negligence in the maintenance, operation, and repair of a gas pipeline and for fire damages caused to numerous residences, the trial court did not err by refusing to allow the gas company's expert to testify about a statement made by an unidentified man about children playing in an abandoned house before the fire because such testimony would not have gone to explain the basis of the expert's opinion but would have been used to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Mississippi Valley Gas Co. v. Estate of Walker, 725 So. 2d 139 (Miss. 1998).

Instruments.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the State's expert witness to testify where the trial court recognized the witness as an expert witness, who was an employee of the Mississippi Crime Lab at the time the test was performed; the expert's testimony would be based on the machine's reading and the notes of the analyst, and was therefore admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Lenoir v. State, 853 So. 2d 845 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Medical expertise.

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in allowing a toxicologist to testify to the effects of the use of methamphetamine on the decedent's body. The widow did not object to the expert's use of the words "could have" as being an improper legal standard pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 702 and 703 and she was provided notice of the contents of the expert's opinion, which included the issue of fatigue. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not err by admitting the testimony of the State's expert under Miss. R. Evid. 702 who did not physically evaluate the victim but merely reviewed his medical records because peer review by publication was only one factor on a non-exhaustive list of factors for admissibility, defendant had the opportunity to discredit the expert's theories by cross-examination, and the court found no merit to defendant's argument that since there was not yet board certification for child abuse and neglect that the expert could not qualify as an expert in child abuse. Middleton v. State, 980 So. 2d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

There was no error in allowing the expert opinion of a victim's treating physician under Miss. R. Evid. 702 in a rape case because the physician did not render an opinion that the victim had been raped, but he merely recounted his perceptions about her physical condition upon arrival and noted that the vagina was not lacerated during consensual sex. McGriggs v. State, 987 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 641 (Miss. 2008).

In a case involving a dispute over which son was a proper conservator over a father and his estate, a trial court did not err by failing to admit one son's testimony about the father's medical diagnosis and treatment because the son was not qualified as an expert; moreover, there was no prejudice since the evidence was largely cumulative. Cole v. Cole (In re Cole), 958 So. 2d 276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court acted within its discretion in finding that a doctor was not qualified to offer an opinion that he would not expect to see a fatality in a 20-mile an hour car crash; further, his testimony was already properly excluded because the plaintiff's Miss. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(4) response did not include the opinion or show that the doctor was qualified to express it. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

The fact that a chiropractor had not treated the plaintiff did not prevent his testimony as an expert witness, although it was relevant to the weight of his testimony. McCaffrey v. Puckett, 784 So. 2d 197 (Miss. 2001).

Observation.

Defendant was not entitled to reversal of his conviction for fondling a child in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-23 because, inter alia: (1) the evidence was sufficient to enable a reasonable juror to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, (2) the trial court did not improperly limit cross-examination of the victim in violation of defendant's rights under USCS Const. Amend. 6 and Miss. Const. Art. III, § 26, because testimony concerning the victim's past sexual behavior was properly excluded under Miss. R. Evid. 412; (3) since defendant failed to object at trial to the qualification of an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702, the issue was waived; and (4) under Miss. R. Evid. 615(3), the expert witness was properly allowed to remain in the court room so that she could base her opinion on facts learned at the trial pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 703. Aguilar v. State, 955 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where a psychiatrist's opinion was based on the observation of plaintiff at the hearing and on medical and psychiatric records of plaintiff's treating physicians, evidence was properly admitted and the only issue to be resolved was that of the weight to be given to testimony. Sibley v. Unifirst Bank for Sav. ex rel. Resolution Trust Corp., 699 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1997).

Photographs of murder victim.

The court did not err in admitting into evidence six specific photographs taken during the autopsy of a murder victim, notwithstanding the contentions that instruments protruding from the wounds could be compared to a knife stuck in the body and that the photographs created confusion about which wounds were inflicted by the knife wielded by the defendant and which wounds were the result of the surgeon's scalpel at the hospital during efforts to resuscitate the victim, since (1) the punctures from the knife already existed at the time of the autopsy and the instruments were used to assess the punctures, (2) the photographs contradicted the defendant's testimony that he could remember stabbing his wife only two times, (3) the location and nature of the wounds demonstrated the potentially brutal manner in which the defendant slashed his wife, and (4) the number of wounds may have indicated to the jury a degree of brutality in the defendant's attack on his wife which exceeded whatever force might otherwise have reasonably been required to repel her attack on him with her knife, about which the defendant also testified. Hamilton v. State, 742 So. 2d 1173 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Reports.

Trial court was within its discretion in admitting an expert in human factors and warnings, with special expertise in the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's (NHTSA) promulgation of a Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard by virtue of his peer review paper on the subject, to testify as to the NHTSA's though proscesses in making certain decisions. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Testimony of an expert in human factors and warnings satisfied the trial court that the studies and surveys on which the expert based his opinion were of the type considered reliable for forming expert opinions. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court was within its discretion in allowing expert witnesses to testify about accident data from the National Accident Sampling System database as the reports on which the experts based their opinions were of the type reasonably relied upon by experts in their fields. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court abused its discretion by barring the cross-examination of an expert witness on the ground that the reports upon which the opposing party sought to rely upon in the cross-examination were not admitted into evidence. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

The trial court did not err in allowing an expert to testify in a murder prosecution using an autopsy report prepared by a third party where such autopsy report was used by the expert in forming his own opinion as to the victim's cause of death. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Government report, if reasonably relied on by experts in the field in forming opinions or inferences, was not required to be admissible in evidence, and since defendant was entitled to cross-examine plaintiff's expert to attack the relevancy of this information, its suppression was inappropriate. Magnolia Constr. Co. v. Mississippi Gulf S. Eng'rs, Inc., 518 So. 2d 1194 (Miss. 1988).

Sequestration.

Although a murder defendant had invoked the rule of sequestration, the trial court did not err in allowing an expert witness for the State to remain in the courtroom during another witness's testimony in order to avoid the need to ask the expert hypothetical questions. Northup v. State, 793 So. 2d 618 (Miss. 2001).

Rule 704. Opinion on ultimate issue.

Testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact.

COMMENT

Rule 704 abolishes the "ultimate issue rule" which existed in pre-rule Mississippi practice. The ultimate issue rule was often unnecessarily restrictive and generally difficult to apply. More often than not the invocation of the rule served to deprive the trier of fact of useful information. Rule 704 clarifies much of the confusion over the ultimate issue rule. An opinion is no longer objectionable solely on grounds that it "invades the province of the jury."

The abolition of the ultimate issue rule does not result in the admission of all opinions. It is an absolute requirement under Rules 701 and 702 that opinions must be helpful to a determination of the case before they are admissible. Furthermore, under Rule 403 evidence is excluded which wastes time. A question may not be asked which is based on adequately explored legal criteria since the answer would not be helpful. As the FRE Advisory Committee's Note to FRE 705 indicates, the question in a will contest, "Did the testator have the capacity to make a will" is still not permitted, whereas the question, "Did the testator have sufficient mental capacity to know the nature and extent of his property and the natural objects of his bounty and to formulate a rational scheme of distribution" would be. The former question is not helpful; the latter is.

State of mind.

Whether murder defendant, under the circumstances, had reasonable grounds to believe that victim was going to kill him was a matter to be decided by the fact-finder alone, and trial judge properly excluded psychologist's opinion as stating a legal conclusion. Hart v. State, 637 So. 2d 1329 (Miss. 1994).

Questions asked of defendant's psychologist, as to whether defendant was suffering effects of hypnosis, called for an opinion as to an ultimate issue, and his opinion was permissible under this rule since it did not tell the jury what result to reach or provide a legal conclusion. Alexander v. State, 610 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 1992).

Illustrative cases.

Trial court properly determined that the deputy state fire marshal's expert testimony would assist the jury in understanding the evidence because (1) he testified about the origin and cause of the fire; (2) he properly utilized the methods of his training and expertise in arson to formulate an opinion based on the facts he encountered; (3) an investigation of the appliances and heaters in the house revealed that they were not the cause of the fire; (4) in his opinion, he determined the area of origin of the fire was the front living room and the adjoining den area; (5) he testified about pour patterns noted on the floor in that area, which indicated that a flammable liquid had been poured over the area; (6) he excluded all accidental causes of the fire; and (7) during cross-examination, he explained that the negative test results did not exclude the possibility that there were flammable liquids in the pour pattern; it just possibly meant that there was not enough flammable liquid remaining to create a positive test result. Colburn v. State, 990 So. 2d 206 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 472 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's trial for capital murder as a result of felonious abuse of a child, testimony as to the possible causes of the deceased child's injuries was not outside the scope of the state's expert witness because the testimony was relevant, and the testimony was helpful for the jury. Berry v. State, 980 So. 2d 936 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 979 So. 2d 691, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 204 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not err in not allowing an eyewitness to express his opinion as to whether defendant was acting in self-defense because it was determined that the eyewitness was not in the best view to assess whether or not defendant began his attack based on self-defense. Shirley v. State, 942 So. 2d 322 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

There was sufficient evidence for a driving under the influence conviction, even though there was no scientific evidence of intoxication because an officer's testimony regarding defendant's conduct, as well as the reading on a breath test and his refusal to cooperate with an Intoxilyzer test, showed that he was intoxicated; the officer did not have to qualify as an expert to so testify. Ouzts v. State, 947 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Finding against the driver in her action for injuries resulting from a collision with a train at a railroad crossing was appropriate where a witness would not have qualified as an expert on the dynamics of accidents at the crossing; at best he was a lay witness whose opinions were rationally based on his perceptions. Bowman v.

CSX Transp., Inc., 931 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Circuit judge did not commit prejudicial error under Miss. R. Evid. 103(a) by allowing three circuit judges to testify and offer opinions about the competency of public defenders after instructing the county to "stay away from" expert testimony on ultimate questions of fact under Miss. R. Evid. 704 in the county's action against the state alleging that state statutes requiring counties to provide legal services for indigent criminal defendants were unconstitutional. The circuit judge relied on the judges' testimony to help her determine whether the public defenders' caseload was excessive, whether indigent defendants were entering into ill-advised plea agreements, and whether the public defenders take their obligations as such seriously, and further, the circuit judge did not treat their testimony as expert testimony. Quitman County v. State, 910 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2005).

Circuit judge did not commit prejudicial error under Miss. R. Evid. 103(a) in disallowing "ultimate issue" opinion testimony by an expert under Miss. R. Evid. 704 in a county's action against the state alleging that state statutes requiring counties to provide legal services for indigent criminal defendants were unconstitutional because the expert had already addressed his specific concerns about the indigent defense system in his extensive testimony, and allowing one final, sweeping opinion during re-direct examination was redundant and unnecessary under Miss. R. Evid. 401. Quitman County v. State, 910 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2005).

Accident reconstructionist testified that given the slow speed at which the tractor trailer was turning, if the injured person (who skidded into the rear of the trailer), had been keeping a proper lookout and operating his vehicle under control at a safe speed, the accident would not have happened. Even though the testimony embraced an ultimate issue on the subject of negligence, such an invasion of the province of the jury was not absolutely barred, and it was not inadmissible as the testimony was helpful to the determination of the case. McKenzie v. Supervalu, Inc., 883 So. 2d 1188 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a landowner's action against a lumber company for trespass and wrongful cutting of timber, the trial court erred in denying the landowner's attempts to elicit testimony from the landowner's expert and from the lumber company's expert through cross-examination on whether it was reckless to cut timber before determining boundary lines, because that testimony was a crucial part of the evidence needed by the jury to determine whether the landowner should receive the statutory penalty under Miss. Code Ann. § 95-5-10(2), and the testimony was admissible. Smith v. Parkerson Lumber, Inc., — So. 2d —, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 326 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 888 So. 2d 1197, 2004 Miss. App. LEXIS 1149 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was charged with driving under the influence, the trial court did not commit reversible error under Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 704 in allowing police officers to give their opinions that defendant was under the influence because the opinions were rationally based on the perceptions of the officers, helpful to the trier of fact, and not based on scientific knowledge. Christian v. State, 859 So. 2d 1068 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a motorist's suit against a county, the trial court erred (albeit harmlessly) in preventing a traffic engineer from opining on whether the county failed to adequately warn motorists; the standard of care was a question of fact, not, as the trial judge incorrectly stated, a legal question. Donaldson v. Covington County, 846 So. 2d 219 (Miss. 2003).

The rule did not prohibit an officer from testifying that boot prints at the scene of a burglary appeared to be made by boots taken from the defendant's home. Bryant v. State, 748 So. 2d 780 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Experts were properly allowed to testify that railroad crossing was "extra hazardous," since this was not the ultimate issue; the ultimate issue was whether or not the railroad was negligent in not doing more to warn of impending approach of trains, and testimony that crossing was extra hazardous merely assisted trier of fact in this regard. Illinois Cent. R.R. v. White, 610 So. 2d 308 (Miss. 1992).

Rule 705. Disclosure of facts or data underlying expert opinion.

The expert may testify in terms of opinion or inferences and give his reasons therefor without prior disclosure of the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires otherwise. The expert may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination.

COMMENT

Rule 705 is an attempt to eliminate the use of the hypothetical question or, at the least, reduce its use. The almost universal criticism of the hypothetical question is that it is unduly complex and time-consuming. While dispensing with the requirement of preliminary disclosure at the trial of underlying facts or data, Rule 705 nonetheless offers two protections. The court may, in its discretion, require disclosure. Regardless of whether it does, the expert may still be required to state the underlying facts on cross-examination.

Cross-examination.

Cross-examination.

Trial court in eminent domain proceeding should have allowed property owners to cross-examine city's expert appraiser to determine whether tax appraisal aided him in arriving at his determination of the property's market value. Morley v. Jackson Redevelopment Auth., 632 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. 1994).

Illustrative cases.

During resentencing in the state inmate's capital murder case, the inmate's attorneys were not constitutionally ineffective for opening the door to allow in evidence of the inmate's prior bad acts and for failing to object to the State's invocation of prior bad acts in its closing statement. Because the inmate's prior criminal history was included in a defense expert's report as part of the information which formed the basis for expert's opinions, counsel would have been unsuccessful in any objection raised regarding the contents of the report pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 705; thus, counsel was not deficient in preemptively introducing the evidence or in failing to object to the evidence during closing arguments. Woodward v. Epps, 580 F.3d 318 (5th Cir. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 2093, 176 L. Ed. 2d 729, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 3297, 78 U.S.L.W. 3610 (U.S. 2010).

Defendant claimed that the testimony of the accident reconstructionist and the forensic toxicologist should have been excluded because the defense was not allowed to voir dire those witnesses about the principles and methods used in arriving at their opinions. However, the defense extensively cross-examined the witnesses at issue regarding the methods used to arrive at their opinions on speed determination and the qualifications to calibrate the machine used to determine the blood alcohol level of defendant; the trial court did not err in its handling of those matters and discovery was not improperly restricted as to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 9.04(A), where the defense claimed that the reports from the various expert witnesses of the State were insufficient, but where said cross-examination of experts and voir dire of other experts was allowed. Lawrence v. State, 931 So. 2d 600 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 345 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court was within its discretion in admitting an expert in human factors and warnings, with special expertise in the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's (NHTSA) promulgation of a Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard by virtue of his peer review paper on the subject, to testify as to the NHTSA's though proscesses in making certain decisions. Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc.,

905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 706. Court appointed experts.

(a) Appointment. The court may on its own motion or on the motion of any party enter an order to show cause why expert witnesses should not be appointed, and may request the parties to submit nominations. The court may appoint any expert witnesses agreed upon by the parties, and may appoint expert witnesses of its own selection. An expert witness shall not be appointed by the court unless he consents to act. A witness so appointed shall be informed of his duties by the court in writing, a copy of which shall be filed with the clerk, or at a conference in which the parties shall have the opportunity to participate. A witness so appointed shall advise the parties of his findings, if any; his deposition may be taken by any party; and he may be called to testify by the court or any party. He shall be subject to cross-examination by each party, including a party calling him as a witness.

(b) Compensation. Expert witnesses so appointed are entitled to reasonable compensation in whatever sum the court may allow. The compensation thus fixed is payable from funds which may be provided by law in criminal cases and civil actions and proceedings involving just compensation under the Fifth Amendment. In other civil actions and proceedings the compensation shall be paid by the parties in such proportion and at such time as the court directs, and thereafter charged in like manner as other costs.

(c) Disclosure of appointment. In the exercise of its discretion, the court may authorize disclosure to the jury of the fact that the court appointed the expert witness.

(d) Parties' experts of own selection. Nothing in this rule limits the parties in calling expert witnesses of their own selection.

(e) Certain eminent domain proceedings. The provisions of Rule 706(a), (b), and (c) are inapplicable to appraisers who are appointed by the court as required by state law for purposes of claims for immediate possession in eminent domain cases. (Amended November 16, 1988, effective retroactive to January 1, 1986; amended January 31, 1990.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 31, 1990, Rule 706 was amended to reflect the decision in Hudspeth v. State Highway Comm'n of Miss., 534 So. 2d 210 (Miss. 1988), amending Rule 706, November 16, 1988, effective retroactive to January 1, 1986. 553-556 So. 2d XXVII (West Miss. Cas. 1990).

COMMENT

The essence of Rule 706 is contained in subsection (a). Subsection (a) provides specifically for the appointment of an expert either on the motion of a party or on the judge's own motion. It also provides for input by the parties into the selection process. Under the rule, the court-appointed expert may be deposed. Any party, including the party calling the expert, may cross-examine him. This rule was amended in 1988 in Hudspeth v. State Highway Commission of Mississippi, 534 So.2d 210 (Miss. 1988), to be consistent with the provisions of then existing M.C.A. § 11-27-89 which provided that court appointed experts would not be compelled to testify. The amendment was made retroactive to January 1, 1986, the effective date of the Mississippi Rules of Evidence. Subsequent to the Hudspeth amendment, Rule 706(e) was amended to retain the substance of Rule 706(e) as originally approved by the Court in Hudspeth while deleting any reference to and dependence upon a specific statutory provision.

[Amended January 31, 1990; March 20, 1995.]

Appointment.

In an action involving the change of primary physical custody of the child from the father to the mother, the mother's contention that a doctor was improperly appointed because there was nothing in the record to indicate that he was informed of his duties in writing or at a conference that was participated in by all the parties was without merit. The mother neither objected to the doctor's being allowed to testify, nor did she demand that his duties be specified in writing or outlined during a conference; therefore, it was unnecessary to engage in further discussion concerning the procedural technicalities surrounding the appointment. Schmidt v. Bermudez, 5 So. 3d 1100 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), reversed by, remanded by 5 So. 3d 1064, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 104 (Miss. 2009).

Chancellor did not abuse his discretion in failing to appoint his own expert to value the personal property at issue, which merely included miscellaneous houseware, in a divorce proceeding, since complex issues were not involved. Wells v. Wells, 800 So. 2d 1239 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The chancellor did not abuse his discretion in appointing an expert in an equal distribution proceeding since the mechanics of the case were extremely complicated where (1) involved in the case was the valuation of a partnership that was in bankruptcy at the time of the parties' divorce, (2) the partnership subsequently had ended the bankruptcy and had begun rebuilding its operations, (3) the parties had lived in a home allegedly paid for and owned by the partnership, and (4) living expenses for the parties had been paid by the partnership. Heigle v. Heigle, 771 So. 2d 341 (Miss. 2000).

The trial court did not err in refusing to order a court appointed expert on the question of credits against the judgment to which the movant was entitled where the record reflected that the circuit court did not find a need for an expert but specifically reserved the right to reconsider and appoint an expert for the issue of the credits. Trilogy Communications, Inc. v. Thomas Truck Lease, Inc., 733 So. 2d 313 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

ARTICLE VIII. HEARSAY

Editor's Note — By order adopted effective January 1, 1986, the Mississippi Supreme Court found as follows:

A witness's testimony is evaluated on the basis of four factors: perception, memory, narration, and sincerity. In order that the testimony can be properly considered in the light of these factors, the testimony should comply with three conditions. The witness should testify (1) under oath, (2) in the presence of the trier of fact, and (3) be subjected to cross-examination. Past experience as well as common sense indicate that some testimony which does not conform to these three conditions may be more valuable than testimony that does. The four factors may, in some instances, be present in the absence of compliance with the three aforementioned conditions. The solution that the common law developed over a period of time was a general rule against hearsay which permitted exceptions which furnished guarantees of trustworthiness and reliability.

The hearsay provisions of the uniform rules retain the common law scheme. The traditional common law hearsay exceptions have been retained in Rules 803 and 804. Rule 803 concerns itself with situations where availability of the declarant is immaterial. Rule 804 pertains to exceptions which are usable only where the declarant is unavailable. The concluding provisions of both Rule 803 and 804 (Rule 803(24) and Rule 804(b)(5) respectively) allow for the use of hearsay statements which do not fall within the recognized exceptions, when the guarantees of trustworthiness and necessity are present. These two provisions are a recognition that the law is not stagnant; they are designed to encourage the development of this area of the law.

Rule 801. Definitions.

The following definitions apply under this article:

(a) Statement. A "statement" is (1) an oral or written assertion or (2) nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by the person as an assertion.

(b) Declarant. A "declarant" is a person who makes a statement.

(c) Hearsay. "Hearsay" is a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(d) Statements which are not hearsay. A statement is not hearsay if:

(1) Prior statement by witness. The declarant testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination concerning the statement, and the statement is (A) inconsistent with the declarant's testimony, and was given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at a trial, hearing or other proceeding, or in a deposition, or (B) consistent with the declarant's testimony and is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive, or (C) one of identification of a person made after perceiving the person; or

(2) Admission by party-opponent. The statement is offered against a party and is (A) the party's own statement, in either an individual or a representative capacity or (B) a statement of which the party has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth, or (C) a statement by a person authorized by the party to make a statement concerning the subject, or (D) a statement by the party's agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of the, agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship, or (E) a statement by a co-conspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. The contents of the statement shall be considered but are not alone sufficient to establish the declarant's authority under subdivision (C), the agency or employment relationship and scope thereof under subdivision (D), or the existence of the conspiracy and the participation therein of the declarant and the party against whom the statement is offered under subdivision (E). (Amended effective July 1, 2009.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective May 27, 2004, the Comment to Rule 801 was amended to include the paragraph concerning subsection (d)(1)(C).

Effective March 1, 1989, the Comment was amended to delete the statement about Rule 801(d)(1)(C) and to include an additional comment about 801(d)(2). 536-538 So.2d XXXII (West MissCas.1989).

COMMENT

Subsection (a) defines with clarity the concept of a statement. The significant point is that nothing is an assertion unless intended to be one. This becomes particularly important in situations which deal with nonverbal conduct. Some nonverbal conduct is clearly tantamount to a verbal assertion, e.g., pointing to someone to identify that person. The definition of statement excludes nonverbal conduct which is not assertive. Thus, the definition of hearsay in Rule 801(c) concerns itself with conduct that is assertive.

When evidence of conduct is offered on the basis that the conduct was not a statement and, therefore, not hearsay, the trial judge must make a preliminary determination to ascertain whether an assertion was intended by the conduct. The burden is upon the party claiming that the intention existed.

Subsection (c) codifies and simultaneously clarifies the common law definition of hearsay. If the significance of a statement is simply that it was made and there is no issue about the truth of the matter asserted, then the statement is not hearsay.

Under this definition of hearsay an out-of-court statement made and repeated by a witness testifying at trial is hearsay. The key is whether the statement is made while testifying or whether it is out-of-court. An out-of court statement otherwise hearsay is technically no less hearsay because it was made in the presence of a party.

Subsection 801(d) has two major parts and both are departures from past Mississippi practice. The purpose of subsection (d) is to exclude statements which literally fall within the definition of hearsay from the hearsay rule.

Subsection 801(d)(1) is concerned with prior statements of the witness. In three specific instances, a witness's prior statement is not hearsay.

Prior inconsistent statements have generally been admissible for impeachment purposes but not admissible as substantive evidence. Moffett v. State, 456 So.2d 714, 719 (Miss. 1984). This has been the traditional practice in Mississippi. Under Rule 801(d)(1)(A) the prior inconsistent statements may be admissible as substantive evidence if they were made under oath, e.g., at a deposition or at a judicial proceeding. This covers statements made before a grand jury. There is no requirement that the prior statement be written. If the defendant in a criminal trial has made a prior inconsistent statement, the situation is governed by Rule 801(d)(2).

Rule 801(d)(1)(B) provides that prior consistent statements may be introduced for substantive evidence when offered to rebut a charge against the witness of recent fabrication.

Rule 801(d)(1)(C), which declares that prior statements of identification made by a witness are not hearsay, is not a departure from pre-rule practice. The Court in Fells v. State, 345 So.2d 618 (Miss. 1977), departed from the traditional view that such statements were hearsay by adopting what was then the minority view that statements of identification could be admitted as substantive evidence of that identification. The scope of the rule is broader than the Fells holding in that: (1) there is no need for a prior attempt to impeach the witness for the identifying statement to be admissible; (2) the testimony about the prior statement may be from the witness who made it or another person who heard it; (3) the witness who made the statement need not make an in-court identification; and (4) the statement may have been made either in or apart from an investigative procedure. Statements physically describing a person are not statements of identification under this rule. The Confrontation Clause is not violated when a third party testifies about an out-of-court identification made by a witness who is unable to recall or unwilling to testify about that identification, provided the identifying witness testifies at the trial or hearing and is subject to cross-examination. U.S. v. Owens, 484 U.S. 554, 108 S.Ct. 838, 98 L.Ed. 2d 951 (1988).

Rule 801(d)(2) deals with admissions made by a party-opponent other than admissions made pursuant to M.R.C.P. 36(b). Admissibility of admissions made pursuant to M.R.C.P. 36(b) is controlled by that rule and is not affected by Rule 801(d)(2). The practice has been in Mississippi to treat an admission as an exception to the hearsay rule. Rule 801(d)(2) achieves the same result of admissibility although it classifies admissions as non-hearsay. There are five classes of statements which fall under the rule:

(A) A party's own statement is the classic example of an admission. If he has a representative capacity and the statement is offered against him in that capacity, no inquiry whether he was acting in the representative capacity in making the statement is required. It is only necessary that the statement be relevant to representative affairs.

(B) If a party adopts or acquiesces in another person's statement, it will be deemed that the statement is indeed his admission. Knowledge is not a necessary ingredient. Matthews v. Carpenter, 231 Miss. 677, 97 So.2d 522 (1957); Haver v. Hinson, 385 So.2d 606 (Miss. 1980). This raises the question of when silence is a form of admission. Silence may constitute a tacit admission if a person would have, under the circumstances, protested the statement made in his presence if the statement were untrue. In civil cases, this does not pose a significant problem. In criminal cases, much may depend on the person's constitutional right not to incriminate himself.

(C) The general principle survives that a statement by an agent authorized to speak by a party is tantamount to an admission by a party. The rule covers statements made by the agent to third persons as well as statements made by the agent to the principal. The essence of this is that a party's own records are admissible against him, even where there has been no intent to disclose the information therein to third persons.

(D) The common law required that the agent's statement be uttered as part of his duties, i.e., within the scope of his agency. 801(d)(2)(D) regards this rigid requirement and admits a statement "concerning a matter within the scope of his agency" provided it was uttered during the existence of the employment relationship.

(E) This section codifies the principle that only those statements of co-conspirators will be admissible which were made (1) during the course of the conspiracy and (2) in furtherance of it. This is consistent with the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440, 69 S.Ct. 716, 93 L.Ed. 709 (1949), which deemed inadmissible statements made after the conspiracy's objectives had either succeeded or failed.

Rule 801(d)(2) provides that the court shall consider the contents of the declarant's statement in resolving preliminary questions relating to a declarant's authority under subdivision (C), the agency or employment relationship and scope thereof under subdivision (D), and the existence of a conspiracy and the identity of the participants therein under subdivision (E). Generally, foundational facts are governed by Rule 104, not the law of agency. See Bourjaily v. United States, 107 S.Ct. 2775 (1987). Under Rule 104(a), these preliminary questions are to be established by a preponderance of the evidence. Of course, in determining preliminary questions, the court may give the contents of the statement as much (or as little) weight as the court in its discretion deems appropriate. Moreover, Rule 801(d)(2) provides that the contents of the statement do not alone suffice to establish the preliminary questions. Rather, the court must in addition consider the circumstances surrounding the statement, such as the identity of the speaker, the context in which the statement was made, and evidence corroborating the contents of the statement. See Ponthieux v. State, 532 So.2d 1239, 1244 (Miss. 1988) ("on appeal ... [w]e search the entire record to determine whether the preliminary fact has been established); Martin v. State, 609 So.2d 435 (Miss. 1992).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

The circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls; it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b), and furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 801, the introduction of a co-defendant's guilty plea colloquy during defendant's trial was admissible to rehabilitate the co-defendant's testimony and showed that co-defendant did not omit facts during his guilty plea as much as trial court focused on certain facts during the guilty plea and did not ask for elaboration on matters to degree to which the co-defendant testified at defendant's trial. Esco v. State, 9 So. 3d 1156 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 228 (Miss. 2009).

Accident victim's testimony that she heard a neighbor say that the defendant driver had previously been speeding was inadmissable hearsay because it was made out-of-court and the victim was not the declarant; the statement was no less hearsay merely because it had been made in the driver's presence. Washington v. Kelsey, 990 So. 2d 242 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial judge is capable of sorting through exhibits based upon their relevancy and ignoring inadmissible evidence such as hearsay. Therefore, there was no error in the admission of 50 exhibits at one time to speed up the post-conviction process, even though the state did not have a chance to argue the exhibit's relevancy or rebut hearsay statements contained in the exhibits; moreover, the state was unable to specifically point to any prejudicial exhibit. State v. Bass, 4 So. 3d 353 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 113 (Miss. Mar. 12, 2009).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of aggravated assault and rape was appropriate because each of the prerequisites of Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B) were satisfied so as to remove the witnesses' statements from the category of impermissible hearsay, as the victim had already testified that defendant raped her, her testimony was subject to cross-examination, and each of the witnesses confirmed that the victim told them that she was raped; the statements refuted the defense of consensual sex. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court correctly refused to allow hearsay testimony from an officer regarding what the inmates told him that the accessory-after-the-fact said about the murder; if defendant wanted to inquire about those alleged statements, he should have called the inmates themselves to testify. Bailey v. State, 960 So. 2d 583 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Detective's testimony, which divulged that he relied in part on anonymous tips, was merely a statement of fact regarding his investigative process; accordingly, the detective's testimony was not hearsay, and the trial court did not err by allowing its admission. Johnson v. State, 956 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case involving the dismissal of a superintendent, the superintendent was unable to overcome the presumption of honesty and integrity normally given to school boards by the hearsay evidence that the superintendent presented because this alone was not a proper basis for a finding of fact. Wilder v. Bd. of Trs. of the Hazlehurst City Sch. Dist., 969 So. 2d 83 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 657 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant sought to introduce hearsay statements of the victim in histrial for capital murder. Defendant never claimed the statements were not hearsay, despite his claim that he should be allowed great latitude in the introduction of evidence; trial court properly determined the statements were inadmissible. Shaw v. State, 915 So. 2d 442 (Miss. 2005).

Witness' testimony was properly excluded because defendant intended to introduce the witness' prior statements to show that the victim had been coached to lie, and, therefore, the statement constituted hearsay under Miss.R. Evid. 801(c) because defendant intended to use his witness' prior statement in the guise of impeachment under Miss. R. Evid. 607 for the primary purpose of placing before the jury substantive evidence which was not otherwise admissible in order to avoid the hearsay rule. Elkins v. State, 918 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 26 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 547 U.S. 1194, 126 S. Ct. 2865, 165 L. Ed. 2d 898, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4564, 74 U.S.L.W. 3685 (2006).

Trial court erred by failing to sustain defendant's objection to a police officer's testimony that another officer checked with dispatch to see if defendant had called 911 to report that her fugitive son had returned to the house and that the dispatcher reported there was no record of a 911 call because the testimony contained inadmissible hearsay and double hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) as it was an out of court statement offered for its truth and the statements did not fall within a hearsay exception that would render it admissible as provided in Miss. R. Evid. 805. However, the error was harmless because defendant was convicted based on a later incident in which she failed to report that her son had returned to the house, therefore the hearsay testimony about the earlier incident was not especially probative of her intent to aid her son evade police in the later incident and there was overwhelming evidence that defendant's conduct in the later incident conformed with the elements of the crime of accessory-after-the-fact. Young v. State, 908 So. 2d 819 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Court properly disallowed defendant's proffered hearsay testimony because the declarant was not under subpoena to appear at trial and defendant made no efforts to procure his attendance, and a presumption or suspicion that a witness would assert his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to testify was insufficient to declare a witness unavailable. The witness must be called to the stand and there refuse to testify before he became unavailable due to invoking the Fifth Amendment. Cochran v. State, 913 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Although defendant argued that the victim's testimony pertaining to the fact that a desk similar to the one that was stolen was for sale for $4,399 was hearsay, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), the introduction of price tags was not hearsay and was admissible to prove the value of a stolen item; the trial judge did not err in admitting this testimony. Thompson v. State, 910 So. 2d 60 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Witness's deposition would be hearsay because it was a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and did not meet the exemption requirements under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1); the witness's availability did not change the result, since the son could have objected to the deposition as hearsay regardless of whether the witness was present at trial or not. Gibson v. Wright, 870 So. 2d 1250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Statements made to a 911 operator by the owner of a trailer where defendant had just murdered her husband relating to events that had occurred while the owner was asleep in the trailer or repeated statements made to the owner by defendant, were hearsay statements under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) that did not fall within the Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) present sense exception to the hearsay rule; as the owner was asleep when the murder took place, his statements to the 911 operator were not made while he was perceiving the occurrence of the murder or immediately thereafter. Moore v. State, 859 So. 2d 379 (Miss. 2003).

Hearsay claimed by the estate in the investigating officer's testimony were merely her conclusions, rather than out-of-court statements; however, her testimony regarding what one of the flagmen told her was clearly hearsay. Estate of Carter v. Phillips & Phillips Constr. Co., 860 So. 2d 332 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in allowing a witness to testify that a codefendant had told him defendant had shot someone, as the statement was made in defendant's presence and defendant did not contradict, deny, or object to it; thus, the statement amounted to an "adoptive admission" pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(B). Howell v. State, 860 So. 2d 704 (Miss. 2003), cert. dismissed, 543 U.S. 440, 125 S. Ct. 856, 160 L. Ed. 2d 873 (2005).

Statement of an officer to explain why a particular person was approached on a certain date was admissible because it did not constitute hearsay; moreover, the statement did not violate defendant's right to confrontation because the officer was cross-examined at trial, despite the fact that the officer's actions were based on the statements of several anonymous tipsters. Hill v. State, 865 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's conviction for depraved heart murder was proper where an improperly admitted hearsay statement in which the victim said that defendant was going to hit him and take his money was harmless error because the properly admitted evidence was more than sufficient to support the jury's verdict, Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), 802. Edwards v. State, 856 So. 2d 587 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. dismissed, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

In a wrongful death action, despite the general rule on exclusion of books, pamphlets and treatises as hearsay, it was not contested that the decedent had received a copy of the drilling company's handbook, which referenced the safety manual, and that both addressed fall protection. The handbook and manual would have shown the decedent's state of mind, and the extent of his exercise of reasonable care, and the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the handbook, manual and accompanying deposition testimony. Crane Co. v. Kitzinger, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. Jan. 30, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded en banc by 860 So. 2d 1196, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 689 (Miss. 2003).

In a prosecution for uttering forgery arising from the defendant's attempt to cash three checks at a hardware store, a marking on one of the checks that read, "DO NOT PRESENT AGAIN AS A CASH ITEM," was not hearsay as the language did not go to any element of the charged offense and was not prejudicial to the defendant since the account on which the checks were drawn was not the defendant's. Davis v. State, 762 So. 2d 347 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Admission by party opponent.

In a suit brought against a water park for injuries a patron sustained while on a water slide, the trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of the patron's mother regarding her discussion the day after the accident with an unidentified employee of the water park. The conversation did not qualify as an admission by a party opponent under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) as the mother could not identify the employee she spoke to and as the employee worked at a concession stand; therefore, it did not appear that the provisions of Rule 801(d)(2) applied since the mother did not prove that the employee was authorized to speak on the subject of where lifeguards should be or should not be on duty. Boyd v. Magic Golf, 52 So. 3d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Trial court did not err in allowing evidence related to a homeowner's letter to her insurance company, which placed the blame of the damage to the homeowner's real and personal property upon the insurance company because the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) as an admission by party-opponent; the evidence was offered for a purpose other than to allow a carpet cleaning company to mitigate its damages, and the statement's probative value outweighed the possibility of prejudice. Wright v. Royal Carpet Servs., 29 So. 3d 109 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant called the State witness on her cell phone immediately after the shooting and made incriminating admissions, and approximately a month after the shooting, law enforcement provided defendant with Miranda warnings, and upon being so advised, he chose not to exercise his right to remain silent. Instead, he made oral statements to law enforcement disclaiming his connection to the shooting, which was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2); therefore, the case presented no violation of post-Miranda silence. Robinson v. State, 40 So. 3d 570 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendants' murder convictions were appropriate because an officer's testimony about one defendant's admission was not hearsay, Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A); extrajudicial statements by a criminal defendant, so long as the statements were relevant to the matter being tried, were admissible in evidence. Further, the probative evidence of the officer's testimony was not outweighed by its prejudice. Sneed v. State, 31 So. 3d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 2010 Miss. LEXIS 150 (Miss. Mar. 25, 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 152 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 931, 178 L. Ed. 2d 775, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 350, 79 U.S.L.W. 3400 (U.S. 2011).

Granting of a directed verdict in favor of a physician provider, a physician, and a medical center, in a claim for medical malpractice was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A) because, although the circuit court erred in refusing to allow the patient to play an edited video deposition of a doctor, the error was legally harmless since the patient was permitted to examine the doctor and then impeach him with his videotaped deposition statements on cross-examination if it was inconsistent with his live testimony. Hartel v. Pruett, 998 So. 2d 979 (Miss. 2008).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing the witness's testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) because a statement was not hearsay if it was the party's own statement offered against him; it was irrelevant that defendant did not intend it to be a statement against interest and that it was self-serving when made. Grant v. State, 8 So. 3d 213 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 207 (Miss. 2009).

In a murder case, the trial court didi not err in permitting a law enforcement officer to testify about defendant's prior statements because defendant's statements offered against him were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). Walden v. State, 29 So. 3d 17 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 105 (Miss. 2010).

Two defendants' convictions for depraved-heart murder were appropriate because a police officer's testimony about what the second defendant said regarding an assault on the victim was an admission by a party opponent and thus not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). McDowell v. State, 984 So. 2d 1003 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 328 (Miss. 2008).

Victim's mother's testimony about a letter defendant wrote to her while he was incarcerated was an admission by a party-opponent, not considered hearsay, and thus admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2); there could be no violation of the confrontation clause when defendant was the person making the incriminating statement, as defendant could not cross-examine himself, and there was nothing in the testimony about the letter which was an absolute admission of guilt on the part of defendant. Rankin v. State, 963 So. 2d 1255 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the employer and against the employees in their intentional infliction of emotional distress claims was improper because, referring to a group of black employees as "monkeys" could have been possible passed off as a tasteless joke; however, that insult coupled with an apparent reference to lynching could have permitted a reasonable juror to conclude that the comment was outrageous and revolting, and the supervisor's statement was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(D). Jones v. Fluor Daniel Servs. Corp., 959 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine was improper because the state presented no evidence identifying the persons on the tape at issue, and thus the appellate court was unable to determine whether the statements on the tape would have been exempt from hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A), in the case of defendant's own statements, or under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), in the case of statements by a co-conspirator. Brown v. State, 969 So. 2d 891 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 969 So. 2d 855, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine was inappropriate because the state failed to present evidence that identified the people on the tape in question; thus, the appellate court was unable to determine whether the statements on the tape would have been exempt from hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A), in the case of defendant's own statements, or under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), in the case of statements by a co-conspirator. Brown v. State, 969 So. 2d 891 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 969 So. 2d 855, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2007).

During defendant's burglary trial, the trial court did not err in overruling his hearsay objections, where the extrajudicial statements that he made to the police were admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A), because they were relevant to the crime at issue. Biggs v. State, 942 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 715 (Miss. 2006).

Finding against the driver in her action for injuries resulting from a collision with a train at a railroad crossing was appropriate where the trial court rightfully excluded evidence from an officer about a conversation that he had on the day after the accident with an individual in the city's traffic division because the issue of whether the railroad had negligently failed to comply with its obligations to maintain the crossing would have been unaffected by the challenged evidence; thus, there was no reversible error in excluding the potentially nonhearsay statements. Bowman v. CSX Transp., Inc., 931 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for murdering her husband in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19 was proper where her confession to a State witness was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti of murder. Further, that testimony was clearly admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) as an admission by a party opponent. Stephens v. State, 911 So. 2d 424 (Miss. 2005).

Statements made in a phone call by plaintiff's attorney to defendant's attorney in an action to dissolve a business were admissible as admissions by party opponent. Vaughn v. Rettig, 912 So. 2d 795 (Miss. 2005).

— In general.

In defendant's trial for the sale of cocaine and marijuana to an undercover officer, the trial court did not err in admitting an amended drug document that showed the crime lab's weight label for the drugs had been accidentally switched and then corrected because the defense admitted two reports containing contradictory weights of the drug evidence and cross-examined the crime lab scientist on the document, thus the defense opened the door for the State to discuss and attempt to admit the corrected document into evidence to clarify and explain the discrepancy for the different package weights. Hearsay testimony elicited by the prosecution is not error where the record clearly discloses that defense counsel provoked the questions by the prosecutor because he first interrogated the State's witness at great length on the same subject. Johnson v. State, 908 So. 2d 100 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 613(b) does not apply to admissions of a party-opponent as defined in subsection (d)(2) of this rule. Ratcliff v. State, 752 So. 2d 435 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

— Adoption.

In a prosecution for armed robbery and aggravated assault, it was not error to allow a witness to testify that defendant and two others who had participated in a failed attempt to rob a fast food store had made out-of-court statements to the witness while the four were together at a social event in which they each detailed their participation in the crime; defendant's own statements were not hearsay and defendant had adopted the statements of the other two by failing to challenge their truthfulness. Ellis v. State, 799 So. 2d 159 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A statement made by the defendant to an insurance agent in a murder prosecution in an attempt to obtain the proceeds of a life insurance policy he had taken out on the decedent was properly admitted against the defendant as an admission by a party-opponent. Conley v. State, 790 So. 2d 773 (Miss. 2001).

In an action by a police officer against an insurance company for actual and punitive damages arising out of the failure to pay a claim for theft, the trial court did not err in admitting an estimate of the cost of repairs as an adoptive admission where the insurance company solicited the estimate, incorporated it into their records, and used it in its conclusion that the claim should be paid as a total loss. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 722 So. 2d 637 (Miss. 1998).

— By agent.

Bar disciplinary tribunal did not err in allowing introduction of declarant's statements through hearsay testimony of other witnesses, where declarant had first been called as a witness and an agency relationship between attorney and declarant established. Emil v. Mississippi Bar, 690 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1997).

Injured patient should have been permitted to enter portions of nurse's deposition into evidence without calling nurse as a witness, even though nurse was available to be called as a witness, since nurse was an employee of defendant hospital and statements were admissible as admissions by a party-opponent. McMillan v. King, 557 So. 2d 519 (Miss. 1990).

— By coconspirators.

Testimony by two narcotics agents as to what they heard defendant and a coconspirator say during a drug transaction was admissible because this testimony was not hearsay but rather an admission by a party-opponent under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E); the testimony regarding what the coconspirator had said to one of the agents was also admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E) as a statement by a coconspirator of a party during the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy. Towner v. State, 837 So. 2d 221 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for robbery, the court properly allowed the introduction into evidence of a statement made at the time of the crime by a coperpetrator that identified the defendant by his first name, since the statement was made during the course and in furtherance of a conspiracy. Knickel v. State, 764 So. 2d 1247 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, a coconspirator was properly permitted to testify about a conversation between the defendant and another coconspirator that occurred in a car on the way to kidnap the victim since the testimony related to an admission by a party-opponent during the course and in furtherance of a conspiracy. Jones v. State, 776 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 2000).

The conspiracy that forms the basis for admitting coconspirators' statements need not be the same conspiracy for which a defendant is indicted; thus, where the defendant admitted that a conspiracy existed between all of the coconspirators named in the indictment, excluding himself, his omission in the admitted conspiracy did not necessarily preclude statements made under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Farris v. State, 764 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

The prosecution is entitled to offer evidence at trial of a plan and motive to establish the admissibility of Rule 801(d)(2)(E) statements by showing that a conspiracy preceded consummation of the principal offense. Farris v. State, 764 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Statements at issue occurred in the course of the conspiracy and in furtherance of the conspiracy with the defendant and, therefore, such statements were properly admitted into evidence pursuant to Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Farris v. State, 764 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

There is no need for the trial court to make a finding that a conspiracy existed before admitting testimony regarding statements made by co-conspirators. Sullivan v. State, 749 So. 2d 983 (Miss. 1999).

Once a conspiracy is established, statements of co-conspirators are admissible if made in the course of and in furtherance of conspiracy; however, statements made after objectives of conspiracy have either succeeded or failed are inadmissible. Nixon v. State, 533 So. 2d 1078 (Miss. 1987), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1102, 109 S. Ct. 2458, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (1989).

— By party.

Board of Review of the Mississippi Department of Employment Security did not err in denying the employee benefits where she repeatedly acted in disregard of company policy, Miss. Code Ann. § 71-5-513(A)(1)(c), and she was aware of the casino's policy that required her to radio another security officer if she needed to leave her post; under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2), the employee's own statements were not hearsay and supported the denial of her employment benefits. Austin v. Miss. Dep't of Empl. Sec., 976 So. 2d 969 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

There was no error in the trial court's allowing the testimony of two police officers as to what they overheard defendant saying on the telephone after defendant committed murder, as said statements were properly admitted as admissions by a party opponent, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). Poindexter v. State, 856 So. 2d 296 (Miss. 2003).

Defendant's testimony at a prior revocation hearing was a statement made by a party opponent and, thus, was admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) for impeachment purposes. Oby v. State, 827 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

State introduced handwritten receipts for $ 227.53 to the victim's children to challenge defendant's contention that she was taking good care of the victim's children when hundreds of thousands of dollars were at issue in an arson murder for insurance money where defendant had promised to take care of victim's children; therefore, the receipts were incriminating admissions of defendant that were admissible under the admission by a party-opponent rule, Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). Leedom v. State, 796 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. 2001).

In the prosecution of a felon in possession of firearms, it was reversible error for the court to allow a police officer to testify that he had found a handgun in a third party's purse and that she then stated that the gun belonged to the defendant, notwithstanding the contention that the defendant overheard this statement and did not object to its accuracy, where the evidence showed that the defendant, who was in custody at the time of the statement, was standing two feet away, but there was no evidence as to whether he stood mutely, objected vociferously, or did anything between these extremes. Gavin v. State, 785 So. 2d 1088 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Testimony by a witness in a murder prosecution regarding a conversation among herself, her boyfriend, and the defendant was not hearsay since the statements by the defendant constituted admissions and the statements and questions by the witness and her boyfriend were not asserted for truth. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Statements made by the defendant to witnesses with whom he was incarcerated regarding his stabbing of the victim constituted admissions, notwithstanding his assertion that such statements were not admissions since no other facts proved his guilt. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Letters written by the defendant in which he admitted killing a man were admissions within subsection (d)(2) and, therefore, were properly admitted into evidence in his murder prosecution. Burns v. State, 729 So. 2d 203 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1041, 119 S. Ct. 2406, 144 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1999).

A statement made by the defendant that he was surprised that he was not being arrested for murder when he was being arrested for burglary, was an admission, as the arresting officer had not even mentioned the murder before the defendant made the statement. Underwood v. State, 708 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 1998).

Statement made by candidate for office of Supervisor, to two members of the Democratic Executive Committee at canvass the day after election, was correctly classified as an admission against interest. Pegram v. Bailey, 708 So. 2d 1307 (Miss. 1997).

Circuit court correctly allowed police officer to describe defendant's reenactment of murder for the jury's benefit, since reenactment was an admission and the proper predicate had been laid. Jackson v. State, 551 So. 2d 132 (Miss. 1989).

— Harmless error.

Defendant's murder conviction was proper even though the circuit court erred under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) and Miss. R. Evid. 802 in allowing the prosecution to elicit improper hearsay testimony during a witness's testimony because the portion of the testimony that was not hearsay would still have been admissible and equally prejudicial to defendant's case; thus, the error was harmless at best. Bailey v. State, 956 So. 2d 1016 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of dextropropoxyphene, a schedule IV controlled substance was proper because her claim that the circuit court improperly admitted hearsay testimony during a deputy's testimony was without merit under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) since she experienced no prejudice from the testimony of which she complained. Smith v. State, 948 So. 2d 474 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a child custody modification case, the admission of a father's testimony, although hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), amounted to harmless error because there was other credible evidence upon which to base the custody determination; the mother testified regarding her lack of cooperation, and the mother refused to allow the father's new wife to pick up the child from day care and told the child she was changing her last name.

Giannaris v. Giannaris, 962 So. 2d 574 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by, remanded in part by 960 So. 2d 462, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 399 (Miss. 2007).

Most important of the hearsay issues concerned the witness's testimony about what defendant's secretary had told the witness. That error was harmless because the witness also testified that defendant, charged with wire fraud, also stated, in effect, "the check's in the mail"; there is no hearsay issue as to testimony recounting what a defendant himself has told a witness. Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A). McGee v. State, 853 So. 2d 125 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 852 So. 2d 577 (Ct. App. 2003).

In an action for breach of contract arising from the termination of the plaintiff's employment by the defendant, it was error for the court not to allow the introduction of evidence that the plaintiff's supervisor had told a witness that the employer was losing money because the owner was spending the employer's money for personal reasons, but the error was harmless in light of the bulk of evidence presented that established credible reasons for the plaintiff to be terminated. Baine v. River Oaks Convalescent Ctr., 791 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The court erred when it admitted the defendant's confession into evidence as an admission under subsection (d)(2), but excluded portions of her three previous statements to police in which she said "I didn't do it" as inadmissible hearsay; however, she failed to show that this error prejudiced the outcome of the trial and, therefore, the error was harmless. Swinney v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 45 (Miss. Mar. 1, 2001), opinion withdrawn by 2002 Miss. LEXIS 360 (Miss. Oct. 31, 2002).

Although two questions asked by the state in a murder prosecution elicited answers that were hearsay, such error was harmless and did not prejudice the defendant. Tanner v. State, 764 So. 2d 385 (Miss. 2000).

Excited utterances.

During defendant's trial for capital murder arising from the death of his girlfriend's son, the trial court did not err by admitting the daughter's hearsay statement to her mother that defendant beat the victim with a stick until the child stopped moving; while the statement was made two hours after the incident, the child spent the great majority of the time following the incident in the presence of the perpetrator and appeared to still be under great stress when she made the statement. The statement qualified as an excited utterance under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2). Eubanks v. State, 28 So. 3d 607 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 83 (Miss. 2010).

In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault, an officer's testimony as to the victim's statement at the crime scene that defendant was a shooter was hearsay. However, the excited utterance exception applied; the victim was still under the stress of the situation when he made the statement. Bankston v. State, 907 So. 2d 966 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Shortly after defendant's arrest, and while he was sitting in the back of the patrol car, defendant was heard by one of the investigating officers to loudly remark something to the effect that defendant had shot the (expletive), and would shoot the victim again. It was certainly not reversible error to let the jury know of defendant's spontaneous statements, and defendant's alleged intoxication bore only on the probative value of the evidence. Moore v. State, 837 So. 2d 794 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Statement.

Defendant's manslaughter conviction was proper because a witness's testimony that the victim had cursed the witness's father and that the victim had a bad temper and was overbearing was correctly deemed not admissible. The hearsay testimony was not only too remote in time to be admissible, it was also irrelevant, and its probative value was outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Booker v. State, 64 So. 3d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 64 So. 3d 965, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 316 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because the trial judge correctly refused to allow a witness to testify in further detail about a conversation the two purportedly had in the past due to hearsay concerns, Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in limiting the extent of testimony because defendant had laid the predicate for impeachment and had asked the question that would impeach the witness. Whittington v. State, 49 So. 3d 107 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 636 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because statements were submitted to show the actions that the chief took during the investigation and were therefore not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). Whittington v. State, 49 So. 3d 107 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 636 (Miss. 2010).

Statements that witness overheard a victim make while the witness was on the phone with the victim were properly admitted as they established the victim's state of mind communicated as she experienced the events leading up to a collision. In addition, testimony for an eyewitness regarding the victim being fearful of defendant was not hearsay as the witness never testified regarding what the victim actually told her. Nichols v. State, 27 So. 3d 433 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 70 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 97, 178 L. Ed. 2d 61, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 5836, 79 U.S.L.W. 3197 (U.S. 2010).

— Against interest.

Any statements made by defendant to the deputy that were not offered or introduced into evidence by the state would serve defendant's argument at trial — that his actions of breaking into the house were justified by necessity. Therefore, the statements were self-serving and were properly excluded by the trial judge as inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(A). Flowers v. State, 51 So. 3d 963 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 51 So. 3d 911, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 584 (Miss. 2010).

In a negligence case, a prior consistent statement should not have been introduced under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B) because it was made when there was a motive to fabricate, even if it was characterized as work product; a driver made a statement to his insurance company regarding oncoming traffic a few days after striking a pedestrian. Alexander v. Greer, 959 So. 2d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated domestic violence against his girlfriend was appropriate because his mother's proffered testimony regarding the victim's recollection was consistent with the victim's testimony, and as such defendant's mother's testimony could not have been admissible as prior inconsistent testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1) and Miss. R. Evid. 613(b). Fugate v. State, 951 So. 2d 604 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a case in which defendant and two accomplices had taken four school buses for the purpose of playing demolition derby, the trial court properly allowed a prior statement made by one of the accomplices into evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(b) in order to rebut defense counsel's implied charge of fabrication. Hendrix v. State, 957 So. 2d 1023 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Victim testified at the trial, and defendant had the opportunity to extensively cross-examine him, and therefore his right to confront witnesses against him under the Sixth Amendment was not violated; the videotape of the victim's statement to the police was not offered as direct evidence, but was offered as a prior consistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B) to refute defense counsel's implication that the tape had been fabricated, and the witness testified and was cross-examined. Mingo v. State, 944 So. 2d 18 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's armed robbery conviction was proper where admitted hearsay evidence was not in error because the same information was obtained from another witness and was properly admitted as a statement against interest pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). Brown v. State, 868 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 868 So. 2d 345 (Miss. 2004).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a detective's testimony about the credit card usage reports, since the testimony was offered for the purpose of establishing the steps that the police took during their investigation and not the content of the credit card report. Smith v. State, 984 So. 2d 295 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a wrongful death action, portions of a journal could not have been introduced to rebut an inference of recent fabrication because there was no testimony at trial to rebut; because the trial court did not distinguish between statements made by testifying family members and non-testifying family members, it was error to find that journal entries made by non-testifying family members were not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801. Mariner Health Care, Inc. v. Estate of Edwards, 964 So. 2d 1138 (Miss. 2007).

There is no statutory provision mandating that Mississippi's justice courts obtain and record individuals' address information as either an activity of the justice court or as to matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report; therefore, a computer printout of a justice court record containing defendant's address would not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8), and would be inadmissible hearsay. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a child support case, medical evidence presented by a father to show that he was unable to work due to a injuries suffered in a childhood accident was not accepted by a chancery court because it constituted hearsay; a third document was not accepted because there was no testimony of a custodian under Miss. R. Civ. 803(6), and the document was not self-authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 902(11), Davison v. Miss. Dep't of Human Servs., 938 So. 2d 912 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Victim, the first declarant, was available for cross-examination and also made an in-court identification of defendant as the individual who stole his truck; the second declarant, the police officer, testified at trial and was also available for and subject to cross-examination; therefore, the statements regarding the victim's identification were not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(C). Mixon v. State, 921 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 2005).

— Consistent.

In defendant's statutory rape case, statements in a note written by the victim to a friend were not hearsay because the State brought out that the victim had recanted the sex allegations in a conversation with the defense investigator, then the State questioned the victim about the contents of the note. The note contained her statements prior to the recantation that were consistent with her trial testimony and tended to rebut the notion that she fabricated the allegations for trial. Woods v. State, 973 So. 2d 1022 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In defendant's statutory rape case, the trial court correctly excluded a witness's taped statement as hearsay because the purpose of introduction of the witness's prior consistent statement was solely to bolster the credibility of the witness's trial testimony. Woods v. State, 973 So. 2d 1022 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, because the trial judge had previously heard argument, outside the presence of the jury, on the reliability of the child victim's statements, which described sexual contact with defendant father and the victim had previously testified regarding the statement, although perhaps cumulative, allowing defendant father's other son to testify to the victim's statement was not erroneous under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) and 801(d)(1)(B), especially since the son had solicited the statement from the victim, and defense attorneys had attacked the victim's credibility; thus, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) was not violated. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Witness's testimony about a defendant's accomplice's statement implicating defendant in a murder was admissible as a prior consistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(b), as the accomplice's trial testimony was "all over the page": he testified that he committed the crime alone, but he also admitted making the statement and that it was true, and he often claimed he could not remember what happened on the night of the murder. Wells v. State, 849 So. 2d 1231 (Miss. 2003).

In the murder prosecution arising from the death of a young child, an out-of-court statement by the mother was properly introduced into evidence as nonhearsay as the testimony she gave on direct examination was wholly consistent with the statement in question and was offered by the state to refute an expressed or implied claim of recent fabrication. Conley v. State, 790 So. 2d 773 (Miss. 2001).

Where defense counsel questioned a witness regarding her first statement to the police and elicited information that was inconsistent with her trial testimony, the state was entitled to question the witness on redirect with regard to her second statement to the police in order to rebut the defendant's implied charge of recent fabrication. Jackson v. State, 766 So. 2d 795 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where a witness to a murder initially indicated a lack of any knowledge of the assailant, apparently out of fear for her safety, but was then taken to police headquarters and gave a formal statement in which she claimed to be able to identify the defendant as the shooter and also testified at trial that the defendant was the shooter, evidence of her statement implicating the defendant was admissible to refute an inference of recent fabrication of the version of the facts she gave at trial. Brown v. State, 764 So. 2d 463 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder and aggravated assault arising from the stabbing death of one victim and stabbing of her four year child, in which the defense contended that the child had been prompted by family members and investigating officers, either directly or by improperly suggestive questioning, to identify the defendant as the assailant, statements by the child to his grandmother, which was made immediately after she found him bleeding and in shock, and to the treating physician at the emergency room, in which the child identified the defendant as the assailant, were properly introduced into evidence in order to refute the defense contention. Barnett v. State, 757 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

When a witness testified that he made an agreement with the state to plead guilty to accessory after the fact, he gave evidence of a prior consistent statement within the definition of subsection (d)(1)(B). Clemons v. State, 732 So. 2d 883 (Miss. 1999).

— Conversation.

Trial court did not err in sustaining the state's hearsay objection to an exchange between defense counsel and a narcotics agent during defendant's trial for the sale of cocaine where testimony was solicited from the agent concerning a statement made by a paid informant; the testimony was offered to prove that the informant had his back turned at the time of the drug transaction. Sturkey v. State, 946 So. 2d 790 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied, writ of certiorari denied by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 65 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 918, 128 S. Ct. 276, 169 L. Ed. 2d 201, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 10167, 76 U.S.L.W. 3165 (2007).

In a prosecution for uttering forgery, the store clerk's testimony that the defendant's cousin had expressed suspicion with regard to the validity of defendant's check was admissable to explain the clerk's actions in response to this information. Arnold v. State, 739 So. 2d 422 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

A witness' testimony that she had heard a conversation between defendant, defendant's sister and an unknown individual discuss the selling of drugs was inadmissible as the speaker could not be identified and the evidence could not be used merely to show the defendant's association with others who openly discuss their drug-dealing plans. Martin v. State, 726 So. 2d 1210 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

— Conduct.

Testimony of mother in paternity action concerning affection shown child by defendant's family amounted to inadmissible hearsay, since it was no more than a non-verbal assertion showing family's belief in paternity of child. Thornton v. Shows, 537 So. 2d 1363 (Miss. 1989).

— Court proceedings.

Prior statements made by the victim were admissible when, in his trial for armed robbery, defendant opened the door by accusing the victim of lying. Morgan v. State, 818 So. 2d 1163 (Miss. 2002).

The co-defendant's testimony at his plea hearing and sentencing hearing was admissible since such testimony was given under oath, subject to penalty of perjury, and subject to cross-examination both at the hearings and at the defendant's trial. Gleeton v. State, 716 So. 2d 1083 (Miss. 1998).

— Inconsistent.

It was reversible error for the trial court to allow a prior inconsistent, unsworn statement by a witness to be considered by the jury as substantive evidence; the witness had told police officers that the victim's vehicle door had been closed before he was shot by defendant, but at trial the witness testified that the victim's vehicle door had been ajar at the time of the shooting; because the witness's statement did not meet the criteria of Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(A) and did not fall within an exception to the general prohibition against hearsay, it should not have been admitted into evidence for substantive purposes. Bailey v. State, 952 So. 2d 225 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 166 (Miss. Mar. 1, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 167 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the State to use the testimony of a defense witness in defendant's trial for armed robbery and taking a motor vehicle, given in a related federal case, to impeach the witness; probative value of the witness's statements outweighed the prejudice to defendant. Edwards v. State, 838 So. 2d 990 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003).

The defendant was not allowed to introduce into evidence an allegedly prior inconsistent statement of a prosecution witness that was given to police two days after the shooting at issue since (1) the defendant failed to prove that the first statement was inconsistent with the trial testimony and, in fact, did not even inform the court which statements he considered to be contradictory, and (2) the defendant failed to establish that the prior statement was given under oath. Ratcliff v. State, 752 So. 2d 435 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Trial court's exclusion of statement as hearsay was error, because it was a prior inconsistent statement that was not being offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted; rather, statement was being offered as circumstantial evidence from which jury could infer that trial testimony of declarant was unreliable. Hall v. State, 691 So. 2d 415 (Miss. 1997).

— Identification.

A shooting victim's prior inconsistent statement to police, which unequivocally identified the shooter, but which the victim contradicted on the witness stand, was admissible as substantive evidence of the defendant's guilt under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c)(1)(C). Smith v. State, 25 So. 3d 264 (Miss. 2009).

Police officer's testimony that he showed a photographic lineup to two witnesses and that both witnesses identified defendant as the shooter was not hearsay because both witnesses testified at trial and were subject to cross-examination regarding the identification procedure. Jordan v. State, 995 So. 2d 94 (Miss. 2008).

A police officer's testimony regarding a photo-lineup identification by a witness was properly allowed, notwithstanding that there was no subsequent in-court identification or photo-lineup identification by the witness, where the witness testified on direct that he made a photo-lineup identification of the defendant and was subject to cross-examination. Williams v. State, 759 So. 2d 509 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

— Recorded.

In a child custody case, the trial court properly excluded an answering machine tape containing a message from tending to show that the mother was considered to be mentally unstable. The trial court correctly found that the tape was inadmissible hearsay. Balius v. Gaines, 908 So. 2d 791 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 495 (Miss. 2005).

Personal observation.

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the trial court did not err in not excluding the testimony of the decedent's friend concerning the decedent's alleged making, using, or selling methamphetamine before the accident since the testimony regarding methamphetamine was relevant and concerned the type of activity that the decedent was involved in prior to the accident and what impact that activity might have had on the decedent's alertness at the time of the accident. The testimony was not hearsay because it was the personal observation and knowledge of the witness. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Rebuttal of implication raised by opponent.

Under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B), an officer's testimony as to what the widow told him was admissible and not hearsay because it served to rebut the implication raised by defendant that the widow's testimony was shaped by her unhappiness with the cost of the work or by her son's reaction to the incident. Cooper v. State, 68 So. 3d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 69 So. 3d 9, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 404 (Miss. 2011).

— Reports.

Because a laboratory report was admitted without a sponsoring witness, it was hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), and the admission of the report violated defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation because defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine the conclusions of the laboratory; however, the court concluded that the admission was harmless error because the proper admission of the initial test contained the same evidence, and the testimony of certain witnesses about the initial test was sufficient to support the jury's verdict against defendant. Jones v. State, 881 So. 2d 209 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

It was error to permit the introduction of an officer's written version of the defendant's statement into evidence as an exhibit since it was never adopted by the defendant; the proper method of introducing the defendant's oral confession, in the absence of an actual recording in some form, would have been for the officer to relate from the stand those things that the defendant told him during the interrogation. Cobb v. State, 734 So. 2d 182 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Testimony by police officers concerning radio dispatches is not hearsay and thus is admissible for the purpose of explaining the officer's actions. Parker v. State, 724 So. 2d 482 (Ct. App. 1998).

Written FBI profile was properly excluded as inadmissible hearsay, where FBI agent who prepared report was not present to testify, and profile was offered into evidence to prove truth of the matter asserted. Alexander v. State, 610 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 1992).

Statement of co-conspirator.

Male suspect's testimony about shoplifting plan related to acts and conduct that occurred during the course and in furtherance of a conspiracy at a time when the defendant, based upon the evidence and reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence, could be deemed to be a co-conspirator, and was thus not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(a)(1) or (2). Wilson v. State, 967 So. 2d 32 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's attempted admission of a third party's testimony at trial, which was prohibited by the trial court, would have been hearsay because what defendant was attempting to admit was the third party's response to defendant's question, not what defendant had said; moreover, the testimony as to what the third party said when the men were arrested for drug possession would not have benefitted defendant. Randolph v. State, 973 So. 2d 254 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a capital murder case, a witness testified that approximately one week prior to the robbery and murder of the victim at the convenience store,the witness overheard defendant, a co-conspirator, and an unidentified individual planning the robbery; accordingly, the preliminary fact of conspiracy was established, and any statements made by the co-conspirator in furtherance of the conspiracy could be offered against defendant as non-hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). Johnson v. State, 956 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a capital murder case, statements made in an attempt to conceal evidence of a consummated crime were undoubtedly statements made in furtherance of the conspiracy; thus, the testimony of a witness that either defendant or the co-con-spirator asked her to throw away bloody clothes was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). Johnson v. State, 956 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

To be considered non-hearsay, Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E) merely requires the statement to be made by a co-conspirator, not to a co-conspirator, but nowhere does the rule state that the person giving testimony must have been part of the conspiracy; nor is the person to whom the statement is made required to be a co-conspirator in order for the statement to be non-hearsay. Johnson v. State, 956 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Testimony of a co-conspirator involving alleged statements made by another party in furtherance of the conspiracy were admissible and not considered to be hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). Grayson v. State, 850 So. 2d 196 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Truth of matter asserted.

Proposed testimony of defendant's mother would have been admissable to impeach the victim's earlier denial of bias against defendant; because the significance of the victim's alleged statement was simply that it was made and there was no issue about the truth of the matter asserted, the statement was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). Banks v. State, 45 So. 3d 676 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Finding in favor of a trucking company and truck driver in a wrongful-death action brought by the decedent's widow was proper because the documents at issue, by the widow's own explanation, were hearsay since they would have been used to prove the truth of the matter asserted, which was what constituted reflective tape, why it was used, its cost, and its effects in connection with accidents. Notwithstanding that, the widow was not prejudiced by the exclusion of the documents. Utz v. Running & Rolling Trucking, Inc., 32 So. 3d 450 (Miss. 2010).

Videotaped statements containing potentially prejudicial statements by law enforcement officer were not improperly admitted, as they were not being admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, that appellant planned and committed the murder of her parents, but rather, to demonstrate that appellant's statements were inconsistent as to the events of the day of the murder, and to elicit further information from appellant about the events of that day. Blakeney v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 887 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 8, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 978 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 8, 2009).

Statement made by a detective concerning what doctors told him was hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), but defendant failed to show how counsel's failure to object prejudiced his defense. German v. State, 30 So. 3d 348 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 142 (Miss. 2010).

Testimony of the mother of a five-year-old victim was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) because the statement was not offered to prove that the victim was sexually assaulted but for the limited purpose to relate why the mother took the victim to the hospital. Murray v. State, 20 So. 3d 739 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 64 (Miss. 2010).

Neighbor's hearsay testimony did not violate defendant's Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const. Amend. VI, right, because only testimonial hearsay was capable of violating the Sixth Amendment; the victim's child's statements to the neighbor were not made for any prosecutorial purpose and was nontestimonial, and the investigator's testimony was responsive to questions from the State as to why he contacted the Department of Human Services to pick up the children from the scene. Neal v. State, 15 So. 3d 388 (Miss. 2009).

Testimony of a police lieutenant was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) because it was not offered to prove that defendant sold drugs to a special agent; rather, the testimony was offered to corroborate the agent's testimony that the agent had entered a particular house in order to conduct a drug buy. Newberry v. State, 19 So. 3d 752 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 509 (Miss. 2009).

During defendant's trial for possession of cocaine, the court did not err in denying defendant's motion in limine and overruling defendant's objections to an officer's testimony regarding information obtained from an unidentified tipster because the officer's statement was admissible to show why the officers noticed defendant and acted the way that they did. The statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted to implicate defendant in a drug sale, and was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). Jenkins v. State, 993 So. 2d 862 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Police officer's testimony referencing the store manager's comments that defendant was shoplifting was not hearsay and was properly admitted where defendant was not charged with shoplifting and the testimony complained of was not used to prove the truth of whether or not defendant shoplifted; defendant was charged with feloniously eluding a law enforcement in a motor vehicle and the purpose of the testimony was to show why the officer followed defendant into the parking lot where she fled from him. Watson v. State, 8 So. 3d 901 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 217 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err when it allowed a sergeant to testify about the statements given to him by the victims during the course of his investigation because the statements were not admitted for the purpose of proving the truth of the matter asserted and thus, not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). The statements were admitted to explain the next step in the sergeant's investigation, which was to develop a photographic lineup that included defendant's picture. Anderson v. State, 1 So. 3d 905 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 15 (Miss. 2009).

An officer's testimony that a murder victim tried to make a stalking complaint against defendant was not hearsay because it was not offered to prove that defendant was in fact stalking the victim; rather, it was offered to prove that defendant was on notice that the victim was trying to make a police complaint against him. Young v. State, 987 So. 2d 1074 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In defendant's criminal case, the statement sought from an investigator that the victim's wife was a possible suspect in the victim's murder was hearsay since, when asked by the trial court to state another purpose for eliciting the statement from the investigator, defense counsel could state none. Thus, the attempt to introduce it was to prove the truth of the matter asserted and the admission of the statement was barred. Vickers v. State, 994 So. 2d 200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 675 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court excluded testimony from witnesses that were not disclosed by defendant, but the trial court did this without performing the three-part test of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 9.04(I); however, this error was harmless as to certain witnesses because had they been allowed to testify, the substance of such would have amounted to impermissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), 802, as the witness's intended testimonies would have provided a statement made by another in an attempt to prove the truth of the matter asserted and this hearsay did not fall into any exception. Davis v. State, 995 So. 2d 767 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 678 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of a controlled substance was appropriate, in part pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) because an audiotape of telephone conversations between a confidential informant and unknown persons was not offered for any purpose other than to corroborate the witnesses' testimony for the State that pre-buy conversations occurred between a confidential informant and unknown persons. Thus, its introduction into evidence was appropriate. Brown v. State, 969 So. 2d 855 (Miss. 2007).

Circuit court did not err by admitting an investigator's statement that he had contacted the mother, who told him that the victim had been molested, and therefore defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied, because the investigator's statement was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801, as he was merely recounting the facts of his investigation and was not offering the testimony as truth of the matter asserted. Foxworth v. State, 982 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So.

Trial court did not erroneously admit hearsay testimony from defendant's wife where her testimony, which included a statement that when she went to the police department to obtain a restraining order, she was told to wait until the next day, was not offered by the State to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but to show why the wife did not get a restraining order on the day in question. Hence, the statement was not hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). Harris v. State, 970 So. 2d 151 (Miss. 2007).

Videotaped testimony of forensic interviewer and victim was hearsay, but based on the fact that law enforcement was intimately involved in obtaining the interview and was present at the interview, the videotaped interview was testimonial in nature; defendant was not unduly prejudiced because he cross-examined the victim later during the trial and even called her during his case-in-chief, and he had the opportunity to question her about her statements on the videotape and in general. Williams v. State, 970 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Narcotics officer's testimony that he had received complaints concerning defendant's possible manufacture of methamphetamine was not hearsay because the agent was simply offering an explanation as to his actions in an investigation. Myhand v. State, 981 So. 2d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 225 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant proposed that an officer's remarks were inadmissible hearsay as there was no proof presented as to the unavailability of a lieutenant, but the officer's remarks were not hearsay because: (1) the officer's statement in question was not offered to prove the matter asserted as the officer did not offer his statement to prove that the lieutenant called him or even that a cooperating source called the lieutenant, but rather it was offered to show how he came in contact with the informant; and (2) if the officer's statement did qualify as hearsay it would still be admissible to the extent required to show why he acted as he did and where he was at a particular place at a particular time. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's reason to admit that the victim made a statement that he was going to get defendant, as stated in defendant's brief, was in fact being offered for the truth of the matter asserted; therefore, under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), the statement was hearsay and properly excluded. Chandler v. State, 946 So. 2d 355 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) where the victim's testimony was made in order to provide the details of the victim's telephone conversation with the victim's mother; as such, the victim's testimony as to what defendant's mother stated regarding surveyors amounted to hearsay. Gates v. State, 936 So. 2d 335 (Miss. 2006).

In a criminal trial for murder, the court did not err by excluding an out of court statement indicating that the defendant was being beaten at the time of the murder. The jury would have believed the truth of the statement; therefore, the statement was hearsay. Amos v. State, 911 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendants' conspiracy convictions were proper where the warden's testimony involving a letter sent to one of the defendants was appropriate because the significance of the letter was simply that a statement had been made about a criminal act and there was no issue regarding the truth of that asserted matter in the trial court, Miss. R. Evid. 801(c). Thus, the statement was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Farris v. State, 906 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Witness's testimony that he finally came forward about a crime because defendant's brother told him to do so was not hearsay as it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but to explain why the witness had actually come forward. Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

Where defendant was prosecuted after a controlled drug buy involving an informant and other officers, defendant was not prejudiced as the result of the admission of one officer's statement on the audiotape where that officer did not testify at trial. Defendant was able to cross-examine each and every witness the State offered, and there was no violation of defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination; further, the statement itself was not the incriminating evidence, it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it qualified as a present sense impression, and it was not inadmissible hearsay. Burton v. State, 875 So. 2d 1120 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Statements contained within the proffered reports regarding similar accidents were not being offered for the truth of the matter asserted therein, and the decedent's parent made no argument that the contents of the reports were truthful. They were offered to show the automobile manufacturer was aware that reports of prior similar incidents had been made, thus, the reports were not hearsay to which the exclusionary rules would have applied. Noah v. GMC, 882 So. 2d 235 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 882 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's confrontation rights are not violated when a police officer testifies about the statement of a confidential informant if the informant is available for cross-examination; moreover, an officer's testimony regarding an informant's statement that defendant sold drugs was not hearsay because it was merely offered to show the reason behind the officer's actions, and it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Stubbs v. State, 878 So. 2d 130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Officer's hearsay testimony that paid informants told the officer that they could buy and had bought crack cocaine from defendant was admissible to the extent necessary to show why the officer had acted as he had while using the informants to conduct a controlled buy of cocaine by the informants from defendant. Tate v. State, 2002 Miss. App. LEXIS 296 (Miss. Ct. App. May 21, 2002).

Testimony in a murder prosecution by a third party regarding a conversation among the defendant and two others about the fact that the victim had some money on him and a plan to get that money was not hearsay as the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter, that the victim actually had money on him, but was offered to prove that it was said and to explain subsequent actions. Fair v. State, 766 So. 2d 787 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, it was not hearsay for the victim's mother to testify that a coperpetrator knocked on her door and told her that her son would be killed if she did not come up with money he owed and that she ran out to the car in which he was sitting and begged for her son's life, explaining she saw her son being hit on the head in the back seat, since the testimony was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but rather was offered to show what was said and the surrounding circumstances. Jones v. State, 776 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, it was not hearsay for the victim's sister to testify that she heard her brother ask his mother to give up the keys to her car since the testimony was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but rather was offered for the fact it was said. Jones v. State, 776 So. 2d 643 (Miss. 2000).

A statement by a police officer, that he called directory assistance to determine whether there was a listing for a business that the defendant claimed to own with another person and that he was informed that there was no such listing, was admitted for truth and was, therefore, hearsay, notwithstanding the state's contention that it was only offered for the fact that it was said, since there was no relevance to what a directory assistance operator told the officer other than the fact that there was no listing. Harrison v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 44 (Miss. Ct. App. Feb. 8, 2000), affirmed by 800 So. 2d 1134, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 223 (Miss. 2001).

In a prosecution for burglary of a business, testimony by a witness that a bystander told her that he was leaving to get the police was not hearsay as it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted by the bystander, i.e., his intent to summon law enforcement authorities. Sanders v. State, 755 So. 2d 1256 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Testimony by a witness in a murder prosecution regarding a conversation among herself, her boyfriend, and the defendant was not hearsay since the statements by the defendant constituted admissions and the statements and questions by the witness and her boyfriend were not asserted for truth. Alexander v. State, 759 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

Sheriff's testimony that he went to a house after being informed that either defendant or his brother was in possession of a firearm similar to the one used in the murder was inadmissible since possession of the murder weapon was at issue. Clemons v. State, 732 So. 2d 883 (Miss. 1999).

The murder defendant should have been allowed to introduce evidence that his unapprehended coperpetrator told him that he and the victim had had a fight and that he wanted to meet the victim to talk it out since such statement was not offered to prove the truth of the coperpetrator's statement, but instead was offered to show the defendant's purpose in going to the victim's home. Kha Tao Pham v. State, 716 So. 2d 1100 (Miss. 1998).

Out-of-court statement contained in witness' recollection of his office manager's explanation to him about notation on plaintiff's medical history was not hearsay, since it was not offered in evidence to prove truth of the matter asserted, but was merely put in evidence by witness as an explanation for presence of notation on the document. Moody v. RPM Pizza, Inc., 659 So. 2d 877 (Miss. 1995).

Statements of former insureds, that they thought agency was going out of business and that they blamed agency for their policy cancellations, were not hearsay since they were offered to prove that such statements were made by agency's clients in response to cancellation notices sent them by defendant insurance carrier. Eselin-Bullock & Assocs. Ins. Agency, Inc. v. National Gen. Ins. Co., 604 So. 2d 236 (Miss. 1992).

Statement was properly admitted where it was offered not to prove that someone had killed one victim and attempted to kill a second, but to explain circumstances surrounding surviving victim's call to her minister and minister's call to authorities, as well as minister's presence at victim's home. Shell v. State, 554 So. 2d 887 (Miss. 1989).

Police officer's testimony referencing the store manager's comments that defendant was shoplifting was not hearsay and was properly admitted where defendant was not charged with shoplifting and the testimony complained of was not used to prove the truth of whether or not defendant shoplifted; defendant was charged with feloniously eluding a law enforcement in a motor vehicle and the purpose of the testimony was to show why the officer followed defendant into the parking lot where she fled from him. Watson v. State, 8 So. 3d 901 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 217 (Miss. 2009).

It was not hearsay for a detective to testify that he learned of two people who had been in the victim's home or that he learned their names. Bailey v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 508 (Miss. Ct. App. June 27, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 956 So. 2d 1016, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

The legislature did not have authority to confer legal validity upon the portion of the Evidence of Child Sexual Abuse Act which enlarged the power of courts to hear hearsay evidence. Hall v. State, 539 So. 2d 1338 (Miss. 1989).

Examples.

Defendant's manslaughter conviction was proper because a witness's testimony that the victim had cursed the witness's father and that the victim had a bad temper and was overbearing was correctly deemed not admissible. The hearsay testimony was not only too remote in time to be admissible, it was also irrelevant, and its probative value was outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Booker v. State, 64 So. 3d 988 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 64 So. 3d 965, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 316 (Miss. 2011).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 517 (Miss. 2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in prohibiting cross-examination regarding a victim's statement to the police about defendant's other possible sexual encounters with other teenage girls because it was within the circuit court's discretion to find that the victim had insufficient personal knowledge about the other encounters and that her statement was too speculative to be deemed relevant for impeachment as a prior inconsistent statement under Miss. R. Evid. 613(b); furthermore, what the victim could have been told by another teenage girl was inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801 and 802. Timmons v. State, 44 So. 3d 1021 (Miss. Ct. Car dealership's former business manager's affidavit did not present a meritorious defense to the default judgment since the cancellation worksheet was inadmissible hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 802; the manager failed to qualify the cancellation worksheet as an exception to the hearsay rule pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), or authenticate the worksheet pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902; and because the dealership failed to assert a meritorious defense, its motion to set aside default judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(6) was properly denied. Greater Canton Ford Mercury, Inc. v. Lane, 997 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court excluded testimony from witnesses that were not disclosed by defendant, but the trial court did this without performing the three-part test of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 9.04(I); however, this error was harmless as to certain witnesses because had they been allowed to testify, the substance of such would have amounted to impermissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), 802, as the witness's intended testimonies would have provided a statement made by another in an attempt to prove the truth of the matter asserted and this hearsay did not fall into any exception. Davis v. State, 995 So. 2d 767 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d-374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 678 (Miss. 2008).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial after he had been convicted of aggravated assault and rape was appropriate because each of the prerequisites of Miss. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B) were satisfied so as to remove the witnesses' statements from the category of impermissible hearsay as the victim had already testified that defendant raped her, her testimony was subject to cross-examination, and each of the witnesses confirmed that the victim told them that she was raped; the statements refuted the defense of consensual sex. Moss v. State, 977 So. 2d 1201 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court correctly refused to allow hearsay testimony from an officer regarding what the inmates told him that the accessory-after-the-fact said about the murder; if defendant wanted to inquire about those alleged statements, he should have called the inmates themselves to testify. Bailey v. State, 960 So. 2d 583 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant proposed that an officer's remarks were inadmissible hearsay as there was no proof presented as to the unavailability of a lieutenant, but the officer's remarks were not hearsay because: (1) the officer's statement in question was not offered to prove the matter asserted as the officer did not offer his statement to prove that the lieutenant called him or even that a cooperating source called the lieutenant, but rather it was offered to show how he came in contact with the informant; and (2) if the officer's statement did qualify as hearsay it would still be admissible to the extent required to show why he acted as he did and where he was at a particular place at a particular time. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

There is no statutory provision mandating that Mississippi's justice courts obtain and record individuals' address information as either an activity of the justice court or as to matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report; therefore, a computer printout of a justice court record containing defendant's address would not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8), and would be inadmissible hearsay. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a criminal trial for murder, the court did not err by excluding an out of court statement indicating that the defendant was being beaten at the time of the murder. The jury would have believed the truth of the statement; therefore, the statement was hearsay. Amos v. State, 911 So. 2d 644 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Videotaped testimony of forensic interviewer and victim was hearsay, but based on the fact that law enforcement was intimately involved in obtaining the interview and was present at the interview, the videotaped interview was testimonial in nature; defendant was not unduly prejudiced because he cross-examined the victim later during the trial and even called her during his case-in-chief, and he had the opportunity to question her about her statements on the videotape and in general. Williams v. State, 970 So. 2d 727 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's murder conviction was proper even though the circuit court erred under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) and Miss. R. Evid. 802 in allowing the prosecution to elicit improper hearsay testimony during a witness's testimony because the portion of the testimony that was not hearsay would still have been admissible and equally prejudicial to defendant's case; thus, the error was harmless at best. Bailey v. State, 956 So. 2d 1016 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 301 (Miss. 2007).

While the trial court erred in allowing a store clerk's hearsay testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 802 regarding another person telling her defendant's name, it was harmless because the only testimony of that witness that was prejudicial to defendant was all admissible in that the prejudicial feature of the witness's testimony was that she identified defendant, even if she did not know him by name, and she noticed the vehicle that he drove, even if she did not know it to be the victim's. Bailey v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 508 (Miss. Ct. App. June 27, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 956 So. 2d 1016, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for depraved heart murder was proper where an improperly admitted hearsay statement in which the victim said that defendant was going to hit him and take his money was harmless error because the properly admitted evidence was more than sufficient to support the jury's verdict, Miss. R. Evid. 801(c), 802. Edwards v. State, 856 So. 2d 587 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. dismissed, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

Purpose.

Trial court did not err in revoking an inmate's probation based on hearsay testimony regarding charges that were later dismissed, as the Mississippi Rules of Evidence, including the hearsay rule, did not apply to probation revocation hearings. Forshee v. State, 853 So. 2d 136 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The hearsay rule and its exceptions effect a delicate balance between twin towering goals of the trial process: truth and fairness; triers of fact should have all evidence that will aid them in the search for truth, and at the same time, every citizen brought before the bar of justice should have every fair opportunity to test the worth of that evidence. Hall v. State, 539 So. 2d 1338 (Miss. 1989).

Rule 803. Hearsay exceptions; availability of declarant immaterial.

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:

(1) Present sense impression. A statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition or immediately thereafter.

(2) Excited utterance. A statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition.

(3) Then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will.

(4) Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment, regardless of to whom the statements are made, or when the statements are made, if the court, in its discretion, affirmatively finds that the proffered statements were made under circumstances substantially indicating their trust worthiness. For purposes of this rule, the term "medical" refers to emotional and mental health as well as physical health.

(5) Recorded recollection. A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party.

(6) Records of regularly conducted activity. A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnosis, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness or self-authenticated pursuant to Rule 902(11), unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term "business" as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit.

(7) Absence of entry in records kept in accordance with the provision of paragraph (6). Evidence that a matter is not included in the memoranda, reports, records, or data compilations, in any form, kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6), to prove the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of the matter, if the matter was of a kind of which a memorandum, report, record, or data compilation was regularly made and preserved, unless the source of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(8) Public records and reports. Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies, setting forth (A) the activities of the office or agency, or (B) matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report, excluding, however, in criminal cases matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel, or (C) in civil actions and proceedings and against the state in criminal cases, factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(9) Records of vital statistics. Records or data compilations of vital statistics, in any form, if the report thereof was made to a public officer pursuant to requirements of law.

(10) Absence of public record or entry. To prove the absence of a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, or the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of a matter of which a record, report, statement or data compilation, in any form, was regularly made and preserved by a public office or agency, evidence in the form of a certification in accordance with Rule 902, or testimony, that diligent search failed to disclose the record, report, statement, or data compilation, or entry.

(11) Records of religious organizations. Statements of births, marriages, divorces, deaths, legitimacy, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar facts of personal or family history, contained in a regularly kept record of a religious organization.

(12) Marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates. Statements of fact contained in a certificate that the maker performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament, made by a clergyman, public official, or other person authorized by the rules or practices of a religious organization or by law to perform the act certified, and purporting to have been issued at the time of the act or within a reasonable time thereafter.

(13) Family records. Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles, genealogies, charts, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones or the like.

(14) Records of documents affecting an interest in property. The record of a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property, as proof of the content of the original recorded document and its execution and delivery by each person by whom it purports to have been executed, if the record is a record of a public office and an applicable statute authorizes the recording of documents of that kind in that office.

(15) Statements in documents affecting an interest in property. A statement contained in a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property if the matter stated was relevant to the purpose of the document, unless dealings with the property since the document was made have been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the document.

(16) Statements in ancient documents. Statements in a document in existence twenty years or more, the authenticity of which is established.

(17) Market reports, commercial publications. Market quotations, tabulations, lists, directories, or other published compilations, generally used and relied upon by the public or by persons in particular occupations.

(18) Learned treatises. To the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by him in direct examination, statements contained in published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine, or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. If admitted, the statements may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits. Treatises used in direct examination must be disclosed to opposing party without charge pursuant to discovery.

(19) Reputation concerning personal or family history. Reputation among members of his family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among his associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of his personal or family history.

(20) Reputation concerning boundaries or general history. Reputation in a community arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community, State or nation in which located.

(21) Reputation as to character. Reputation of a person's character among his associates or in the community.

(22) Judgment of previous conviction. Evidence of a final judgment, entered after a trial or upon a plea of guilty (but not upon a plea of nolo contendere), adjudging a person guilty of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year, to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment, but not including, when offered by the state in a criminal prosecution for purposes other than impeachment, judgments against persons other than the accused. The pendency of an appeal may be shown but does not affect admissibility.

(23) Judgment as to personal, family or general history, or boundaries. Judgments as proof of matters of personal, family or general history, or boundaries, essential to the judgment, if the same would be provable by evidence of reputation.

(24) Other exceptions. A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

(25) Tender years exception. A statement made by a child of tender years describing any act of sexual contact performed with or on the child by another is admissible in evidence if: (a) the court finds, in a hearing conducted outside the presence of the jury, that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement provide substantial indicia of reliability; and (b) the child either (1) testifies at the proceedings; or (2) is unavailable as a witness: provided, that when the child is unavailable as a witness, such statement may be admitted only if there is corroborative evidence of the act. (Amended effective March 27, 1991; July 1, 1997.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 1, 1997, Rule 803(6) was amended to allow predicate evidence for admission of these records to be presented by affidavit in appropriate cases. — So. 2d — (West Miss. Cases).

Effective March 27, 1991, Rule 803(4) was amended to permit the use of statements made to persons who are not doctors and to define the term "medical." 574-576 So. 2d XXVIII (West Miss.Cas.

1991).

Effective March 27, 1991, the Court adopted Rule 803(25). 574-576 So. 2d XXVIII (West Miss.Cas. 1991).

Rule 803 provides that the hearsay rule does not exclude certain kinds of statements regardless of whether the declarant is available to testify. The rule explicitly does not state that the exceptions therein are admissible. The rationale for this is to put the parties on notice that, while the hearsay hurdle may not exist, other reasons may be present which justify the exclusion of the evidence. Rule 803 collects the vast majority of the recognized hearsay exceptions.

(1) Present Sense Impression. — This exception is a new addition in Mississippi. It is based on the theory that the contemporaneous occurrence of the event and the statement render it unlikely that the declarant made a deliberate or conscious misrepresentation. Precise contemporaneity of the event and the statement may not be possible; a slight lapse may be permissible. Spontaneity is the essential factor. Cited cases which discuss the present sense impression exception are scant. Houston Oxygen Co. v. Davis, 139 Tex. 1, 161 S.W.2d 474 (1942), provides, perhaps, the clearest illustration of the exception. The appropriate subject matter of a statement of present sense impression is a description or explanation of an event or condition.

The present sense impression is not the same thing as the res gestae exception, although the res gestae concept has been used to cover situations where present sense impression would have been appropriate. Houston Contracting Co. v. Atkinson, 251 Miss. 220, 168 So.2d 797 (1964). Rule 803 does not provide for an explicit res gestae exception. The rules, in effect, abandon the elusive concept of res gestae. Rules 803(1), (2), (3), and (4) have elements of the old res gestae exception, but they are far more specific and, therefore, they surmount much of the justified criticism regarding res gestae. For criticism in Mississippi of the res gestae concept, see McCaskill v. State, 227 So.2d 847 (Miss. 1969); Masonite Corp. v. International Woodworkers, 215 So.2d 691 (Miss. 1968); Barton and Cowart, "The Enigma of Hearsay," 49 Miss.L.J. 31 (1978).

(2) Excited Utterance. — In may respects, the excited utterance exception is similar to the former res gestae rule. The underlying theory of the excited utterance exception is that circumstances may create such an excited condition that the capacity for reflection is temporarily impeded and that statements uttered in that condition are thus free of conscious fabrication. As in the present sense impression exception, the essential ingredient here is spontaneity. With respect to the time element, the issue is the duration of the excited state.

(3) Then Existing Mental, Emotional, or Physical Condition. — As the FRE Advisory Committee's Note states, this exception is really a specialized application of Rule 803(1). Its purpose in being specially listed is to enhance its usefulness. The pre-rule res gestae exception is even more closely linked with Rule 801(3) than it is with Rule 801(1), (2), and (4). The exclusion in Rule 801(3) of statements which reflect backwards is necessary to prevent the hearsay rule from being totally consumed by the exception. The important case, Shepard v. United States, 290 U.S. 96, 54 S.Ct. 22, 78 L.Ed. 196 (1933), indicates the necessity for the exclusion. On the other hand, statements which indicate intention to do something in the future are admissible to prove that the act intended took place. See Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285, 12 S.Ct. 909, 36 L.Ed 706 (1892); Hall v. Hall, 199 Miss. 478, 24 So.2d 347 (1946).

One exemption from the exclusion is for statements of memory or belief which relate to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of a declarant's will. There is no particular logical reason for this. Rather, the basis for allowing such statements is founded on necessity and expediency.

(4) Statements for Purposes of Medical Diagnosis or Treatment. — Rule 803(4) represents a deviation from previous Mississippi practice in three significant ways. First, Rule 803(4) permits statements of past symptoms as well as present symptoms. Second the rule allows for statements which relate to the source or cause of the medical problem, whereas Mississippi courts formerly disallowed such statements. See Field v. State, 57 Miss 474 (1879) and Miss Cent. R.R. Co. v. Turnage, 95 Miss. 854, 49 So. 840 (1909). Rule 803(4) eliminates that distinction and permits statements made both for treating and diagnostic purposes. Under Rule 803(4) the statement need not be made to a physician. This is consistent with traditional Mississippi practice.

The amendment to Rule 803(4) is a recognition that medical diagnosis and treatment may encompass mental and emotional conditions as well as physical conditions. Moreover, the rule, by requiring the judge to find trustworthiness, gives the trial judge greater discretion than the original rule. By permitting the recipient to be non-medical personnel, M.R.E. 803(4) modifies case law interpretations of the former language of this exception and now conforms with prevailing interpretations of F.R.E. 803(4). See F.R.E. 803(4), Advisory Committee Notes.

(5) Recorded Recollection. — Past recollection recorded has been recognized as a hearsay exception in Mississippi practice. Rule 803(5), however, clarifies much of the past confusion regarding that exception. An essential feature is that this exception may not be employed until there has been a preliminary showing that the witness's memory is exhausted to the extent that he is unable to testify fully and accurately.

There is great judicial discretion in Rule 803(5). As pointed out in the FRE Advisory Committee's Note, the circumstances of a particular case will govern the method of establishing the initial knowledge and the contemporaneity and accuracy of the record in question. It is possible under Rule 803(5) to have several persons involved in the process of observing and recording.

(6) Records of Regularly Conducted Activity. — Rule 803(6) is an expansion of the common law business records exception used in Mississippi. The records must be those of a regularly conducted business activity; however, the definition of business is broader than pre-rule practice in Mississippi permitted. It includes records of non-profit institutions and associations. It is important to note that the custodian as well as other qualified witnesses may testify. Thus, it is not necessary to call or to account for all participants who made the record.

However, the source of the material must be an informant with knowledge who is acting in the course of the regularly conducted activity. This is exemplified by the leading case of Johnson v. Lutz, 253 N.Y. 124, 170 N.E. 517 (1930) which is still the applicable law today under the rule. That case held that a police report which contained information obtained from a bystander was inadmissible; the officer qualified as one acting in the regular course of a business, but the informant did not.

Rule 803(6) specifically includes diagnoses and opinions as proper subjects of admissible entries, as well as the traditionally admissible entries pertaining to acts, events and conditions. The rule calls for the exercise of judicial discretion if there is an indication of a lack of trustworthiness. This permits the court to take into account the motivation of the informant. The phrase "data compilation" includes, but is not limited to, electronic information storage systems.

The reference to self-authentication under Rule 902(11) is to confirm that the predicate for records under this exception may be by affidavit in appropriate cases.

(7) Absence of Entry in Records Kept in Accordance with the Provision of Paragraph (6). — A record's failure to mention a matter which would ordinarily be contained in it is admissible to prove the nonexistence of the matter. This is innovative in Mississippi. Traditional Mississippi courts have admitted evidence of the absence of matter in the record only in the cases of public records.

While it has been unclear whether the absence of information was even hearsay, some courts have treated it as such and have found no exception to apply. Rule 803(7) settles the question of admissibility by clearly making the absence factor an exception.

(8) Public Records and Reports. — Public records and reports have been admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule. Countless statutory provisions in Mississippi formerly provided for the admission of public records. Additionally, there was similar development in the common law. Ludlow v. Arkwright-Boston Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 317 So.2d 47 (Miss 1975). Subdivisions (A) and (B) are similar to Mississippi practice. The rule makes no distinction between state and local records. Subdivision (C) adds the new element to the exception as traditionally applied in Mississippi. Subdivision (C) provides that some investigative reports may be treated as hearsay exceptions. To be admissible they must be factual findings made in an investigation which was conducted pursuant to lawful authority. Opinions and conclusions contained in such reports should be excluded.

The experience in other jurisdictions which have adopted an identical rule has been that judges are exercising great caution in admitting these reports. Often they are being excluded if based on hearsay or the opinions of those not involved in the preparation of the report. The rule expressly gives judges the discretion to exclude such reports. Even when admissible, public records under Subdivision (C) may only be used in civil cases and in criminal cases on behalf of a defendant against the state. To permit the state to use such reports against a defendant would be to create confrontation rights problems.

(9) Records of Vital Statistics. — This rule is similar to pre-existing Mississippi law. For example, M.C.A. § 41-57-9 formerly provided for the admission of certified copies of birth and death, and M.C.A. § 41-57-47 formerly provided for the admission of certified copies of marriage records.

(10) Absence of Public Record or Entry. — Rule 803(10) is also similar to pre-Rule Mississippi law. See, e.g., M.C.A. § 13-1-83 (repealed effective July 1, 1991). While the Mississippi statute formerly provided for evidence in the form of a certification, Rule 803(10) gives the possibility of a second form, i.e., oral testimony of the search.

(11) Records of Religious Organizations — and (12) Marriage, Baptismal, and Similar Certificates. M.C.A. § 13-1-103 (repealed effective July 1, 1991) formerly provided for the admission of marriage certificates. However, Rules 803(11) and (20) go much further. The records of a religious organization are admissible under Rule 803(11) to show statements of personal and family history. Much of what is admissible might also be admissible under the business records exception.

(13) Family Records. — This rule is an extension of existing Mississippi law. The Mississippi court has indicated it will recognize statements of personal or family relationship contained in the family Bible. See Tisdale v. Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co., 244 Miss. 839, 147 So.2d 122 (1962).

(14) Records and Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. — Because of the nature of title documents, they might conceivably be treated as public records. The Mississippi court has long recognized their admissibility. See, for instance, Doe v. McCaleb, 3 Miss (2 Howard) 756 (1838); DeLashmet v. McClellen, 152 Miss. 781, 118 So. 904 (1928).

(15) Statements in Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. — Rule 803(15) provides that statements of fact in land documents constitute a hearsay exception. The circumstances under which land documents are made supply the hearsay exception guarantees of reliability and trustworthiness. The rule provides for the exclusion of statements when they fail to comply with the guarantee of trustworthiness. At any rate, many of these documents would be admissible under the conventional ancient document rule.

(16) Statements in Ancient Documents. — The ancient documents rule is a traditionally recognized exception in Mississippi. Under this rule the common law period of time is reduced to a minimum of twenty years.

(17) Market Reports, Commercial Publications. — This rule, for the most part, codifies existing practice. Mississippi has previously recognized an exception for mortality tables and market reports. See Tucker v. Donald, 60 Miss. 460 (1882) and Yazoo & M.V.R. Co. v. M. Levy & Sons, 141 Miss 199, 106 So. 525 (1925). The extension to existing practice is in the area of commercial publications. However, the guarantees of trustworthiness for mortality tables and market reports is similar, if not identical, to that for commercial publication. The public, in each case, relies on the publication.

(18) Learned Treatise. — Rule 803(18) differs significantly from pre-Rule Mississippi practice. It allows statements in learned treatises to be admitted as substantive evidence. This is a departure from Mississippi law which only provided for impeachment use of treatises. Tucker v. Donald, 60 Miss. 460 (1882); Catholic Diocese of Natchez-Jackson v. Jaquith, 224 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1969). However, under the rule the statements are only admissible after (1) the witness testifies that the treatise is reliable, (2) another expert so testifies, or (3) the court takes judicial notice. Even then the treatise may not be used substantively unless the witness relied upon it in his testimony on direct examination or the witness was questioned about it on cross-examination. The rule explicitly states that the statements may not be given to the jury as exhibits; they may only be read to the jury. To submit the treatise to the jury would be to give its written statements more emphasis than the oral testimony presented to the jury.

(19) Reputation Concerning Personal or Family History. — This rule is akin to the common law exception relating to family pedigree, although the rule is broader. For instance, a non-familial associate of a person may testify about the personal or family history of that person. The Mississippi court, however, has been moving towards this principle. See Hathaway v. North, 190 Miss 697, 1 So.2d 490 (1941). The rule as stated is a recognition that knowledge of a person's history extends throughout his sphere, to family, friends, and community. This reputation evidence may be used for substantive evidence.

(20) Reputation Concerning Boundaries or General History. — This rule codifies existing Mississippi law. See, for example, Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697 (1858).

(21) Reputation as to Character. — This exception is concerned only with the hearsay aspect of reputation evidence. The exception is, in effect, a reiteration in the context of hearsay of Rule 405(a). Limitations upon admissibility based on other grounds are in Rules 404 and 608.

(22) Judgment of Previous Conviction. — Rule 803(22) is a significant departure from traditional Mississippi practice. Past Mississippi practice has been to exclude judgments of convictions as substantive evidence of the facts which sustain it. Gholson v. Smith, 210 Miss. 28, 48 So.2d 603 (1950). Under 803(22), however, evidence of a judgment of guilty in a felony-grade case is admissible as substantive evidence of any fact essential to uphold the judgment. It is not available where the judgment is based on a plea of nolo contendere or on a misdemeanor conviction. The theory for the exclusion of the misdemeanor conviction is based on practicality. Motivation to defend a misdemeanor charge is often minimal.

The exception does not include evidence of the conviction of a third person, offered against the accused in a criminal case, to prove any fact essential to uphold the judgment.

(23) Judgment as to Personal, Family or General History, or Boundaries. — This rule is similar to Rule 803(22). It is related to Rules 803(19) and (20) which admit reputation evidence as hearsay exceptions.

(24) Other Exceptions. — The rule reflects the realization that the law is not stagnant. As the FRE Advisory Committee's Note indicates, it would be presumptuous to assume that the contemporary legal community has enumerated every single hearsay exception which possible could exist. The exceptions are not a closed system, and Rule 803(24) and its counterpart Rule 804(b)(5) allow for the future development of the law when the guarantees of reliability and trustworthiness can be found. While these two rules allow for judicial discretion, they do not permit an unfettered discretion which could ultimately devour the hearsay rule. Before admitting statements under this rule, the judge must make a finding that the statements being offered are sufficiently trustworthy and reliable. See Cummins v. State, 515 So.2d 869 (Miss. 1987). One of the clearest examples of the circumstances meeting the criteria of Rule 803(24) is found in Dallas County v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 286 F.2d 388 (5th Cir. 1961).

(25) Tender Years Exception. — Some factors that the court should examine to determine if there is sufficient indicia of reliability are (1) whether there is an apparent motive on declarant's part to lie; (2) the general character of the declarant; (3) whether more than one person heard the statements; (4) whether the statements were made spontaneously; (5) the timing of the declarations; (6) the relationship between the declarant and the witness; (7) the possibility of the declarant's faulty recollection is remote; (8) certainty that the statements were made; (9) the credibility of the person testifying about the statements; (10) the age or maturity of the declarant; (11) whether suggestive techniques were used in eliciting the statement; and (12) whether the declarant's age, knowledge, and experience make it unlikely that the declarant fabricated. Corroborating evidence may not be used as an indicia of reliability. Smith v. State, 925 So.2d 825, 837 (Miss. 2006); *Hennington v. State,*702 So.2d 403, 415 (Miss. 1997). A finding that there is a substantial indicia of reliability should be made on the record.

Mississippi's pre-Rule tender years exception did not define "tender years." See Williams v. State, 427 So.2d 100 (Miss. 1983). Many jurisdictions limit their analogous exceptions to declarants under the age of fourteen years. However, the exception should not be necessarily limited to a specific chronological age. In appropriate cases, the exception might apply when the declarant is chronologically older than fourteen years, but the declarant has a mental age less than fourteen years.

Corroboration required for admissibility under M.R.E. 803(25)(b)(2) need not be eyewitness testimony or physical evidence, but may include confessions, doctors' reports, inappropriate conduct by the child, and other appropriate expert testimony.

When any of the hearsay exceptions in Rule 803 are applied in a criminal case, the rights of the defendant under the Confrontation Clauses of Federal and State Constitutions must be respected. Crawford v. Washington 124 S.Ct. 1354 (2004) (The confrontation clause forbids "admission of testimonial statements of a witness who did not appear at trial unless [the witness is] unavailable to testify, and the defendant had had a prior. opportunity for cross-examination."); Davis v. Washington, 126 S.Ct. 2266 (2006) (Among other things, prior testimony, depositions, affidavits, and confessions are testimonial, as are other statements to police if "the primary purpose of the interrogation is to establish or prove past events potentially relevant to later criminal prosecution."). See also Osborne v. State, 942 So.2d 193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006) (applying Rule 803(25) in light of Crawford and finding video of child's statements produced at the direction of the district attorney testimonial but no confrontation clause violation because child testified and was subject to cross-examination); Bell v. State 928 So.2d 951 (Miss. 2006) (child's statements to police testimonial and therefore improperly admitted under 803(2)); Hobgood v. State, 926 So.2d 847 (Miss. 2006) (applying Rule 803(25) in light of Crawford and finding statements by children to family members and health care providers not testimonial but similar statements to police testimonial); Foley v. State, 914 So.2d 677 (Miss. 2005) (statements made as part of "neutral medical evaluations" not testimonial and properly admitted under 803(4) and 803(25)).

At trial, the director of medical records for a center, stated that she served as the custodian of all center records, and testified as to the authenticity of the husband's center records; she also testified as to the center's regular practice of maintaining their medical records. The chancellor and the parties were already aware of the records since the guardian ad litem used the records to compile her report for the court, and since the husband's records were available to both parties; therefore, there was no abuse of discretion in the chancellor's admission of the records, as they fell within Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) and were properly authenticated. Jones v. Jones, 43 So. 3d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 463 (Miss. 2010).

Pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), while the trial judge abused discretion in allowing a store receipt to be admitted into evidence without a proper foundation as no one from the store authenticated the receipt, that error was harmless because defendant's friend testified that he drove defendant to that store, that he went into the store with defendant, that they purchased a television, and that defendant used a credit card to pay for it; thus, defendant was not prejudiced by the receipt from the store being admitted into evidence. Smith v. State, 984 So. 2d 295 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Inadmissible evidence cannot contribute to a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a verdict, and therefore in a case involving breach of contract, computer generated invoices did not meet the standard for admission under Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) where there was no explanation of how they were created or testimony that the reprints were created at or near the time that the charges were incurred for the sale or lease of large equipment; as such, the trial court did not err by removing this evidence when it considered a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. H & E Equip. Servs., LLC v. Floyd, 959 So. 2d 578 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's robbery conviction was proper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) because police radio logs were admissible as a business records exception to the hearsay rule, since radio logs were records of regularly conducted business activity. Cabrere v. State, 920 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a child support case, medical evidence presented by a father to show that he was unable to work due to a injuries suffered in a childhood accident was not accepted by a chancery court because it constituted hearsay; a third document was not accepted because there was no testimony of a custodian under Miss. R. Civ. 803(6), and the document was not self-authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 902(11), Davison v. Miss. Dep't of Human Servs., 938 So. 2d 912 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court erred in admitting medical records based solely on the wife's testimony, but the error was harmless as the evidence in the medical records was cumulative to other evidence. Fulton v. Fulton, 918 So. 2d 877 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The testimony of a pediatrician, regarding his notes made from conversations with other treating physicians, could not be considered plain error where defense counsel failed to timely object on the basis that the testimony was hearsay. Additionally, the medical records included in the pediatrician's testimony would have otherwise been admissible under Miss. R.

Evid. 803(6), as they would have been presumed reliable since they were kept in the ordinary course of business. McClain v. State, 929 So. 2d 946 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 294 (Miss. 2006).

In an action concerning underinsured motorist benefits, the witness testified she was an employee of the insurer with the knowledge of the contents of the computer-generated document, its preparation, and how to access the documents from storage on her computer. The witness testified to the contents of the document in question, which recorded every transaction on the insurance policy, and to exactly how each number on the page came to be, and she further testified as to how the computer system functioned; the record reflected that each of the subject entries were done in the course of regular business with the insurer and all the requirements for admission of said document under Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) and 901(b) were met. Ferguson v. Snell, 905 So. 2d 516 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a memorandum from the corporation offered by an individual as the memo did not come in as a business record, since the individual's witness never testified that it was made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge; that it was kept in the course of regularly conducted business activity; and that it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum. Welsh v. Mounger, 883 So. 2d 46 (Miss. 2004).

In a prosecution for timber theft, settlement sheets showing the value of the timber were improperly authenticated by an investigator who had not prepared them; however, as there was also competent testimony on the same issue, the error was harmless. Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Public safety department printout of defendant's driving record was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) after having been certified as correct by the signature of the custodian of the records, and because the record was under seal, it was self-authenticated pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902(1); this printout met requirement of Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(2)(c) for evidence of two prior driving-under-the-influence convictions of defendant, and no prejudice resulted from the admission of the corroborating justice court record in this regard. Doolie v. State, 856 So. 2d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a wrongful death/product liability case, an accident investigation report was admissible as a business record because the report was generated in the regular course of business. Yale Materials Handling Corp. v. Brandon, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 180 (Miss. May 23, 2002), dismissed by, opinion withdrawn by 2003 Miss. LEXIS 21 (Miss. Jan. 16, 2003), appeal dismissed by 2003 Miss. LEXIS 47 (Miss. Jan. 16, 2003).

Under subsection (6), the reliability of the information in business records was determined by the competence of the compiler of the information and not the extent of the consumer's reliance on information received from another source. Harveston v. State, 798 So. 2d 638 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for murder arising from an armed robbery of a business, it was error to allow an investigator to testify from a business ledger that indicated that money was missing from the business, notwithstanding that the custodian of the record was the murder victim, as the proper witness to authenticate the ledger was the victim's daughter, who was involved to some extent in the business and was familiar with how the business was run. Flowers v. State, 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

The proper foundation for a business record was shown where (1) the record — a ledger — was found in a store in which several murdered victims were found, (2) the custodian of the records was unavailable as she was one of the murder victims, and (3) the investigator who discovered the record at the scene and the victim's daughter testified as to the record. Flowers v. State, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 116 (Miss. May 11, 2000), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 309 (Miss. 2000).

In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle accident, a letter from the plaintiff's deceased treating physician to the plaintiff's attorney expressing an opinion that the plaintiff was permanently disabled as a result of the accident was not admissible under subsection (6) since the letter was prepared in anticipation of litigation and was not a record of regularly conducted activities. Gilbert v. Ireland, 758 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for defrauding the state government and uttering forgery, the court erroneously permitted a state investigator to testify as to the contents of insurance investigative reports as he was not involved in preparing the insurance files, did not work directly for the insurance companies, and did not even know the adjusters. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

A certificate of calibration of an intoxilyzer is admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Harkins v. State, 735 So. 2d 317 (Miss. 1999).

Child's hearsay statements of abuse.

Statements of a child sex abuse victim were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because the victim was under the age of twelve such that the presumption of tender years existed and because the defendant failed to make a contemporaneous objection to the admission of testimony of the victim's social worker or school counselor. Derouen v. State, 994 So. 2d 748 (Miss. 2008).

Circuit court did not err by admitting the victim's mother's testimony that the victim told her that defendant tried to rape her under the hearsay exception of Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), and therefore defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied, because the circuit court did not err when it weighed the reliability factors, as: (1) no witness testified that the victim had a boyfriend and therefore a motive to lie; (2) the fact that the victim made her statement to her mother did not render the statement, without more, unreliable; (3) the victim's statement came after her mother asked her what was wrong; and (4) there was no indication that the mother provoked the statement or that it was the product of suggestion. Foxworth v. State, 982 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 241 (Miss. 2008).

In a criminal prosecution for sexual battery, the trial court did not commit reversible error in failing to conduct a Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) hearing outside of the presence of the jury to determine the admissibility of statements the child victim made to witnesses for the State. The error was not raised at trial and the statements, if hearsay, would fit within one of the hearsay exceptions. Perry v. State, 904 So. 2d 1122 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Co-conspirator.

Under Miss. R. Evid. 803(d)(2)(E), any statements made between co-conspirators in the course of the furtherance of the conspiracy had the necessary guarantee of trustworthiness the court required to address the right to confrontation. Bush v. State, 895 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 2005).

Commercial publications.

Use of printed labels on pre-packaged, unopened, over-the-counter medications to prove defendant's possession of pseudoephedrine with knowledge that it would be used to manufacture a controlled substance, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-313(2)(c), was proper because the ingredients listed were sufficiently trustworthy for admission into evidence as a hearsay exception within the purview of Miss. R. Evid. 803(17) and thus overcome defendant's hearsay and Sixth Amendment Confrontation Clause objections. Burchfield v. State, 892 So. 2d 191 (Miss. 2004).

Testimony as to an estimate of the market share of the plaintiff's share of revenue from a gas well was admissible under subsection (17) where the testimony was based on the witness' recollection of market reports in a newspaper. TXG Intrastate Pipeline Co. v. Grossnickle, 716 So. 2d 991 (Miss. 1997).

Consistency of child's statement.

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate because the trial judge was within his discretion in determining that the victim's four-year-old brother was competent to testify against defendant and other testimony was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) as showing the consistency of the brother's account. Osborne v. State, 942 So. 2d 193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 714 (Miss. 2006).

Excited utterances.

During defendant's trial for capital murder arising from the death of his girlfriend's son, the trial court did not err by admitting the daughter's hearsay statement to her mother that defendant beat the victim with a stick until the child stopped moving; while the statement was made two hours after the incident, the child spent the great majority of the time following the incident in the presence of the perpetrator and appeared to still be under great stress when she made the statement. The statement qualified as an excited utterance under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2). Eubanks v. State, 28 So. 3d 607 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 83 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements defendant's girlfriend made to witnesses who responded to the accident scene shortly after the wreck implicating defendant as excited utterances under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2) because the statements were made shortly after the trauma of the wreck in which the girlfriend sustained injuries and after searching for and finding her small daughter seriously injured. Harris v. State, 979 So. 2d 721 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction was proper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(2) because the transcript of the 911 call fell within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule since it related to the events that were unfolding as it was made. Cabrere v. State, 920 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Social worker was properly allowed to testify as to statements made by the victim in a child-fondling case because Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) applied, and considering the social worker's testimony at the preliminary hearing and the trial court's review of the videotape of the interview, the victim's statements at the interview bore substantial indicia of reliability. Further, defendant's right to confrontation was not violated because the victim testified at trial and defendant cross-examined her. Elkins v. State, 918 So. 2d 828 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 26 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 547 U.S. 1194, 126 S. Ct. 2865, 165 L. Ed. 2d 898, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4564, 74 U.S.L.W. 3685 (2006).

In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault, an officer's testimony as to the victim's statement at the crime scene that defendant was a shooter was hearsay. However, the excited utterance exception applied; the victim was still under the stress of the situation when he made the statement. Bankston v. State, 907 So. 2d 966 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Confession made three days after the murder was improperly considered an excited utterance. Brooks v. State, 903 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 2005).

In a murder case, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to bar the hearsay statement attributed to his mother, confessing to another witness what defendant had done and repeated by the other witness, as there was sufficient testimony to show that the mother was upset and hysterical; therefore, it was an admissible excited utterance. Brooks v. State, 905 So. 2d 678 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting statements that a victim made to a relative shortly after a sexual assault as excited utterances because the evidence showed that the statements were made immediately after the victim was released, and the relative testified that the victim was in a state of shock when the statements were made. McCoy v. State, 878 So. 2d 167 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the witness's hearsay statement was admissible where the victim was anxious and admitted that he was scared; therefore the statement was an excited utterance under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2). Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

Victim's statement to a sheriff's deputy at the hospital shortly after her rape by defendant after he had merely asked her what was wrong was properly admitted as an excited utterance, especially where she was clearly still under the stress of the situation. Mapp v. State, 843 So. 2d 742 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow statements by witnesses to police to be admitted into defendant's robbery and assault trial as excited utterances. Davis v. State, 850 So. 2d 1136 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 828, 124 S. Ct. 57, 157 L. Ed. 2d 53 (2003).

Statements of a 104-year-old rape victim made to neighbors immediately after the crime was committed were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2) as excited utterances. Ward v. State, 821 So. 2d 894 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

An excited utterance is a statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition; Miss. R. Evid. 803(2); spontaneity is the key with this exception; statements are not excited utterances if there was nothing "excited" about them. Randall v. State, 806 So. 2d 185 (Miss. 2001).

In a divorce proceeding, it was error for the court to exclude testimony by the wife regarding statements by the parties' nine-year-old daughter about her fears and stomach pains; such testimony was admissible under the exceptions for present sense impression, excited utterance, and then-existing mental, emotional, or physical conditions. Holladay v. Holladay, 776 So. 2d 662 (Miss. 2000).

In a murder prosecution, although it was proper for a witness to testify to statements made by the victim that he might be dying and that he wanted to tell his daughter that he loved her, it was improper for the witness to testify that an unidentified bystander, who was aiding the victim, told her that the victim then identified "Rodney" as his assailant, and her testimony that those who were giving aid to the victim were "excited" did not cure the error. Jones v. State, 763 So. 2d 210 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for the kidnapping of a seven year old child, his statements to his mother immediately after the events constituted excited utterances where he was visibly upset and was crying. Lacking v. State, 775 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder and aggravated assault arising from the stabbing death of one victim and stabbing of her four year child, a statement in which the child identified the defendant as the assailant was properly admitted as an excited utterance, notwithstanding that the statement was not made until several hours after the assault, where the statement was the first thing the child said to his great grandmother after she discovered him bleeding and in an apparent state of shock. Barnett v. State, 757 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, the trial court properly allowed the introduction of evidence that the victim identified the defendant as his assailant about 30 minutes after being beaten with a metal pipe where he was able to drive to city hall and report the crime and informed the dispatcher of the crime immediately upon his arrival. Hampton v. State, 755 So. 2d 1241 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for kidnapping and of touching a child for lustful purposes, statements made by the young victim to his mother shortly after the incident were admissible under the exception for excited utterances where the statements were made immediately after the incident at issue while the victim was visibly upset and crying. Lacking v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 610 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 9, 1999), subst. op., 775 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where a police officer never testified as to witnesses' apparent state of mind, their being flustered or excited or otherwise under the stress of the event, the court could not conclude that the statements of the witnesses were properly admitted as excited utterances. Edwards v. State, 736 So. 2d 475 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for murder during the commission of arson, it was error for the court to permit testimony as an excited utterance where there was no evidence in the record to ascertain at what point after the fire the statement was made. Smith v. State, 733 So. 2d 793 (Miss. 1999).

Statements by witnesses to a police officer that they saw the defendant running were not excited utterances since the police officer never testified as to the witnesses' apparent state of mind, their being flustered or excited or otherwise under the stress of the event. Edwards v. State, 736 So. 2d 475 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of a statement by the defendant's brother that his sister shoot his wife; such statement constituted an excited utterance where it was made during a 911 emergency call and was repeated to the first officer on the scene; the fact that the defendant's brother did not witness the shooting did not require a contrary result, as he heard the gunshot and was obviously traumatized when he discovered the victim's body. Carter v. State, 722 So. 2d 1258 (Miss. 1998).

In a prosecution for conspiracy, sexual battery, and rape, the court did not err when it allowed the 13 year old victim's mother to testify that, when asked if anything had happened to her before she returned home, the victim replied "yes, mama, and it hurted," since the victim was quite agitated at the time of the statement and spoke out of the traumatic events to which she had been subjected only a short time before. Simmons v. State, 722 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1998).

A statement made by a witness to the effect that he was very angry was not an excited utterance since the statement was made about one hour after the events at issue and, therefore, the witness was not impeded in his capacity for reflection. Owens v. State, 716 So. 2d 534 (Miss. 1998).

Transcript and tape of 911 emergency call made by victim during shooting were properly admitted under excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Clark v. State, 693 So. 2d 927 (Miss. 1997).

Rape victim's statement to her sister, made less than 24 hours after assault, was admissible as either a statement offered to rebut a charge of recent fabrication or improper motive, or as an excited utterance. Heflin v. State, 643 So. 2d 512 (Miss. 1994).

Hearsay statements of murder victim's retarded 18-year-old son, that defendant was responsible for attack on his mother, were admissible under either present sense impression or excited utterance exceptions to the hearsay rule. Marks v. State, 532 So. 2d 976 (Miss. 1988).

Statements by alleged child sexual abuse victim did not qualify as excited utterances because the child did not report the incident until two weeks later, when questioned by her babysitter. Mitchell v. State, 539 So. 2d 1366 (Miss. 1989).

Learned treatise.

Granting of a directed verdict in favor of a physician provider, a physician, and a medical center, in a claim for medical malpractice was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(18) because neither a doctor or any other expert witness testified that the journal in question was a reliable authority. Thus, neither the journal, nor the article contained within it, was established as a reliable authority. Hartel v. Pruett, 998 So. 2d 979 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court erred by allowing the parents' attorney to cross-examine two defense witnesses using an encyclopedia summary page printed from a university website and a textbook chapter under the learned treatises exception of Miss. R. Evid. 803(18) because the encyclopedia summary and textbook were not established as reliable authorities by either of the parents' two experts, the parents did not offer an expert to establish either article's authority, and the trial court did not take judicial notice of either article's authority. Bullock v. Lott, 964 So. 2d 1119 (Miss. 2007).

Medical treatment.

Defendant's conviction for fondling a child for the purpose of gratifying his lust was appropriate because although Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) and (6) were broad enough to encompass the reports compiled by the school nurse following her interview with the victim, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the reports since they related to the victim's accusations against her stepfather, not defendant. Furthermore, the circuit court's decision to exclude the reports did not prejudice or adversely affect defendant, especially since the circuit court permitted the school nurse to testify regarding her interview with the victim. Walker v. State, 55 So. 3d 212 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Testimony of a hospital social worker as to a victim's statements was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4), as the circumstances surrounding the statements indicated substantial trustworthiness; the statements were made after a violent crime victim had just been brought into the hospital and were made in the company of a nurse and a police officer. Cox v. State, 66 So. 3d 182 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 65 So. 3d 310, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 350 (Miss. 2011).

Statements contained in the abuse record were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment, and the report was relied upon by a hospital in treating defendant's child; further, because the vast majority of the abuse record was cumulative of other evidence presented at trial, any error that resulted from admission of the abuse record was harmless. Anthony v. State, 23 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Statements to doctors and therapists by a parent of an injured child qualify as statements for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment; the fact that information obtained via a medical history comes from the patient's mother does not affect the admissibility of the statements therein. Anthony v. State, 23 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Scope of Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) includes the identification of the purported abuser under the theory that a part of the treatment of an abused child includes reasonable efforts to eliminate the abuser's access to the child. Anthony v. State, 23 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) applies to statements made to non-medical personnel, including psychologists; this exception also allows for the admission of statements which relate to the source or cause of the medical problem. Anthony v. State, 23 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Denial of workers' compensation benefits to an employee was inappropriate because the employee reported to the emergency room nurse and his physical therapist that he experienced pain and numbness after lifting a heavy desk at work and the medical records showed credence to the veracity the employee's testimony, Miss. R. Evid. 803(4). The employee met his burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that he experienced an injury during the scope and course of his employment, and that the accident was causally connected to his claimed disability. Short v. Wilson Meat House, LLC, 37 So. 3d 50 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by 36 So. 3d 1247, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 310 (Miss. 2010).

Finding in favor of a psychiatrist in a negligence action after the decedent killed herself was proper, in part because the personal representative had argued that statements did not meet the trustworthiness requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 803(4). However, the representative failed to provide the supreme court with any directions as to the specific testimony at issue; without support from the record, the supreme court was not required to rule upon the merits of the representative's argument. Young v. Guild, 7 So. 3d 251 (Miss. 2009).

Hearsay testimony identifying a perpetrator in a child sexual abuse case is admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) regardless of whether he or she is a member of the child's immediate household. The overriding question making the inquiry necessary is "Will the perpetrator have access to the child in the future that would allow the sexual abuse to continue?" Valmain v. State, 5 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. 2009).

Nothing in the plain language of Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) restricts its application to statements made by a patient to a treating physician. To the contrary, Rule 803(4) casts its net wider than the patient-physician relationship. Valmain v. State, 5 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. 2009).

During defendant's trial for sexual battery of a child, the court did not abuse its discretion under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) in admitting the mother's statements to the nurse who was examining her child; because defendant would have access to the victim in the future that would allow the sexual abuse to continue, the identification of defendant was admissible under Rule 803(4). Valmain v. State, 5 So. 3d 1079 (Miss. 2009).

Court did not err by admitting testimony of a forensic interviewer that consisted of the victim identifying her sexual assailant as her father because the purpose of the interview was to ascertain if the victim needed further medical attention and to judge whether her claims were credible. The victim's statement to the interviewer was one that a physician would rely upon in providing medical care and therapy, and the interviewer never stated that the victim was telling the truth. Branch v. State, 998 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2008).

Under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4), the admission of the nurse's statement reading parts of the victim's medical records into evidence was harmless and did not require reversal of defendant's sexual battery conviction because (1) defendant never disputed that he broke into the victim's home while carrying a knife or that he had intercourse with the victim; (2) the victim testified at trial as to all the facts contained in the nurse's statement; (3) the jury listened to the 9-1-1 recording on which the victim repeatedly screamed "please don't stab me" as defendant entered her bedroom and heard the struggle that ensued between defendant and the victim; and (4) there was overwhelming evidence that the intercourse was not consensual in the form of the victim's testimony, the 9-1-1 recording, and the cuts and scratches on the victim's body from defendant's knife. Goldman v. State, 9 So. 3d 394 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 222 (Miss. 2009).

Victim's doctor's testimony was relevant and admissible as it pertained to the victim's diagnosis and treatment where it was clear that the doctor's testimony related solely to issues consistent with the victim's treatment; the statement that "her mother's ex-boyfriend was sexually abusing her" was the type of information doctors relied upon to diagnose and treat patients under these circumstances. Morgan v. State, 995 So. 2d 812 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 661 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) where a doctor's testimony was appropriately admitted. The purpose of the doctor's session with the victim's brother was relevant to her treatment and recommendation that the brother seek counseling and therapy for the trauma that he suffered as a result of witnessing the victim's death. Osborne v. State, 942 So. 2d 193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 714 (Miss. 2006).

In a child custody case, a social worker was properly determined to be an expert witness under Miss. R. Evid. 702 based on her education and experience, and the social worker was allowed to testify regarding her therapy sessions with the child under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4). Giannaris v. Giannaris, 962 So. 2d 574 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by, remanded in part by 960 So. 2d 462, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 399 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5 year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the statements to doctors were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) as statements made for the purposes of medical treatment, and thus an exception to the hearsay rule of exclusion. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5 year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the statements to doctors were statements made for the purposes of medical treatment, and thus an exception to the hearsay rule of exclusion. And, the statements were made as apart of neutral medical evaluations and thus were not testimonial and defendant's confrontation clause violation argument was without merit. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

The testimony of a pediatrician, regarding his notes made from conversations with other treating physicians, could not be considered plain error where defense counsel failed to timely object on the basis that the testimony was hearsay. Additionally, Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) stated that the rule eliminated any distinction made between narrative statements made to a treating physician and those made to an examining physician who was retained for use as an expert witness in litigation and permitted statements made both for treating and diagnostic purposes, the statements made to the pediatrician by the other treating physicians were admissible. McClain v. State, 929 So. 2d 946 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 294 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting doctor's testimony about statements the victim made to him during her examination, in which she described the assault, as the statements were made in the course of treatment and were the type of statements a doctor reasonably relied on during the course of treatment. Davis v. State, 878 So. 2d 1020 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 880, 160 L. Ed. 2d 773 (2005).

Trial court was held to have committed no error where medical record evidence of one of the victim's statements to a doctor that his fellow victim went on a "rampage" was not made for treatment purposes, under Miss. R. Evid. 803(4), and thus was inadmissible hearsay. Jones v. State, 856 So. 2d 285 (Miss. 2003).

Physician was contacted to evaluate a victim for possible sexual abuse; because the physician's actions were for the purposes of diagnosis and treatment, her testimony was relevant and admissible under subsection (4). Taylor v. State, 836 So. 2d 774 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 835 So. 2d 952 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Subsection (4) allows statements made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment to be introduced into evidence; where statements taken by a doctor from children were used by the doctor in his diagnosis and treatment as directed by the trial court, the requirements of the exception were met. B.R.C. v. State, 795 So. 2d 526 (Miss. 2001).

Scope of Rule 803(4) includes the identification of a purported child abuser under the theory that a part of the treatment of a sexually abused child includes reasonable efforts to eliminate the abuser's access to the child. Rowlett v. State, 791 So. 2d 319 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001), cert. dismissed, 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 46 (Miss. 2007).

Before admitting evidence that fell under the medical diagnosis hearsay exception pursuant to subsection(4), a two-part test had to be met: the declarant's motive in making the statement had to be consistent with the purposes of promoting treatment, and the content of the statement had to be such as was reasonably relied on by a physician in treatment. Rice v. State, 815 So. 2d 1227 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a 10-year-old child, three physicians were properly permitted to testify regarding out-of-court statements made by the victim, including the identification of the defendant as the perpetrator, where (1) the physicians relied on the child's statements regarding the sexual battery she suffered at the hands of the defendant, (2) the child had come into contact with the defendant before the incident at issue as shown by her testimony that she had seen him hanging around her neighborhood, and (3) the child's mother knew who the defendant was and stated that she had seen him many times smoking cigarettes in the area of their home. Marshall v. State, 812 So. 2d 1068 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A physician's testimony regarding statements made by a four-year-old child during diagnosis and treatment did not lack the requisite trustworthiness notwithstanding the trial judge's expressed concern as to the physician's note-taking during interviews with the victim, as opposed to the more practical and trustworthy practice of audio or audiovisual recording. Moore v. State, 773 So. 2d 984 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for conspiracy, sexual battery, and rape, the court did not err when it allowed a physician to testify about statements made by the 11 and 13 year old victims during his examinations of them, since such statements were elicited by the physician in order to determine the proper course of medical treatment to pursue. Simmons v. State, 722 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1998).

Doctor's statement regarding child's identification of defendant as her abuser was properly admitted as a statement made for the purpose of medical treatment. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

Statements made by child sexual abuse victims to physicians identifying immediate household members as perpetrators are admissible as this information is used to promote treatment by the immediate removal of the child from the household; however, hearsay statements pertaining to non-household members are not admissible because this information does not promote medical treatment. Jones v. State, 606 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. 1992); Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Before admitting evidence pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule, a two-part test must be met: declarant's motive in making statement must be consistent with purposes of promoting treatment, and content of statement must be such as is reasonably relied on by a physician in treatment. Doe v. Doe, 644 So. 2d 1199 (Miss. 1994).

Police reports.

The court properly refused to allow the introduction into evidence of a police report regarding an assault allegedly committed by the defendant where it was obvious that the defendant sought to introduce the report for the sole purpose of using improper hearsay statements contained therein to contradict testimony provided at trial. Bingham v. State, 723 So. 2d 1189 (Ct. App. 1998).

Present sense impression.

Defendant's murder conviction for the killing of his grandmother was proper because her account of what happened was properly presented as a dying declaration under Mississippi Rule of Civil Procedure 804(b)(2) and as a present-sense impression under Mississippi Rule of Civil Procedure 803(1). The first thing that the grandmother told the officer when he arrived at her home was that defendant had shot her; thinking that she would die and wanting whoever found her and defendant's grandfather to know who had killed them, the grandmother scrawled writings in her own blood in the hallway leading to the stairwell. Sanders v. State, 63 So. 3d 554 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 63 So. 3d 497, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 193 (Miss. 2011).

Admission of testimony by a child's mother was improper under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because there was no hearing conducted; moreover, it was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1), (2) because the child made the statement to the mother long after alleged sexual abuse. However, the error was harmless where the evidence came in through Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) due to an examination by a doctor. Pierce v. State, 2 So. 3d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 93 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 113, 175 L. Ed. 2d 74, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5318, 78 U.S.L.W. 3173 (U.S. 2009).

Defendant's conviction was proper pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) because the 911 call to the emergency operator fell within the present sense impression to the hearsay rule since the events leading up to the call were sufficiently contemporaneous to fit within the exception. Cabrere v. State, 920 So. 2d 1062 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was charged with aggravated assault, an eyewitness to the shooting was permitted to testify that the declarant told her that defendant had a gun, and immediately after the declarant made the statement, she jumped out of the car and ran for shelter; the hearsay statement was admissible as both an excited utterance and a present sense impression under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1), (2). Wheeler v. State, 943 So. 2d 106 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Finding against the heir in her wrongful death action was proper where statements made by the decedent regarding what the physician instructed him to do were rightfully excluded. The statements did not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) because they were not made while the decedent was perceiving the event or immediately thereafter. Richardson ex rel. Wrongful Death Heirs of Richardson v. DeRouen, 920 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial judge properly denied defendant's motion in limine, ruling that the eyewitness statement was both a present sense impression and an excited utterance, and therefore, an exception to the hearsay rule of Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) and 803(2); at most, there were only seconds between the time the eyewitness's observation of defendant's actions and his relaying of what he saw to the police; the out-of-court statement was spontaneous and made only seconds after the events. Ward v. State, 881 So. 2d 316 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was prosecuted after a controlled drug buy involving an informant and other officers, defendant was not prejudiced as the result of the admission of one officer's statement on the audiotape where that officer did not testify at trial. Defendant was able to cross-examine each and every witness the State offered, and there was no violation of defendant's constitutional rights of confrontation and cross-examination; further, the statement itself was not the incriminating evidence, it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it qualified as a present sense impression, and it was not inadmissible hearsay. Burton v. State, 875 So. 2d 1120 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Statements made to a 911 operator by the owner of a trailer where defendant had just murdered her husband relating events that had occurred while the owner was asleep in the trailer or repeated statements made to the owner by defendant, were hearsay statements under Miss. R. Evid. 801(c) that did not fall within the Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) present sense exception to the hearsay rule; as the owner was asleep when the murder took place, his statements to the 911 operator were not made while he was perceiving the occurence of the murder or immediately thereafter. Moore v. State, 859 So. 2d 379 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for continuance where no manifest injustice resulted from the denial; defendant did not present any evidence that he was unable to call a witness at a trial which lasted three weeks. Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the witness's hearsay statement was admissible, as the victim contemporaneously related the event to the witness; therefore the statement was a present sense impression under Miss. R.Evid. 803(1). Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

In a divorce proceeding, it was error for the court to exclude testimony by the wife regarding statements by the parties's nine-year-old daughter about her fears and stomach pains; such testimony was admissible under the exceptions for present sense impression, excited utterance, and then existing mental, emotional, or physical conditions. Holladay v. Holladay, 776 So. 2d 662 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for possession of cocaine and possession of marijuana, a narcotics investigator was properly permitted to testify that he picked up a baggy found on the ground below the defendant's truck door and sarcastically asked a rhetorical question similar to "who does this belong to" or "what is this" and that the defendant's four-year-old son promptly blurted out, "It belongs to my daddy;" it was unlikely that the child responded with an answer other than the truth, and the statement was admissible as a present sense impression. Mills v. State, 763 So. 2d 924 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for kidnapping and of touching a child for lustful purposes, statements made by the young victim to his mother shortly after the incident could not be admitted under the exception for present sense impression as that exception requires a spontaneous statement and it appeared that some of the statements were prompted by questions posed by the victim's mother. Lacking v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 610 (Miss. Ct. App. Nov. 9, 1999), subst. op., 775 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The present sense impression rule requires a spontaneous statement, not one in response to a question; thus, for a witness to give a response to an officer's question is by definition not "spontaneous," no matter how soon it is made after the event that is the focus of the questioning. Edwards v. State, 736 So. 2d 475 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In a prosecution for conspiracy, sexual battery, and rape, the court did not err when it allowed the 13 year old victim's mother to testify that, when asked if anything had happened to her before she returned home, the victim replied "yes, mama, and it hurted," since the victim was quite agitated at the time of the statement and spoke out of the traumatic events to which she had been subjected only a short time before. Simmons v. State, 722 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 1998).

Transcript and tape of 911 emergency call made by victim during shooting were properly admitted under present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule. Clark v. State, 693 So. 2d 927 (Miss. 1997).

Public records and reports.

In a capital murder trial, the introduction of the victim's death certificate into evidence was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 803(9) and the authenticity of the death certificate was established by Miss. R. Evid. 902(4). Any failure to redact the time of injury from the certificate was unimportant in relation to everything else the jury considered on the issue in question. Birkhead v. State, 57 So. 3d 1223 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's capital murder conviction was appropriate because his right to confrontation was not violated by the admission of the victim's death certificate into evidence. The death certificate was admissible as a public record under Miss. R. Evid. 902(4) and, while the trial court erred in allowing the death certificate into evidence showing the purported time of injury under Miss. R. Evid. 803(9), the error was harmless because witnesses testified that they could not be positive of the time of injury or the time of death. Birkhead v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 73 (Miss. Feb. 19, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 57 So. 3d 1223, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 99 (Miss. 2011).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence during sentencing defendant's prior Texas conviction of second-degree robbery because it was relevant for the sentencing jury, consistent with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 10.04(B)(1), to consider; in addition, the documentation of the prior conviction and sentence was properly certified and authenticated according to the Acts of Congress, and therefore was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) as an exception to the hearsay rule. Taggart v. State, 957 So. 2d 981 (Miss. 2007).

National Crime Information Center (NCIC) is a database of information provided by other law enforcement agencies, and as such those working for the NCIC and the NCIC itself do not observe those matters reported upon within their reports, and furthermore there is an issue of trustworthiness when one organization seeks to introduce records in its possession that were actually prepared by another; therefore, the NCIC report could not fall under the public records and reports exception. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

There is no statutory provision mandating that Mississippi's justice courts obtain and record individuals' address information as either an activity of the justice court or as to matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report; therefore, a computer printout of a justice court record containing defendant's address would not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8), and would be inadmissible hearsay. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Information contained in the National Crime Information Center (NCIC) report and the justice court's computer print out containing his address was not a statement by defendant, and thus would not qualify as a prior inconsistent statement; therefore, as the two documents in question did not fall under either Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) or Miss. R. Evid. 613(b), the trial court erred in admitting them over defendant's objections, but the errors did not warrant reversal because they did not prejudice defendant. Singleton v. State, 948 So. 2d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

State can use a self-authenticating certificate from a prison records custodian to overcome the presumption that an inmate timely filed a notice of appeal. Jewell v. State, 946 So. 2d 810 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 56 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court was within its sound discretion in finding that a disclaimer rendered an accident report untrustworthy as a public record and, therefore, was not excepted from the hearsay rule. Miss. R. Evid. 803(8). Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

Investigator properly testified about the contents of a crime laboratory report under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8). Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

Defendant's confrontation rights were not violated, even though defendant was unable to question the expert who performed the actual analysis on the substance found in defendant's home as required by Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), because another witness who was charged with verifying the results did testify, and the witness was capable of testifying to the test results and the chain of custody. Mooneyham v. State, 842 So. 2d 579 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003).

A birth certificate, which stated that a jazz musician who died in 1938 was the father of the appellee, was properly introduced into evidence in a proceeding in which the appellee claimed a share of the musician's estate as it contained sufficient indicia of trustworthiness. Harris v. Johnson, 767 So. 2d 181 (Miss. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 959, 121 S. Ct. 1489, 149 L. Ed. 2d 376 (2001).

Computer generated records of the defendant's prior incarceration fell within the public records exception to the hearsay rule and were admissible as data compilations under subsection (8). Ficklin v. State, 758 So. 2d 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The proponent need not give notice to the other party of the intent to offer computer printouts admitted into evidence under subsection (8). Ficklin v. State, 758 So. 2d 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Recorded recollection.

During defendant's trial for aggravated DUI, the trial court did not err under Miss. R. Evid. 803(5) in finding that a proper evidentiary foundation had been laid when it allowed a nurse to read from a form that was required to be completed by a medical official who drew a blood sample; the nurse's memory was completely exhausted and the nurse was unable to testify in any respect regarding the drawing of defendant's blood. Harness v. State, 58 So. 3d 12 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 2010 Miss. LEXIS 270 (Miss. May 27, 2010), affirmed by 58 So. 3d 1, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 59 (Miss. 2011)supra.

Facts surrounding a victim's statements did not satisfy the requirements for admittance under the recorded recollection rule because although the victim claimed he did not remember what the statements said during direct examination by the State, it was obvious that prior to admitting the statements, the trial court knew that the victim fully remembered the statements and explained to the trial court why he told the police that defendant shot him. Smith v. State, 25 So. 3d 313 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), reversed by 25 So. 3d 264, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 546 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for possession marijuana with the intent to distribute was proper even though the trial court did improperly permit the State to introduce evidence forbidden by Miss. R. Evid. 803(5) because the appellate court was unable to say that the trial court's decision prejudiced defendant's case. Foster v. State, 928 So. 2d 873 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 309 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not err in refusing defense counsel's request to have victim's earlier statement read at trial as defendant had failed to demonstrate that the victim's recollection was insufficient to allow him to testify fully and accurately. Davis v. State, 850 So. 2d 1136 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 828, 124 S. Ct. 57, 157 L. Ed. 2d 53 (2003).

Regularly conducted activity.

Defendant's conviction for fondling a child for the purpose of gratifying his lust was appropriate because although Miss. R. Evid. 803(4) and (6) were broad enough to encompass the reports compiled by the school nurse following her interview with the victim, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the reports since they related to the victim's accusations against her stepfather, not defendant. Furthermore, the circuit court's decision to exclude the reports did not prejudice or adversely affect defendant, especially since the circuit court permitted the school nurse to testify regarding her interview with the victim. Walker v. State, 55 So. 3d 212 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of capital murder and one count of robbery were appropriate because the contents of an actual trace run by the ATF were most likely admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(6). Therefore, any error in allowing a detective to testify regarding the result of the trace was harmless. Minter v. State, 64 So. 3d 518 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 63 So. 3d 1229, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 322 (Miss. 2011).

Car dealership's former business manager's affidavit did not present a meritorious defense to the default judgment since the cancellation worksheet was inadmissible hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 802; the manager failed to qualify the cancellation worksheet as an exception to the hearsay rule pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), or authenticate the worksheet pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902; and because the dealership failed to assert a meritorious defense, its motion to set aside default judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(6) was properly denied. Greater Canton Ford Mercury, Inc. v. Lane, 997 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 2008).

It is not necessary to call or to account for all participants who made a record; thus, admitting both an incident report as well as the testimony of the author of the report is unnecessary. Kroger Co. v. Scott, 809 So. 2d 679 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

An affidavit by a child support enforcement officer regarding contacts with the defendant father was a special document prepared in anticipation of litigation and, therefore, was not admissible under Rule 803(6); the fact that certain information contained in the affidavit was obtained from other records that perhaps could qualify for admissibility under the business records exception to the hearsay rule did not transform the affidavit itself into a business record. Mississippi State Dep't of Human Servs. v. Fargo, 771 So. 2d 935 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for defrauding the Mississippi Department of Public Safety and the Mississippi Tax Commission and uttering forgery arising from the defendant's operation of a business rebuilding salvaged trucks, the court properly allowed a senior special agent with the National Insurance Crime Bureau to testify from insurance investigative files prepared by adjusters from various insurance companies which were members of the the bureau. Logan v. State, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 128 (Miss. May 25, 2000), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

A univiersity police night supervisor was a qualified witness under subsection (6) of this rule where (1) he was present at the time that the victim came in to report the theft of his automobile, (2) he took the victim's oral complaint and then instructed another officer to prepare a written offense report, and (3) just prior to the time the victim appeared to report the theft of his automobile, the supervisor had spoken with a deputy about the possible theft of the very same vehicle and had performed a check of the campus parking decal to determine ownership. Hurt v. State, 757 So. 2d 1102 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Information identifying the location of a particular residence as being within a particular jurisdiction according to official 911 records is admissible under subsection (6) of this rule. Hester v. State, 753 So. 2d 463 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In an action in which a casino patron claimed that she won a jackpot while playing a slot machine, a written report made by a casino employee was properly admitted into evidence where (1) the employee was acting in the course of a regularly conducted activity when she made her report, (2) she made the report as required by casino policy and at the request of her superior, and (3) there was nothing to suggest untrustworthiness other than the plaintiff's allegation that the casino employee moved a reel on the slot machine. Mississippi Gaming Comm'n v. Freeman, 747 So. 2d 231 (Miss. 1999).

Where the only evidence of defendant's age came from the testimony of detective who obtained this information from defendant in an interview, this statement was not admissible under hearsay exception for records of regularly conducted activity, since although detective obtained defendant's age during regular course of investigation, the source was defendant, who was not himself routinely engaged in regularly conducted activity. Fisher v. State, 690 So. 2d 268 (Miss. 1996).

Although the coroner's autopsy report was erroneously admitted through the testimony of the County Medical Examiner, who had not personally conducted autopsy, error was harmless where it was established beyond reasonable doubt by evidence other than autopsy report that victim's cause of death was a gunshot wound inflicted by defendant and his gun. Gossett v. State, 660 So. 2d 1285 (Miss. 1995).

Custodian of crime lab records may introduce laboratory reports, except where defendant objects that his Sixth Amendment right to confront person who prepared the test is being violated, in which case defendant is entitled to have person who conducted the test appear and testify in person. Kettle v. State, 641 So. 2d 746 (Miss. 1994).

Statements of individual who turned guns over to FBI agent, although contained in FBI report, were not admissible under hearsay exception for records of a regularly conducted activity. Minnick v. State, 551 So. 2d 77 (Miss. 1988).

Letter written by physician to plaintiff's attorney, describing plaintiff's complaints and symptoms, as well as physician's diagnosis and treatment, was obviously prepared in anticipation of litigation rather than in course of regularly conducted business activity, and thus it was not admissible under business records exception to hearsay rule. Jones v. Hatchett, 504 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 1987).

State of mind.

Statements that witness overheard a victim make while the witness was on the phone with the victim were properly admitted as they established the victim's state of mind communicated as she experienced the events leading up to a collision. In addition, testimony for an eyewitness regarding the victim being fearful of defendant was not hearsay as the witness never testified regarding what the victim actually told her. Nichols v. State, 27 So. 3d 433 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 70 (Miss. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 97, 178 L. Ed. 2d 61, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 5836, 79 U.S.L.W. 3197 (U.S. 2010).

Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) allowed the admission of the testimony of a decedent's hospital roommate in a medical malpractice suit because her statements concerning the decedent's condition in the hosiptal related to the decedent's then-existing condition. Univ. of Miss. Med. Ctr. v. Johnson, 977 So. 2d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's murder conviction was proper where statements made by the victim prior to her murder were admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) because the statements were more probative on the point for which they were offered by the proponent than any other evidence which the proponent could procure through reasonable efforts, the statements had a high degree of trustworthiness, and the defense was given reasonable notice as to the State's intent to offer them at trial. Dendy v. State, 931 So. 2d 608 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 346 (Miss. 2006).

Letter with handwritten calculations showing the husband's pre-marital individual retirement account balance was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) because there was an indicia of reliability and there was no other evidence on that point. Barnett v. Barnett, 908 So. 2d 833 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trial court did not err in determining that the victim, who was 13 at the time of trial, was a child of tender years pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), because a hearing was conducted outside of the jury that indicated the victim's mental and emotional age was less than 13. Allred v. State, 908 So. 2d 889 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Tender years exception.

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery against his four-year-old daughter was proper, in part under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because the trial judge made an on-the-record determination that the factors favored admissibility of the victim daughter's statements and noted that she had no motive to lie; further, the witnesses testified that the daughter was truthful, more than one person had heard the statements, the statements were spontaneous and were made shortly after the incident, the daughter had made the statements with certainty, there was no evidence that suggestive techniques were used, and, although the daughter was very young, it would have been difficult for her to fabricate such a story. Williams v. State, 35 So. 3d 480 (Miss. 2010).

Because defendant could have recalled the victim after the admission of the Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) testimony but chose not to do so, the admission of this hearsay evidence did not violate his Sixth Amendment, U.S. Const. Amend. VI, right to confront his accuser. Caldwell v. State, 6 So. 3d 1076 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's trial for statutory rape, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the victim's hearsay testimony under the "tender years" exception of Miss. R. Evid 803(25). The trial court weighed its concerns with the victim's credibility against the other circumstances and found substantial indicia of reliability in her hearsay statements, and the reviewing court could not state with a definite and firm conviction that the trial court reached the wrong result pursuant to Miss. R. Evid.103(a). Grimes v. State, 1 So. 3d 951 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery of child under the age of 14 was appropriate because the child victim testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination, and defendant did not challenge the reliability of her statement. Instead, he argued that there was a prejudicial overuse of the tender years exception under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25); however, there was no objection to the repetition of the victim's statement at trial and there was no plain error since most of the witnesses discussed the victim's statement only as it related to the true purpose of their testimony. Carter v. State, 996 So. 2d 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 374, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 43 (Miss. 2009).

During defendant's criminal trial for sexual battery, the trial court did not err by admitting hearsay testimony from three witnesses concerning the child-victim's statements of sexual abuse under the tender years exception of Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). The trial judge determined that the time, content, and circumstances of the victim's statements provided substantial indicia of reliability. Smith v. State, 989 So. 2d 973 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

During defendant's criminal trial for sexual battery, the trial court did not err by admitting the child-victim's responses during her forensic interview under the tender years exception of Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Smith v. State, 989 So. 2d 973 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a sexual battery and touching of a child for lustful purposes case, admission of the out-of-court statements of the four-year-old child victim was proper under the tender years exception of Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) as the statements bore substantial indicia of reliability, and the trial court followed the proper procedure in its determination. Bishop v. State, 982 So. 2d 371 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for fondling his seven-year-old daughter was appropriate, in part pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because the trial judge viewed the video in question and determined that the child's statement was sufficiently reliable. The appellate court found that the record supported the trial judge's ruling; accordingly, there was no error in the admission of the interview conducted between the clinical director and the child. Golden v. State, 984 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case involving defendant's sexual battery and fondling of his stepdaughters, a trial court did not err by allowing hearsay evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) because a trial court heard testimony from the stepdaughters and other witnesses, considered the factors under Rule 803, and relied on the girls' mental and emotional ages. The trial court ultimately determined that the exception only applied to one of the girls. Palmer v. State, 986 So. 2d 328 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 987 So. 2d 451, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2008).

At trial for fondling and sexual battery, it was not error to allowing the child victim's mother to testify as to statements that the victim made to her under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), as the trial court found in a hearing conducted outside the jury's presence that the statements had substantial indicia of reliability, and the victim himself testified at the proceedings. Hodgin v. State, 964 So. 2d 492 (Miss. 2007).

Changing of physical and legal custody of the parties' son from the mother to the father was proper even though the chancellor erred by citing Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) as the basis for allowing the step-grandmother's testimony regarding the son's identification of the mother's new husband, as the person who took the photographs at issue since the chancellor failed to find that the son was unavailable pursuant to Rule 803(25)(b)(2); even without the son's statement identifying the new husband as the photographer, the photographs themselves as well as the step-grandmother's impression that the son was upset about them clearly supported the chancellor's conclusion that those photographs were inappropriate and indicative of conditions in the custodial home that were adverse to the son's best interests. C.A.M.F. v. J.B.M., 972 So. 2d 656 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 33 (Miss. 2008).

Although a ten-year-old victim's testimony was inconsistent about the exact dates and the places in the house where alleged sexual abuse occurred, a trial court found sufficient indicia of reliability and properly admitted evidence of her statement to her mother, a social worker, and a criminal investigator under the tender years exception in Miss. R. Evid. 803(25); moreover, it properly weighed the 12 factors, the victim was of a tender age at the time and had no apparent motive to lie, the timing of the statement was right after the last incident, no one had a faulty recollection, the victim was of a sufficient age to know between right and wrong, she had not accused anyone else, and she was of sufficient age to know that the alleged abuse involved incidents of inappropriate touching. Pryer v. State, 958 So. 2d 818 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a child victim's video statement under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) where the taped statement was of an interview between the victim and her counselor and the victim's statements were responses to open-ended questions. Penny v. State, 960 So. 2d 533 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 384 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 386 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for sexual battery in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95 was proper because, without more, the victim's use of the "I have a friend" approach in a letter, did not cast doubt on her credibility, and thus the appellate court was unable to find reversible error in permitting testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Larson v. State, 957 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 958 So. 2d 1232, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 318 (Miss. 2007).

For the tender years hearsay exception in Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) to apply, the child must be of tender years, and there is a rebuttable presumption that children under 12 years of age are within their tender years; the child's age at the time of the statement, rather than her age at trial, is the relevant age used to determine if the tender years exception applies. Klauk v. State, 940 So. 2d 954 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

While a trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony under the tender years exception, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), without first finding, in a hearing conducted outside the presence of the jury, that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement provided a substantial indicia of reliability, the error was harmless where the victim testified that defendant touched her between her legs, both on the outside and inside of her clothing, on several occasions, detailing the place and circumstances of the incidents. Klauk v. State, 940 So. 2d 954 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court had not erred by allowing the statements of 5 year-old rape victim to be brought before the jury through the testimony of medical professionals who examined or interviewed her because the victim's statements were squarely within the tender years exception to hearsay as provided by Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). There was no doubt that the overwhelming physical evidence of abuse to the child's person corroborated the statements by her alleging sexual abuse and her comments, spontaneously made to a number of professionals trained to detect abuse and its effects, showed an overwhelming sense of adult knowledge of sexual topics of which children in their earliest years should have no knowledge. Foley v. State, 914 So. 2d 677 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's conviction for statutory rape in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(1)(b) was proper where the circuit court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of the victim into evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), the "tender years exception," because it appeared that the victim knew the difference in truth and imagination. Further, the record showed that the State established all of the elements of the statutory rape charge. Withers v. State, 907 So. 2d 342 (Miss. 2005).

During defendant's trial for sexual battery of a child, the court did not err in admitting the child's hearsay statements pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) concerning the cause of the child's injuries; the judge conducted the required hearing outside the presence of the jury, accepted testimony and made extensive findings as to the factors required for ascertaining the veracity of the declarant's testimony. Renfrow v. State, 882 So. 2d 800 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was accused of raping his girlfriend's 10-year-old daughter, the trial judge did not err in admitting statements pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), the tender years exception, because although the minor victim was 12 years of age at the time of trial, she was 10 years old when the incident occurred; the judge conducted the required hearing, out of the jury's presence; and the judge accepted testimony and made extensive findings on the factors necessary to ascertain the veracity of the declarant's testimony. Sanderson v. State, 872 So. 2d 735 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting the statements the victim had made to her school counselor shortly after the assault as the victim was nine when the statements were made and were admissible under the tender years hearsay exception in Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Davis v. State, 878 So. 2d 1020 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 880, 160 L. Ed. 2d 773 (2005).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting a child victim's hearsay testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) where the judge evaluated the testimony under the seven so-called Wright factors for evaluating substantial indicia of reliability. Those factors include: (1) whether there is an apparent motive on declarant's part to lie; (2) the general character of the declarant; (3) whether more than one person heard the statements; (4) whether the statements were made spontaneously; (5) the timing of the declarations; (6) the relationship between the declarant and the witness; (7) the possibility of the declarant's faulty recollection is remote; (8) certainty that the statements were made; (9) the credibility of the person testifying about the statements; (10) the age or maturity of the declarant; (11) whether suggestive techniques were used in eliciting the statement; and (12) whether the declarant's age, knowledge, and experience make it unlikely that the declarant fabricated. Renfrow v. State, 863 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Hearsay evidence, including statements made by the child victim, were properly admitted where the trial court made extensive findings as to the factors necessary to ascertain the veracity of the child's testimony, the trial court did conduct a hearing outside the presence of the jury with regard to the victim and each witness that would be testifying under the exception, and made extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law. Wright v. State, 859 So. 2d 1028 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, because the trial judge had previously heard argument, outside the presence of the jury, on the reliability of the child victim's statements, which described sexual contact with defendant father and the victim had previously testified regarding the statement, although perhaps cumulative, allowing defendant father's other son to testify to the victim's statement was not erroneous under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) and 801(d)(1)(B), especially since the son had solicited the statement from the victim, and defense attorneys had attacked the victim's credibility; thus, Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) was not violated. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

Where a grandmother sought temporary custody of her minor grandchild based on the child's allegedly having been sexually abused, the child testified, and both sides presented expert testimony to provide the chancellor with knowledge regarding the factors set forth in Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), the chancellor's error, if any, in admitting such expert testimony was harmless. E. J. M. v. A. J. M., 846 So. 2d 289 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

While pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) the judge should have made findings at the initial pretrial presentation of defendant's motion in limine that he subsequently made during the trial outside of the jury's presence, there was no error or resulting prejudice because the judge was well aware that he was to conduct a hearing. Byars v. State, 835 So. 2d 965 (Miss. Ct. App. January 28, 2003).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting the child's victim testimony under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) where the judge found that the child was 11 at the time of the assault and was able to convey with specificity the details of the assaults; the child was permitted to merely repeat the account to her mother, this was not an act of telling her mother what happened was a corroboration. Byars v. State, 835 So. 2d 965 (Miss. Ct. App. January 28, 2003).

Under subsection (25), the trial court did not err in finding the child victim to be of tender years, as the child was unable to express herself clearly about the alleged molestation; the trial court expressly ruled on the teacher's testimony and indicia of reliability, finding that there was no motive to lie, her character was not in dispute, the statements were spontaneous, the teacher and the victim had a teacher-child relationship, and her testimony was credible. Shirley v. State, 843 So. 2d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 842 So. 2d 578 (Miss. 2003).

In defendant's trial for sexually abusing a young boy, the trial court erred in permitting testimony from the father and counselor of a young girl, who alleged defendant had sexually molested her prior to the incident for which defendant was accused, because the alleged incident with the girl had occurred more than a year before the alleged incident with the boy. Earnest v. State, 805 So. 2d 599 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Testimony by a child of tender years, was admissible where judge correctly considered the credibility and age of the person testifying, and whether suggestive techniques were used. B.R.C. v. State, 795 So. 2d 526 (Miss. 2001).

Hearsay testimony of a child victim's account of her sexual abuse by her stepfather was properly admitted, since the trial judge made a full and adequate inquiry into the factors set forth in this rule; that the record did not contain his findings was harmless error. Rowlett v. State, 791 So. 2d 319 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001), cert. dismissed, 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 46 (Miss. 2007).

In prosecution for touching, handling, and feeling a child for lustful purposes, admission of 13-year-old victim's hearsay statements to a social worker without a hearing to determine "substantial indicia of reliability" was harmless error because the corroborating evidence, exhibits, and the victim's testimony outweighed any error. Carson v. State, 826 So. 2d 96 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Where defendant was charged with the crime of touching a child for lustful purposes child victim's hearsay statements to an investigator concerning abuse were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25). Givens v. State, 730 So. 2d 81 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the tender years exception applied to allow the introduction of out-of-court statements of a 13-year-old girl in a prosecution for statutory rape. Hayes v. State, 803 So. 2d 473 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The rule does not require written notice of a hearing; it only requires that a hearing be conducted. Hayes v. State, 803 So. 2d 473 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a 10-year-old child, the out-of-court statements of the child were properly admitted under the tender years exception where (1) the trial judge ascertained that the child had absolutely no reason to lie about what happened to her, (2) the evidence revealed that her statement was the same each time she related it to a new person, and (3) the child used terminology such as "private parts" and "bottom" to tell of the incident, as a child would be likely to do. Marshall v. State, 812 So. 2d 1068 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A statement by a six-year-old child that her two uncles and her dad were "messing with her" was sufficiently spontaneous to be admissible under the tender years exception where the child's aunt testified that she observed the child walking with a limp, that she asked her if anyone was touching her in the wrong way, and the statement was made in response to that question. Bell v. State, 797 So. 2d 945 (Miss. 2001).

The list of factors to be examined with regard to the tender years exception is not exclusive, and there is no requirement that each factor be listed and discussed separately by the trial judge. Bosarge v. State, 786 So. 2d 426 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for unlawful touching of a minor for lustful purposes, the taped statement made by the minor victim to a police officer was properly admitted into evidence under subsection (25) where the trial court conducted a hearing outside the presence of the jury, specifically received evidence and arguments on the twelve factors relevant to subsection (25), and, after an on-the-record analysis of these factors, ruled that the testimony properly fell under the exception. Lawler v. State, 770 So. 2d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the county department of human services failed to show that the children at issue were unavailable and, therefore, their prior statements were not admissible under the tender years exception to the hearsay rule, where the department failed to show that there was no reasonable alternative means of testifying, such as closed-circuit television or videotape deposition, that would eliminate the trauma that would have been caused by in-person testimony in the presence of their parents. J. L. W. W. v. Clarke County Dep't of Human Servs., 759 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for sexual battery, statements made by the child/victim to her mother and to a police investigator were admissible under the tender years exception to the hearsay rule. Mullins v. State, 757 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for sexual battery, the victim's mother was properly permitted to testify regarding statements made by the victim to her regarding the sexual contact initiated by the defendant, notwithstanding the defendant's assertion that his right of confrontation was thereby violated, since the testimony was proper under subsection (25) of this rule, and because the victim also testified and the defendant cross examined both the victim and her mother. Knight v. State, 751 So. 2d 1144 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for gratification of lust by touching or rubbing a child under the age of fourteen years, the trial court properly admitted out-of-court statements made by the alleged victim recounting her version of the defendant's activities to a DHS case worker, a treating physician, and a licensed social worker where the trial court noted that the child had, in fact, testified at the trial and then engaged in a detailed on-the-record analysis of the twelve factors mentioned in the comment to this rule that bear on the question of whether the time, content, and circumstances of the statement provided substantial indicia of reliability and then concluded, on balance, that the factors weighed in favor of admission of the evidence. Haire v. State, 749 So. 2d 1130 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

It is the age of the child at the time of the statement, rather than the age of the child at the time of trial, that is relevant to this exception. McGowan v. State, 742 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

There is a rebuttable presumption that a child under 12 is of tender years; where a person is 12 or older, a trial court must make a factual determination as to whether that person is of tender years based on mental age. Veasley v. State, 735 So. 2d 432 (Miss. 1999).

Trial judge did not err in allowing an experienced, educated social worker to testify regarding children's allegations against defendant, where judge conducted required hearing outside presence of jury, and children testified and were cross-examined thoroughly by defendant. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

While no mechanical test is available, factors which should be considered in judging reliability of statement under subdivision (25) of this rule are: spontaneity and consistent repetition; mental state of declarant; use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age; and lack of motive to fabricate. Eakes v. State, 665 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 1995).

In a prosecution for gratification of lust, the court properly allowed the victim's mother and her teacher to testify to statements made by the victim with regard to sexual conduct by the defendant since there was sufficient evidence of reliability and there was sufficient support in the record for a finding of reliability, notwithstanding the trial court's failure to mention the relevant factors in its determination that the statements were inherently reliable. Jackson v. State, 743 So. 2d 1008 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Chancellor did not err in determining that certain hearsay statements of three-year-old child, implicating father as perpetrator of her sexual abuse, were admissible; chancellor found substantial indicia of reliability, on the record, using factors enumerated within subdivision (25) of this rule, and these findings were supported by substantial credible evidence. Doe v. Doe, 644 So. 2d 1199 (Miss. 1994).

Finding of substantial indicia of reliability, under subdivision (25) of this rule, is necessary to prevent confrontation clause problems, and reliability is not to be judged in light of other corroborating evidence, or else the confrontation clause may be violated. Doe v. Doe, 644 So. 2d 1199 (Miss. 1994).

Then-existing mental condition.

Trial court erred by allowing a witness to testify to statements made by the deceased victim the week before the murder regarding her intention to evict defendant from her home as the statements did not fall within Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) as the statements did not describe the declarant's then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition, but the error was harmless given the surviving victim's testimony that he saw defendant set fire to the home. McIntosh v. State, 917 So. 2d 78 (Miss. 2005).

Investigator properly testified that persons he interviewed were both frightened because Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) provides that the then-existing mental or emotional condition of a declarant is not excluded by the hearsay rule. Brown v. State, 890 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1842, 161 L. Ed. 2d 735 (2005).

In a depraved-heart murder case, although the trial court erred in sustaining the prosecution's objection to evidence of the victim's statement showing that he was the aggressor because it was a statement of a then-existing mental condition or state of mind, the error was harmless as the jury had sufficient evidence from eyewitness testimony of the victim's conduct before the fight began. Harris v. State, 861 So. 2d 1003 (Miss. 2003).

Insufficient evidence pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) existed to make the question of undue influence one for the jury; from no one contemporaneously involved as a party in interest, as the attorney, or as a bystander, was there any suggestion that the decedent was unaware of what she was doing or that her personal desires had been overwhelmed by someone else. McClendon v. McClendon (In re Estate of Pigg), 877 So. 2d 406 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 66 (Miss. 2004).

Because a witness's statement that the witness overheard the victim tell defendants "let's get it on" right before their fight erupted was relevant to show that the victim intended to fight, the statement qualified as a statement of a then-existing mental condition under Miss. R. Evid. 803(3), and the trial court erred in excluding the testimony. Harris v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 80 (Miss. Feb. 20, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 861 So. 2d 1003, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 872 (Miss. 2003).

In a divorce proceeding, it was error for the court to exclude testimony by the wife regarding statements by the parties' nine-year-old daughter about her fears and stomach pains; such testimony was admissible under the exceptions for present sense impression, excited utterance, and then existing mental, emotional, or physical conditions. Holladay v. Holladay, 776 So. 2d 662 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder, the victim's girlfriend was properly permitted to testify that, on the morning of the crime, the victim told her that he was going to pick up "Jerry," the defendant, on his way to work as such statement was admissible under subsection (3) as proof of his plan or intent to pick "Jerry" up that particular morning. Bogan v. State, 754 So. 2d 1289 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle accident, a letter from the plaintiff's deceased treating physician to the plaintiff's attorney expressing an opinion that the plaintiff was permanently disabled as a result of the accident was not admissible under subsection (4) since the plaintiff's complaints were not the subject of the letter and it could not be said that the letter was a statement consistent with the purposes of promoting the plaintiff's treatment. Gilbert v. Ireland, 758 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for murder and aggravated assault arising from the stabbing death of one victim and stabbing of her four year old child, the child's treating physician at the emergency room was properly permitted to testify that the child identified the defendant as the assailant pursuant to the exception for statements by young victims of physical abuse not necessarily sexual in nature. Barnett v. State, 757 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a divorce proceeding, it was error for the court to allow the introduction into evidence of a letter from a doctor pertaining to the medical condition of the father, by which the father attempted to show that his disability had no effect on his ability to care for his children, as the letter did not pertain to a diagnosis and was drafted specifically for litigation. Caswell v. Caswell, 763 So. 2d 890 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Decedent's statement to her friend that she was afraid she was going to be beaten by a man with the same first name as defendant should have been admitted to show decedent's then existing mental condition. Parker v. State, 606 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. 1992).

Trustworthiness.

Finding against the heir in her wrongful death action was proper where statements made by the decedent regarding what the physician instructed him to do were rightfully excluded. The treatment that the physician provided was located in the medical records and since this was the party to whom the deceased made the statement, there was a lack of trustworthiness; thus, those statements did not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) or Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5). Richardson ex rel. Wrongful Death Heirs of Richardson v. DeRouen, 920 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Regardless of whether the residuum rule was applied or not, there was substantial, credible, corroborated evidence of a claimant's multiple acts of insubordination constituting "misconduct" contained in summaries of personnel records based on personal knowledge which were a proper basis for denying unemployment benefits to the claimant; that testimony revealed that many of the relevant records were based on the personal knowledge of the preparer of the individual complaints against the claimant pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) cmt. McClinton v. Miss. Dep't of Empl. Sec., 949 So. 2d 805 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's capital murder convictions were proper where testimony admitted by one of the decedent's sister involving an insurance scam with defendant was correctly admitted pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 403, 404(b), and 804(b)(5) because the declarant was unavailable and because the trial court analyzed the five requirements for admission of the hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) and determined that it was trustworthy and material to the case. Rubenstein v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 789 (Miss. Dec. 1, 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. Aug. 10, 2006), substituted opinion at, remanded by 941 So. 2d 735, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by not requiring an expert to analyze and testify to the chemical analysis of the ingredients in cold medicine as the evidence was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) as the medicine had a label that was made in normal process of nationwide manufacturing and distribution by an established pharmaceutical company, thus, the label as to the medicine's ingredients had substantial indicia of trustworthiness. Burchfield v. State, 892 So. 2d 248 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), aff'd, 892 So. 2d 191 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court had more than sufficient evidence before it, none of which was contradicted or even impeached during the hearing on a motion in limine regarding child victim's extrajudicial statements on the alleged sexual abuse, to conclude that the child's statements had sufficient indicia of reliability to overcome a hearsay objection and be admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25), including the fact that the child related the events to a social worker without a great deal of prompting or prodding and told what happened in some detail in her own words, and the child was ten years old at the time. Sharp v. State, 862 So. 2d 576 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court properly barred the admission of the county forester's report into evidence where it stated that a fire was caused by a power line as the opinion was given by a person not qualified to offer such an opinion and no showing was made that the statement was trustworthy. Redhead v. Entergy Miss., Inc., 828 So. 2d 801 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Illustrative cases.

In a rape case, admission under Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) of a witness's testimony that the victim told him she had been raped by defendant was error as the statement did not relate to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of her will. But, the error was harmless since the properly admitted evidence was more than sufficient to convict. Ben v. State, — So. 2d —, 2011 Miss. App. LEXIS 298 (Miss. Ct. App. May 31, 2011), affirmed by 2012 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. Aug. 23, 2012).

Trial court did not err in allowing a child rape victim's hearsay statements to be admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(25) in defendant's statutory rape trial as the victim was eleven years old when she told her mother and aunt that defendant had been having sexual intercourse with her, the statements were spontaneous and consistently repeated, the victim's mental stated seemed to be one of a person who would not fabricate, the victim seemed to be of the character that would be able to relate things reliably to those she to whom she was speaking, more than one person had heard the statements, her relationships to the witnesses showed reliability, the possibility of a faulty recollection was remote, and the people giving the statements seemed to be credible. Anderson v. State, 62 So. 3d 927 (Miss. 2011).

In a wrongful death action, there was support that relevant journal entries were as a whole contemporaneous, so the trial court did not commit reversible error in admitting the journal. Mariner Health Care, Inc. v. Estate of Edwards, 964 So. 2d 1138 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for murdering the victim by deliberate design was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) because the statements that witnesses overheard defendant make to the victim and the victim make to defendant just before the right began were relevant to show that defendant intended to fight and might have been the initial aggressor; thus, the appellate court was unable to find error in the trial court's admission of that testimony. Council v. State, 976 So. 2d 889 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 74 (Miss. 2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining the hearsay objection as to whether anyone stated that defendant or his accomplice were attempting to steal a car where defendant argued that the testimony would have constituted a hearsay exception as to the declarant's intent, plan, or motive to do something in the future under Miss. R. Evid. 803(3); however, the exclusion of that testimony was not grounds for reversal because it did not affect any of defendant's substantial rights as it was not necessary to his defense. White v. State, 969 So. 2d 72 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 658 (Miss. 2007).

Where the prosecution had established through the victim's friend's testimony that the victim was upset and crying when she made certain statements, and that he had arrived between 30 and 35 minutes from the time the rape occurred, the testimony was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1), (3). Wright v. State, 958 So. 2d 158 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 964 So. 2d 508, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 501 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine was inappropriate because the state failed to present evidence that identified the people on the tape in question; insufficient evidence of the context of the anonymous declarant's statements was established to enable the appellate court's assessment of the applicability of hearsay exceptions under Miss. R. Evid. 803. Brown v. State, 969 So. 2d 891 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 969 So. 2d 855, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by refusing to admit the defendant's statement to a woman that the victim had threatened to kill him because the statement would serve defendant's argument at trial that his actions were in self-defense and thus were self-serving and properly excluded by the trial judge pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) and Miss. R. Evid. 805. Ward v. State, 935 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 936 So. 2d 367, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 414 (Miss. 2006).

In a child custody case, the trial court properly excluded an answering machine tape containing a message from tending to show that the mother was considered to be mentally unstable. The tape was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24), because the proponent of the hearsay evidence did not make his intention to offer the evidence known to the other party in advance of the trial. Balius v. Gaines, 908 So. 2d 791 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 495 (Miss. 2005).

Court properly disallowed defendant's proffered hearsay testimony because the declarant was not under subpoena to appear at trial and defendant made no efforts to procure his attendance, and a presumption or suspicion that a witness would assert his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to testify was insufficient to declare a witness unavailable. The witness must be called to the stand and there refuse to testify before he became unavailable due to invoking the Fifth Amendment. Cochran v. State, 913 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a murder trial, the trial court properly declined to enter a sua sponte limiting instruction on prior bad acts offered under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), as the evidence was not offered for that reason, but rather to show the victim's state of mind under Miss. R. Evid. 803 and 804, and the limiting instruction rule was therefore not applicable. Reed v. State, 863 So. 2d 981 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Because little time passed between the time a defendant's accomplice entered a car and his statement to a witness implicating defendant in a murder, the statement was sufficiently contemporaneous to fit within the present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule and was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 803(1). Wells v. State, 849 So. 2d 1231 (Miss. 2003).

Witness's testimony about a defendant's accomplice's statement implicating defendant in a murder was admissible as an excited utterance under Miss. R. Evid. 803(2), as the accomplice made the statement while still under the stress of startling events. Wells v. State, 849 So. 2d 1231 (Miss. 2003).

Testimony by two narcotics agents as to what they heard defendant and a coconspirator say during a drug transaction was admissible because this testimony was not hearsay but rather an admission by a party-opponent under Miss. R. Evid.

801(d)(2)(E); defense counsel had objected numerous times citing the testimony as hearsay not under any exception under Miss. R. Evid. 803. Towner v. State, 837 So. 2d 221 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a wrongful death action, it was not contested that the decedent had received a copy of the drilling company's handbook which referenced the safety manual, and that both addressed fall protection. The handbook and manual would have shown the decedent's state of mind, and the extent of his exercise of reasonable care, and the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the handbook, manual and accompanying deposition testimony. Crane Co. v. Kitzinger, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. Jan. 30, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded en banc by 860 So. 2d 1196, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 689 (Miss. 2003).

Testimony that a murder victim, while speaking on the phone, told the witness that he saw defendant standing outside his apartment with a gun and that he was frightened was properly admitted as a present sense impression and an excited utterance (Miss. R. Evid. 803(1) and (2), respectively). Cox v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. Mar. 13, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 849 So. 2d 1257, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 337 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not admit hearsay testimony that did not comply with the provisions of Miss. R. Evid. 804(a) & (b) where the record reflected that when the State questioned the victim's mother as to what the victim told her had happened in a prior altercation between the victim and defendant, the trial court sustained defendant's objection before the mother answered and did not allow the testimony. Simmons v. State, 813 So. 2d 710 (Miss. 2002).

Co-defendants' written and video statements were not properly admitted under the rule in Seales v. State, 495 So. 2d 475 (Miss. 1986), because they did not contain the necessary "indicia of reliability" required for admissibility; neither defendant testified at trial, and the non-corroborating statements were more self-serving than self-inculpatory. Smith v. State, 754 So. 2d 1159 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 804. Hearsay exceptions; declarant unavailable.

(a) Definition of unavailability. "Unavailability as a witness" includes situations in which the declarant:

(1) Is exempted by ruling of the court on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of his statement; or

(2) Persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of his statement despite an order of the court to do so; or

(3) Testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his statement; or

(4) Is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; or

(5) Is absent from the hearing and the proponent of his statement has been unable to procure his attendance (or in the case of a hearsay exception under subdivision (b)(2), (3), or (4), his attendance or testimony) by process or other reasonable means; or

(6) In the case of a child, because of the substantial likelihood that the emotional or psychological health of the witness would be substantially impaired if the child had to testify in the physical presence of the accused.

A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if his exemption, refusal, claim of lack of memory, inability, or absence is due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of his statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying.

(b) Hearsay exceptions. The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(1) Former testimony. Testimony given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or, in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination.

(2) Statement under belief of impending death. In a prosecution for homicide or in a civil action or proceeding, a statement made by a declarant while believing that his death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what he believed to be his impending death.

(3) Statement against interest. A statement which was at the time of its making so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest, or so far tended to subject him to civil or criminal liability, or to render invalid a claim by him against another, that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true. A statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate the accused is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement.

(4) Statement of personal or family history. (A) A statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history, even though declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated; or (B) a statement concerning the foregoing matters, and death also, of another person, if the declarant was related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared.

(5) Other exceptions. A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

(6) Forfeiture by wrongdoing. A statement offered against a party that has engaged or acquiesced in wrongdoing that was intended to, and did, procure the unavailability of the declarant as a witness. (Amended effective March 27, 1991; amended effective July 1, 2009 to add subsection (6).)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective March 27, 1991, Rule 804(a) was amended to add a sixth definition of unavailability applicable only to child declarants, Rule 804(a)(6). 574-576 So. 2d XXVIII (West Miss. Cas. 1991).

COMMENT

(a) — In defining unavailability, the rule lists six situations in which unavailability exists:

(1) When the witness exercises a privilege, the witness is deemed to be unavailable as to the portion of the witness's testimony which is covered by the claimed privilege. The trial court, however, may first make a preliminary determination that the witness has the right to claim the privilege asserted.

(2) When a witness refuses to testify, despite being ordered to do so by the court, the witness is deemed unavailable.

(3) If the witness testifies that the witness has a lack of memory as to the subject matter under inquiry, the witness is deemed to be unavailable.

(4) Death and sickness render a witness unavailable. See Paulk v. Housing Authority of Tupelo, 228 So.2d 871 (Miss. 1969), and Home Ins. Co. v. Gerlach, 220 Miss. 732, 71 So.2d 787 (1954).

(5) Absence of the witness from the hearing accompanied by an inability of the proponent of the evidence to compel the witness's presence is within the definition of unavailability. Nothing in Rule 804, however, affects the admissibility of depositions otherwise admissible under M.R.C.P. 32 (a)(3)(B).

(6) The rationale for this definition of unavailability is based on the recognition of child trauma.

A finding of unavailability and indicia of reliability should be made on the record.

If, however, the proponent of the evidence is responsible for the existence of any of the aforementioned conditions, the condition of unavailability for the purposes of Rule 804 is not satisfied.

(b)(1) Former Testimony. — An essential ingredient of the former testimony exception has always been the unavailability of the declarant.

Rule 804(b)(1) permits the prior testimony to be offered (1) against the party against whom it was previously offered or (2) against the party who offered it previously. Thus, the rule equates the direct and redirect examination of one's own witness with the cross-examination of an adversarial witness.

It is not required that the former testimony be in an earlier proceeding of the same case. It is only essential that the party against whom it is directed had a similar motive and an opportunity to develop the testimony on the previous occasion. The rule does not speak in terms of identity of issues. Identity of issues is only important because it bears on motive. Thus, the rule deletes the law common phrase "identity of issues" and substitutes "motive" and "opportunity."

(b)(2) Statement Under Belief of Impending Death. — The rule allows for the dying declaration to be used in homicide cases and in civil actions, but it is not available in non-homicide criminal actions.

(b)(3) Statement Against Interest. — Rule 804(b)(3) expands the common law exception of declaration against interest. Traditionally, courts have recognized two declarations against interest, pecuniary and proprietary. The rule extends the exception to declarations against penal interest on the theory that such declarations are reliable. No reasonable person would make such a statement and invite possible criminal prosecution if the statement were not true.

The second sentence of the rule is concerned with hearsay which inculpates the declarant but exculpates the criminal defendant. Unless such a statement can be corroborated as reliable, it will be excluded.

(b)(4) Statement of Personal or Family History. — This rule is similar to Rule 803(19). The distinguishing feature is that the statements under Rule 804(b)(4) are statements made by unavailable declarants concerning their own personal and family history or that of a family member or intimate associate. Rule 803(19) focuses more on reputation.

(b)(5) — This rule is identical to Rule 803(24) in both language and intent.

(b)(6) Forfeiture by Wrongdoing. — Rule 804(b)(6) provides that a party forfeits the right to object on hearsay grounds to the admission of a declarant's prior statement when the party's deliberate wrongdoing or acquiescence therein procured the unavailability of the declarant as a witness. This recognizes the need for a prophylactic rule to deal with abhorrent behavior "which strikes at the heart of the system of justice itself." United States v. Mastrangelo, 693 F.2d 269, 273 (2d Cir.1982), cert. denied, 104 S.Ct. 2385 (1984). Davis v. Washington, 126 S. Ct. 2266, 2280 (2006) ("While defendants have no duty to assist the State in proving their guilt, they do have the duty to refrain from acting in ways that destroy the integrity of the criminal-trial system."). Likewise, a party forfeits rights under the Confrontation Clause when misconduct attributable to a party causes a witness's absence. U.S. v. Carson, 455 F.3d 336 (C.A.D.C. 2006) (wrongdoing by co-conspirators). The wrongdoing need not consist of a criminal act and the rule applies to all parties, including the government.

When any of the hearsay exceptions in Rule 804 are applied in a criminal case, the rights of the defendant under the Confrontations Clauses of Federal and State Constitutions must be respected. *Crawford v. Circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness.

In an armed robbery case, a police officer was properly allowed to testify to what a victim stated even though none of the exceptions under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(1-4) applied after the witness was found to be unavailable, because Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5) applied; a challenge to trustworthiness was rejected since the statement was given to a police officer immediately after the commission of the crime by a person with no apparent reason to lie. Carter v. State, 965 So. 2d 705 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a matter arising out of a car accident, a trial court determined that a witness was not available because he was deceased; the car's driver argued that the trial court failed to make a determination of trustworthiness about the witness's out-of-court statements, and even though an employee who was driving a truck involved in the accident and his employer should have given longer notice of their intent to use the statement, the driver had taken the statement, and she was in possession of it for years, and the witness's statements were consistent. Etheridge v. Harold Case & Co., 960 So. 2d 474 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 383 (Miss. 2007).

Because there were three different versions of the co-conspirator's statement, there would have been a need for cross-examination at trial, but the co-conspirator invoked the Fifth Amendment. Therefore, the hearsay rule barred admission of the co-conspirator's statement that another perpetrator besides defendant had a handgun in their possession at the time of the murder, due to lack of trustworthiness. Jacobs v. State, 870 So. 2d 1202 (Miss. 2004).

Guarantee of a statement's trustworthiness must derive from circumstances under which it was made. Jones v. Hatchett, 504 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 1987).

Letter written by physician to plaintiff's attorney, describing plaintiff's complaints and symptoms, as well as physician's diagnosis and treatment, was not admissible under residual exception to the hearsay rule; physician was deceased at time of trial, and there were no sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness in the letter, where it was written in anticipation of litigation and was precisely the type of unsworn, unconfronted testimony which the hearsay rule prohibited. Jones v. Hatchett, 504 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 1987).

Death.

Trial court erred in excluding hearsay statement made by murder victim to her friend on night of murder; defense clearly needed this evidence as it was unavailable from any other source, and there was no reason to doubt trustworthiness of the statement. Parker v. State, 606 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. 1992).

Transcript of interview with decedent prior to his death was admissible, where it was the only available evidence of his version of how accident happened, and it was in the interest of justice and to serve purpose of the rules to allow his statement. Motorola Communications & Elecs., Inc. v. Wilkerson, 555 So. 2d 713 (Miss. 1989).

Dying declarations.

Defendant's murder conviction for the killing of his grandmother was proper because her account of what happened was properly presented as a dying declaration under Mississippi Rule of Evidence 804(b)(2) and as a present-sense impression under Mississippi Rule of Evidence 803(1). The first thing that the grandmother told the officer when he arrived at her home was that defendant had shot her; thinking that she would die and wanting whoever found her and defendant's grandfather to know who had killed them, the grandmother scrawled writings in her own blood in the hallway leading to the stairwell. Sanders v. State, 63 So. 3d 554 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), affirmed by 63 So. 3d 497, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 193 (Miss. 2011).

Circuit court did not err in admitting into evidence a man's statement as a dying declaration under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(2) because the record indicated that the man could have known of his impending death and that he had no hope of recovery even if not specifically expressed by him. The man made his statement to a police officer after he was shot and as he was falling in and out of consciousness. Trotter v. State, 9 So. 3d 402 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Record disclosed that the victim repeatedly made the statement, "Please don't let me die" to medical personnel; these statements could certainly be considered as evidence that the victim understood the gravity of his situation and there was no error in the admission of the victim's statement as a dying declaration under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(2). Nichols v. State, 965 So. 2d 770 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a murder prosecution, although it was proper for a witness to testify to statements made by the victim that he might be dying and that he wanted to tell his daughter that he loved her, it was improper for the witness to testify that an unidentified bystander told her that the victim then identified "Rodney" as his assailant. Jones v. State, 763 So. 2d 210 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Statements made by a murder victim that identified his killer constituted dying declarations where the statements were made at various times between the shooting of the victim and his death 29 days later, the victim's condition never improved during that time, the doctors never gave the victim any hope of recovery, and the victim also stated that he knew he would never go home. Morris v. State, 777 So. 2d 16 (Miss. 2000).

Former testimony.

Under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(1), former testimony was admissible if the party against whom the testimony was now offered had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination, and the declarant had to be unavailable; the trial judge ruled that the son had no opportunity to cross-examine the owners' witness and as a result, the deposition failed to meet the requirements under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(1). Gibson v. Wright, 870 So. 2d 1250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a capital murder case, the inmate's counsel were not ineffective for failing to challenge the testimony of the county sheriff who was in charge of the investigation of the inmate because (1) the trial court's refusal to admit evidence of the sheriff's conviction seven years after his testimony in the inmate's case was not an abuse of discretion under Miss. R. Evid. 609(a)(1); (2) the sheriff's prior testimony was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 804; (3) the inmate's confrontation clause rights were not violated because he had been present when the testimony was given and was able to confront the sheriff; and (4) evidence from a civil lawsuit involving one of the sheriff's deputies could have done little harm to the sheriff's credibility. Wilcher v. State, 863 So. 2d 776 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 124 S. Ct. 2917, 159 L. Ed. 2d 821 (2004).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a witness, who was pregnant and due to deliver the week of trial, from an earlier trial, because her testimony was not indicative of defendant's guilt and merely set the stage. Howard v. State, 853 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1197, 124 S. Ct. 1455, 158 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2004).

Testimony by an unavailable former police officer given at the defendant's first trial was properly admitted into evidence under the former testimony exception to the hearsay rule, especially as the defendant had the same attorney at both trials and this attorney thoroughly cross-examined the officer at the first trial. Naylor v. State, 759 So. 2d 406 (Miss. 2000).

A survey ordered to be made in earlier litigation could not be admitted as former testimony where the party seeking to introduce the survey neither identified the surveyor and preparer of the plat nor demonstrated that this person was unavailable as a witness and where the opposing party had no opportunity and similar motive to develop the surveyor's testimony by cross examination. Roebuck v. Massey, 741 So. 2d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Trial judge did not err in allowing State to introduce transcript of three witnesses' testimony from guilt phase of defendant's trial; prosecution took adequate steps to obtain unavailable witnesses' attendance at trial, and their testimony fit within the former testimony exception expressed in subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Russell v. State, 670 So. 2d 816 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 982, 117 S. Ct. 436, 136 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1996), cert. dismissed, 520 U.S. 1249, 117 S. Ct. 2406, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1064 (1997).

Infirmity.

The incompetency of a convicted perjurer under the former M.R.E. 601 (b) is an "infirmity" for purposes of determining availability of a witness under M.R.E. 804. Stevenson v. State, 733 So. 2d 177 (Miss. 1998).

Notice.

Defendant's conviction for armed robbery was proper where the exclusion of the statement of a witness who was an in-patient at a rehabilitation facility and deemed an unavailable witness to the police was appropriate because the statement lacked the necessary indicia of trustworthiness, was not probative of a material fact but offered solely for impeachment, and defendant did not comply with the notice requirement found in Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5). Peyton v. State, 858 So. 2d 156 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In regard to Miss. R. Evid 804(b)(5)'s notice requirement, when the State is on actual notice, the appellate court will not allow technical violations to override fundamental fairness; where the State does not demonstrate any harm or prejudice resulting from noncompliance with technicalities, fundamental fairness prevails. Randall v. State, 806 So. 2d 185 (Miss. 2001).

Other exceptions.

Finding against the heir in her wrongful death action was proper where statements made by the decedent regarding what the physician instructed him to do were rightfully excluded. The treatment that the physician provided was located in the medical records and since this was the party to whom the deceased made the statement, there was a lack of trustworthiness; thus, those statements did not fall under Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) or Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5). Richardson ex rel. Wrongful Death Heirs of Richardson v. DeRouen, 920 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court did not err when it refused to allow the introduction into evidence of a statement made by a coperpetrator pertaining to cocaine use by the victim, and the victim's criminal record, in order to support the defendant's assertion of self-defense. Thomas v. State, 812 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a proceeding to determine whether a securities account was a tenancy in common or a joint tenancy and, therefore, whether a portion of the account should pass through the will of one of the owners of the account, an audio tape of the deceased instructing how he wished his assets divided was properly admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, especially as the party opposing admission admitted that the voice on the tape was that of the decedent and that she was told of the tape's existence by him prior to his death; the audio recorded statements of the decedent were probative of his state of mind on the date of the recording, and they explained his understanding of the joint accounts. Baker v. Baker, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 262 (Miss. Aug. 19, 1999), subst. op., 760 So. 2d 759 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for the rape of an eight year old child, the catch-all exception of subsection (b)(5) did not permit the introduction into evidence of statements made by the child's aunts that the child had told them that she was being sexually abused by another person, her stepfather, since such statements were irrelevant in determining whether the defendant had raped the child. Taylor v. State, 744 So. 2d 306 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Hearsay testimony, in form of statements made by child sexual abuse victim to police detective, should not have been admitted in absence of findings required by subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. Quimby v. State, 604 So. 2d 741 (Miss. 1992).

Overriding concern, before a hearsay statement may be admitted under a residual exception, is that it has equivalent guarantees of trustworthiness similar to those of other exceptions. Minnick v. State, 551 So. 2d 77 (Miss. 1988).

Personal or family history.

A birth certificate, which stated that a jazz musician who died in 1938 was the father of the appellee, was properly introduced into evidence in a proceeding in which the appellee claimed a share of the musician's estate as it contained sufficient indicia of trustworthiness. Harris v. Johnson, 767 So. 2d 181 (Miss. 2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 959, 121 S. Ct. 1489, 149 L. Ed. 2d 376 (2001).

Physical illness.

Trial court erred in allowing a tape recorded statement of an inmate to be played for a jury because the inmate was unavailable due to medical reasons and was not subject to cross-examination. However, the erroneous admission of the statement did not contribute to the verdict and, therefore, the error was harmless in light of all of the other evidence that was offered at trial. Owen v. State, 43 So. 3d 1146 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 483 (Miss. 2010).

Witness who was not present at trial due to doctor's appointment did not have an "existing physical illness" and was thus not "unavailable" under subdivision (a)(4) of this rule, where offering party presented no medical witnesses or supporting affidavits. Earl v. State, 672 So. 2d 1240 (Miss. 1996).

Residual exception.

Five conditions must be met before evidence is admissible pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5): (1) the adverse party must have notice of intended use; (2) the statement must have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness; (3) it must be offered as evidence of a material fact; (4) it must be more probative than other evidence; and (5) the purpose of the rules and the interests of justice must be best served by admitting the statement; each condition must be met before the hearsay may properly be admitted. Randall v. State, 806 So. 2d 185 (Miss. 2001).

Statement possessed sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness to allow admission where two witness statements given to police about three hours apart in same evening as events witnessed were the same in substance, nothing in record showed witness had relationship with defendants or State or had particular motive, and statements dovetailed with other evidence offered. Randall v. State, 806 So. 2d 185 (Miss. 2001).

In determining whether the proffered hearsay has circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, need is a proper factor; need, however, must be balanced against the trustworthiness of the evidence. Randall v. State, 806 So. 2d 185 (Miss. 2001).

Statement.

Defendant's capital murder convictions were proper where testimony admitted by one of the decedent's sister involving an insurance scam with defendant was correctly admitted pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 403, 404(b), and 804(b)(5) because the declarant was unavailable and because the trial court analyzed the five requirements for admission of the hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(24) and determined that it was trustworthy and material to the case. Rubenstein v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 789 (Miss.

Dec. 1, 2005), opinion withdrawn by 2006 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. Aug. 10, 2006), substituted opinion at, remanded by 941 So. 2d 735, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 411 (Miss. 2006).

— Not in error.

Defendant's armed robbery conviction was proper where admitted hearsay evidence was not in error because the same information was obtained from another witness and was properly admitted as a statement against interest pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). Brown v. State, 868 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 868 So. 2d 345 (Miss. 2004).

Statement against interest.

In defendant's trial for exploitation of children, defendant's wife was not incompetent to testify against defendant because the privilege under Miss. R. Evid. 601(a)(2) and Miss. R. Evid. 504(d) did not apply, as defendant was being prosecuted for a criminal act against a child. Hood v. State, 17 So. 3d 548 (Miss. 2009).

Regardless of the availability of defendant's sister as a witness where if called she would invoke her Fifth Amendment privilege in that she was also charged with capital murder along with defendant, it was improper to exclude testimony of her father as inadmissible hearsay under Miss. R. Evid. 804 because the statements were admissible as statements against interest in that they were sufficiently against the sister's penal interest by indicating her intention to murder her husband, they were sufficiently trustworthy, and they were corroborated by other evidence. Edmonds v. State, 955 So. 2d 787 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 1064, 128 S. Ct. 708, 169 L. Ed. 2d 557, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 12868, 76 U.S.L.W. 3287 (2007).

Where defendant confessed to participating in the wife's plan to murder her husband, she invoked the Fifth Amendment and therefore was an unavailable witness at trial; however, the trial court erred by excluding hearsay statements from her father that "she asked him for a pistol and said that she was tired of her husband beating her up and beating her kids up and that her husband had several hundred thousand dollars in life insurance that would go to her if he were dead," as Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) provided that her statements against penal interest could not be excluded as hearsay. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 7 (Miss. Jan. 4, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 955 So. 2d 787, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 349 (Miss. 2007).

In a murder case, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to bar the hearsay statement attributed to his mother as defendant's confession to his mother was a statement against interest; thus, it was properly allowed into evidence. Brooks v. State, 905 So. 2d 678 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Declarant's statement was a declaration against interest, not an admission against interest, because declarant was not a party to the suit; however, because plaintiffs in a wrongful death/product liability action did not show that the declarant was unavailable to testify at trial, the declaration against interest constituted inadmissible hearsay, but it's admission was harmless error. Yale Materials Handling Corp. v. Brandon, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 180 (Miss. May 23, 2002), dismissed by, opinion withdrawn by 2003 Miss. LEXIS 21 (Miss. Jan. 16, 2003), appeal dismissed by 2003 Miss. LEXIS 47 (Miss. Jan. 16, 2003).

A statement of the codefendant was not admissible under subsection (b)(3), notwithstanding the codefendant's invocation of his right to remain silent when called as a witness by the defendant, where the statement was a claim of self-defense, rather than a statement against interest. Robinson v. State, 758 So. 2d 480 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

A witness could not testify to a statement against interest by the defendant's coperpetrator where he was never subpoenaed to appear and testify during the trial by either side; it was not enough to presume or suspicion that he would assert his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to testify. Slater v. State, 731 So. 2d 1115 (Miss. 1999).

In a murder prosecution, the court did not in excluding an incriminating statement by the codefendant where the statement was the result of a custodial interrogation, the codefendant was mildly retarded, and the codefendant made another inconsistent statement a few days later. Dabney v. State, 717 So. 2d 733 (Miss. 1998).

Invoking privilege against self-incrimination makes a witness unavailable, and any hearsay statements from another witness about what the unavailable witness said may fall within hearsay exception of subdivision (b)(3) of this rule; when a witness invokes his Fifth Amendment right, however, making neither a denial nor an admission, such responses are not the proper subject for impeachment. Blue v. State, 674 So. 2d 1184 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1030, 117 S. Ct. 588, 136 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1996).

Although informant's statement to defendant's attorney tended to expose informant to criminal liability, it was offered to exculpate defendant, and the statement was inadmissible where informant was a convicted perjurer and there was nothing to clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. Turner v. State, 673 So. 2d 382 (Miss. 1996).

Co-defendant's statement that he alone had killed the victims was properly excluded in guilt phase of defendant's trial; co-defendant's motivation did not appear to be to absolve defendant of guilt, where he placed blame for murders on defendant within framework of the same statement, and inconsistencies in co-defendant's statement justified trial judge's finding the statement untrustworthy. Carr v. State, 655 So. 2d 824 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1076, 116 S. Ct. 782, 133 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1996).

Statement exposing declarant to prosecution, and exculpating defendant, was inadmissible hearsay, where there was no showing of corroborating circumstances indicating statement to be trustworthy, declarant was under subpoena and there was no attempt to attach him, or show that he was unavailable as a witness, defense claimed another witness was present when declarant made statement and no effort was made to call her as a witness, and declarant on another occasion denied any involvement in the slaying. Thorson v. State, 653 So. 2d 876 (Miss. 1994).

Resolution adopted by city redevelopment authority, stating that it found fair market value of property to be $865,000, should have been allowed into evidence in eminent domain proceeding as a statement against interest under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. Morley v. Jackson Redevelopment Auth., 632 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. 1994).

Unavailability.

In a suit brought against a water park for injuries a patron sustained while on a water slide, the trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of the patron's mother regarding her discussion the day after the accident with an unidentified employee of the water park. The conversation did not qualify as a statement against interest under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) as there was no evidence that the employee was unavailable, in that there was no evidence that the mother tried to procure the attendance of the employee who made the statement. Boyd v. Magic Golf, 52 So. 3d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

While a prior inconsistent statement of a testifying witness can be used to impeach the witness's credibility, it is not admissible as substantive evidence of the defendant's guilt; the fact that shooting victim changed his testimony after trial, after having unequivocally identifying the shooter in a statement to police, did not lead to the conclusion that he had suffered memory loss so as to be deemed "unavailable" within the meaning of Miss. R. Evid. 804. Smith v. State, 25 So. 3d 264 (Miss. 2009).

Reversal is required in the interest of justice when the prosecution is permitted to introduce an out-of-court hearsay statement for the truth asserted therein as a result of its main witness's professed loss of memory on direct examination; but, when cross-examined, the witness's responses indicate that his loss of memory is entirely fabricated. Not only was defendant entitle to a new trial after a victim's prior statements were improperly admitted as a result of the victim's memory loss seeming to disappear during cross-examination thereby making the victim available again but admission of the victim's statements also violated defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause as defendant did not have an opportunity to cross-examine the victim about his accusations. Smith v. State, 25 So. 3d 313 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), reversed by 25 So. 3d 264, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 546 (Miss. 2009).

Affidavits from the resident's treating physicians, which altered their deposition testimony, clearly were not furnished to the corporation sufficiently in advance of the trial to provide the corporation with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the affidavits, nor did they afford the corporation notice of their intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the affidavits, Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5); the resident attempted, several days into trial, to use affidavits to tailor the doctors' deposition testimony, thereby adversely affecting a substantial right of the corporation to have sufficient advance notice of the information contained in the affidavits before trial. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Strong, 968 So. 2d 410 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of marijuana within a correctional facility was appropriate because the circuit court did not err in not granting defendant's motion to admit prior testimony of an unavailable witness under Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(5) and (b)(1), because, although the witness was deemed to have been "unavailable" under R. 804(a)(5) the most harmful and significant portion of a probationer's prior testimony was that defendant's client told the probationer to lie to an officer; if defendant's investigators attempted to testify that the probationer told them that the client told him to lie, that testimony would have been hearsay within hearsay, which was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 805. Jackson v. State, 962 So. 2d 649 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine was inappropriate because the state failed to present evidence that identified the people on the tape in question; as the declarants were anonymous, the appellate court was unable to assess the applicability of any hearsay exceptions dependant upon the declarant's unavailability as set forth in Miss. R. Evid. 804. Brown v. State, 969 So. 2d 891 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 969 So. 2d 855, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. 2007).

Statement by defendant's father that defendant's half-sister wanted to kill her husband, the victim, was not admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) because it was never proven that the half-sister was unavailable as she was never called to the stand. Furthermore, the statement was not against her penal interest because she had not taken any overt act toward accomplishing the murder. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 88 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 31, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion en banc at, modified and rehearing denied by 955 So. 2d 864, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 311 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was convicted of possession of cocaine with intent to sell, the trial court had not erred by refusing to admit into evidence the guilty plea hearing transcript of the defendant's nephew because of defendant's lack of effort to secure his nephew's attendance until late afternoon on the first day of trial, thus he was not "unavailable" under Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(5) and the plea transcript failed to meet the prior testimony hearsay exception contained in rule 804(b)(1). Jones v. State, 912 So. 2d 501 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a dispute over a construction contract, a trial court did not err in admitting an expert's deposition into evidence because the expert was unavailable due to the fact that the expert was out of state during part of the trial; moreover, the evidence showed that a builder had an opportunity to question the expert about an existing report at the time of the deposition. DiMa Homes, Inc. v. Stuart, 873 So. 2d 140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

A former police officer witness was properly found to be unavailable where (1) officers contacted several law enforcement agencies that the witness was known to have been either employed by or in contact with, (2) those same officers contacted the witness's parents who refused to divulge his location, and (3) the officers also staked out a daycare center that was run by the witness and his wife in the hopes of serving him when he arrived there.

Naylor v. State, 759 So. 2d 406 (Miss. 2000).

— Child witness.

In a sexual battery and touching of a child for lustful purposes case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the four-year-old child victim unavailable to testify in accordance with Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(6) as the evidence presented regarding the likelihood of trauma if the child were to testify in open court was completely uncontradicted. Bishop v. State, 982 So. 2d 371 (Miss. 2008).

The trial court properly determined the substantial likelihood that the emotional or psychological health of the children witnesses would have been substantially impaired if they had had to testify in the physical presence of their mother and her boyfriend at their trial for felony child abuse, and that they were unavailable witnesses under Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(6). Britt v. State, 844 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the county department of human services failed to show that the children at issue were unavailable and, therefore, their prior statements were not admissible under the tender years exception to the hearsay rule, where the department failed to show that there was no reasonable alternative means of testifying, such as closed-circuit television or videotape deposition, that would eliminate the trauma that would have been caused by in-person testimony in the presence of their parents. J. L. W. W. v. Clarke County Dep't of Human Servs., 759 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. 2000).

The procedural requirements of M.R.E. 617 are not incorporated into the "unavailability" analysis of M.R.E. 804(a)(6); thus, whether a party filed a motion under M.R.E. 617 does not affect the determination of whether a child witness was unavailable within the meaning of M.R.E. 804(a)(6). J.L.W.W. v. Clarke County Dep't of Human Servs., — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 476 (Miss. Ct. App. July 20, 1999), affirmed by 759 So. 2d 1183, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 92 (Miss. 2000).

— Found.

Finding in favor of the patient in his medical malpractice action was improper because the conditions for admissibility under Miss. R. Evid. 804 were satisfied with respect to the patient's mother-in-law's statement to a nurse regarding the legitimacy of the patient's claims. Blake v. Clein, 903 So. 2d 710 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not err in finding child victim unavailable as a witness in child sexual abuse case, where there was no substantiated proof that State was responsible for media coverage or that actions by State caused child to refuse to testify. Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Where victim in child sexual abuse case was correctly found unavailable as a witness under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, there was no need for trial court to address his unavailability under subdivision (a)(6). Hennington v. State, 702 So. 2d 403 (Miss. 1997).

Trial judge's determination that prosecution has employed diligent effort in attempting to obtain attendance of a witness will not be disturbed on appeal unless court finds that trial judge abused his discretion in determining that witness was unavailable. Russell v. State, 670 So. 2d 816 (Miss. 1995), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 982, 117 S. Ct. 436, 136 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1996), cert. dismissed, 520 U.S. 1249, 117 S. Ct. 2406, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1064 (1997).

— Not found.

Court properly disallowed defendant's proffered hearsay testimony because the declarant was not under subpoena to appear at trial and defendant made no efforts to procure his attendance, and a presumption or suspicion that a witness would assert his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and refuse to testify was insufficient to declare a witness unavailable. The witness must be called to the stand and there refuse to testify before he became unavailable due to invoking the Fifth Amendment. Cochran v. State, 913 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Testimony of witness in earlier investigatory hearing against attorney was erroneously admitted in later proceeding, where bar counsel neither made a credible showing that witness was unavailable nor showed that she was out of state or located further than 100 miles from hearing site. Emil v. Mississippi Bar, 690 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1997).

Where a son sought to set aside a warranty deed that transferred property from the son's mother to a daughter, the case was properly dismissed for failure to prosecute because, inter alia, (1) there was a significant delay during the litigation, and (2) the daughter was prejudiced because of their mother's intervening death since the purpose of the mother's deposition was not to conduct discovery or elicit testimony for trial. Cox v. Cox, 976 So. 2d 869 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's murder trial, a statement by a witness who had died that defendant's half-sister asked to borrow a gun to shoot a dog was properly denied under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5) because another witness testified to virtually the same information. Edmonds v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 88 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 31, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion en banc at, modified and rehearing denied by 955 So. 2d 864, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 311 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Testimony that defendant had a sexual relationship with one of the victims, his step-son's wife, was properly admitted under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5) because the trial court carefully analyzed the five requirements of trustworthiness, materiality, probative value, interests of justice, and notice; furthermore, defendant failed to object on the basis of the Confrontation Clause. Rubenstein v. State, 941 So. 2d 735 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's hearsay statement under the dying declaration exception, Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(2), because the admission of the statement did not affect a substantial right as provided in Miss. R. Evid. 103(a). Defendant admitted to stabbing the victim, and the only question for the jury was whether the stabbing was done in self-defense. Johnson v. State, 908 So. 2d 758 (Miss. 2005).

In a murder trial, the trial court properly declined to enter a sua sponte limiting instruction on prior bad acts offered under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), as the evidence was not offered for that reason, but rather to show the victim's state of mind under Miss. R. Evid. 803 and 804, and the limiting instruction rule was therefore not applicable. Reed v. State, 863 So. 2d 981 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting the tape-recorded statement of defendant's mother, who was unavailable at the time of trial based on her mental condition, under Miss. R. Evid. 804(b)(5) because (1) the mother was able to give an accurate statement when it was taken and (2) the statement was reliable because she was an eyewitness to the incident where defendant fatally shot defendant's brother, and there was no reason to believe that the mother harbored prejudice against one son or the other; even if it was error for the trial court to have admitted the statement, the error was harmless and there was no violation of the Confrontation Clause under U.S. Const. amend. VI, Miss. Const. art. 3, § 26 because the evidence proved convincingly that defendant's conviction of manslaughter was proper. Thornton v. State, 841 So. 2d 170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a family dispute pertaining to the manner in which a securities account should be divided by the wife and children of a decedent, it was proper for the chancellor to admit into evidence an audiotape of the decedent instructing how he wished his assets to be divided where the wife admitted that the voice on the tape was that of the decedent and that she was told of the tape's existence by her husband prior to his death. Estate of Baker v. Baker, 760 So. 2d 759 (Miss. 2000).

Videotaped hypnotic interview of murder defendant was properly excluded, since tape was being offered to prove truth of the matter asserted— that defendant accidentally shot game warden to death; tape did not qualify as a "prior statement of a witness" under M.R.E. Rule 801, and did not satisfy any hearsay exception in Rule 804. Thibodeaux v. State, 652 So. 2d 153 (Miss. 1995).

Rule 805. Hearsay within hearsay.

Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule provided in these rules.

COMMENT

This rule relates to multiple hearsay. Each hearsay part must qualify under an exception to be admissible.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Inadmissible statements.

Defendant's conviction for the sale of marijuana within a correctional facility was appropriate because the circuit court did not err in not granting defendant's motion to admit prior testimony of an unavailable witness under Miss. R. Evid. 804(a)(5) and (b)(1), because, although the witness was deemed to have been "unavailable" under R. 804(a)(5) the most harmful and significant portion of a probationer's prior testimony was that defendant's client told the probationer to lie to an officer; if defendant's investigators attempted to testify that the probationer told them that the client told him to lie, that testimony would have been hearsay within hearsay, which was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 805. Jackson v. State, 962 So. 2d 649 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not err by refusing to admit the defendant's statement to a woman that the victim had threatened to kill him because the statement would serve defendant's argument at trial that his actions were in self-defense and thus were self-serving and properly excluded by the trial judge pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(3) and Miss. R. Evid. 805. Ward v. State, 935 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 936 So. 2d 367, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 414 (Miss. 2006).

Rule 806. Attacking and supporting credibility of declarant.

When a hearsay statement, or a statement defined in rule 801(d)(2), (C), (D), or (E), has been admitted in evidence, the credibility of the declarant may be attacked, and if attacked may be supported, by any evidence which would be admissible for those purposes if the declarant had testified as a witness. Evidence of a statement or conduct by the declarant at any time, inconsistent with his hearsay statement, is not subject to any requirement that he may have been afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. If the party against whom a hearsay statement has been admitted calls the declarant as a witness, the party is entitled to examine him on the statement as if under cross-examination.

COMMENT

Rule 806 permits the impeachment and rehabilitation of a hearsay declarant. The use of inconsistent statements to impeach the declarant is not limited to prior inconsistent statements. Under the rule the inconsistent statements may be statements made subsequent to the out-of-court declaration at hand.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Co-defendant's Statement Admissible.

In a capital murder case, defendant's confrontation rights were not violated by the admission of a co-defendant's statement where the evidence showed that the co-defendant had committed suicide prior to trial because they were offered to rebut defendant's evidence of statements that the co-defendant made to inmates. Le v. State, 913 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 546 U.S. 1004, 126 S. Ct. 622, 163 L. Ed. 2d 508, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 8254, 74 U.S.L.W. 3288 (2005).

ARTICLE IX. AUTHENTICATION AND IDENTIFICATION

Rule 901. Requirement of authentication or identification.

(a) General provision. The requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims.

(b) Illustrations. By way of illustration only, and not by way of limitation, the following are examples of authentication or identification conforming with the requirements of this rule:

(1) Testimony of witness with knowledge. Testimony that a matter is what it is claimed to be.

(2) Non-expert opinion on handwriting. Non-expert opinion as to the genuineness of handwriting, based upon familiarity not acquired for purposes of the litigation.

(3) Comparison by trier or expert witness. Comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses with specimens which have been authenticated.

(4) Distinctive characteristics and the like. Appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, or other distinctive characteristics, taken in conjunction with circumstances.

(5) Voice identification. Identification of a voice, whether heard firsthand or through mechanical or electronic transmission or recording, by opinion based upon hearing the voice at any time under circumstances connecting it with the alleged speaker.

(6) Telephone conversations. Telephone conversations, by evidence that a call was made to the number assigned at the time by the telephone company to a particular person or business, if (A) in the case of a person, circumstances, including self-identification, show the person answering to be the one called, or (B) in the case of a business, the call was made to a place of business and the conversation related to business reasonably transacted over the telephone.

(7) Public records or reports. Evidence that a writing authorized by law to be recorded or filed and in fact recorded or filed in a public office, or a purported public record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, is from the public office where items of this nature are kept.

(8) Ancient documents or data compilation. Evidence that a document or data compilation, in any form, (A) is in such condition as to create no suspicion concerning its authenticity, (B) was in a place where it, if authentic, would likely be, and (C) has been in existence twenty years or more at the time it is offered.

(9) Process or system. Evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result.

(10) Other methods. Any method of authentication or identification provided by the Mississippi Supreme Court or by the Constitution of Mississippi.

COMMENT

(a) The authentication and identification aspects of evidence are central to the concept of relevancy. Unless it be satisfactorily shown that an item of evidence is "genuine," the item is irrelevant and should be excluded.

(b) This subsection illustrates some of the possibilities under Rule 901. It is only illustrative; it does not serve as a limitation. Some of the illustrations are discussed below:

(2) Nonexpert Opinion on Handwriting. This authentication method has been traditionally allowed in the Mississippi courts. The rule does not set forth what the necessary criteria are for the nonexpert opinion. However, from common law practice it appears that the opinion may be based on several different standards including the witness's familiarity with the person's handwriting or the witness's corresponding with the person. See Western Union Telegraph Co v. Goodman, 166 Miss. 782, 146 So. 128 (1933); Wiggins v. State, 224 Miss. 414, 80 So.2d 17 (1955); McCarty v. Love, 145 Miss. 330, 110 So. 795 (1927).

(3) Comparison by Trier or Expert Witness. Under Rule 901(3) it is not necessary for the judge to rule first that the exemplars are genuine before the expert compares them. The standard for comparison is no different, therefore, from the standard used in other situations, e.g., ballistics comparison. See FRE 901 Advisory Committee's Note.

(4) Distinctive Characteristics and the Like. The possibilities under the rule are myriad. Letters or phone conversations disclosing knowledge peculiar to an individual may qualify, as well as distinctive language patterns. See FRE 901 Advisory Committee's Note.

(5) Voice Identification. This authentication method has been utilized in Mississippi practice. Familiarity may be acquired either before or after the speaking which is the subject of the identification.

(6) Telephone Conversations. One may authenticate a conversation when he calls the number listed for a person or a business and the answering party either identified himself as that individual or conducted a transaction on behalf of the business called.

(7) Public Records or Reports. This represents the existing law in Mississippi. Rule 901(7) extends the common law principle to include electronically-stored information. Proving a record is public and that it is in the custody of a public official is sufficient.

(8) Ancient Documents or Data Compilation. The twenty-year rule for ancient documents under Rule 803(16) is repeated here. The illustration extends the authentication to electronically-stored information as in Rule 901(7). Except for the reduction of the years required for ancient documents, this illustration is consistent with Mississippi practice.

(9) Process or System. This illustration covers systems such as x-rays, some chemical tests, and computers. Example (9) does not foreclose taking judicial notice of the accuracy of a process or system.

(10) Other Methods. This illustration is given as notice that other methods are not superseded.

In general.

Under Miss. R. Evid. 901 and Miss. R. Civ. P. 56(c), the unauthenticated documents provided by the workers should not have been considered because, in his deposition, one worker stated that there were two pumps made by the company in the plant, but he did not state that asbestos was present; the unauthenticated letter only established that a company pump was sold to the plant at some point, not that it contained asbestos components, and did not place asbestos-containing products attributable to the company in the plant. Gorman-Rupp Co. v. Hall, 908 So. 2d 749 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant argued that the trial court's admission of the flashlight into evidence constituted reversible error; however, the admission of the flashlight was not necessary to establish the charge of simple assault and was not offered as the flashlight actually used, such that any error in its admission was harmless. Burnside v. State, 882 So. 2d 212 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting a videotape that was a copy of the small tape used to film the drug sale; the confidential informant involved in the sale testified that what was seen on the tape accurately depicted what occurred at the sale. Seals v. State, 869 So. 2d 429 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

There is no requirement of authentication as a condition precedent to admissibility where the evidence supports what the proponent claims. Gatlin v. State, 724 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 1998).

Audiotapes.

In a case involving the sale of cocaine, trial counsel was not ineffective for allowing an agent to testify that defendant's voice was on an audio recording because the agent's testimony was not subject to the authentication requirements under Miss. R. Evid. 901, and the failure of the State to lay a predicate for the testimony was harmless error since the agent testified on cross-examination that he had personal knowledge of defendant's voice. Moreover, even assuming that trial counsel's elicitation of the agent's previous dealings with defendant was so deficient as to meet the first prong of the test for ineffective assistance of counsel, plenty of other evidence existed to support the jury's verdict. Liddell v. State, 7 So. 3d 217 (Miss. 2009).

Admission of audiotapes of sexually explicit telephone conversations between defendant and a 13-year-old victim was relevant to show defendant's disposition toward the child in a statutory rape case, and the recordings were authenticated when defendant admitted having made the statements in order to raise the child's self-confidence. Walker v. State, 878 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine was proper where the audiotape recording of the transaction was properly admitted into evidence pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 901 because it was properly identified and authenticated; there was ample testimony by the officers and informants that they all had had previous contacts with defendant and were thus in a position to recognize his voice. Wilburn v. State, 856 So. 2d 686 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Officer's testimony that he heard a call made by the informant setting up the drug sale and that the tape reflected the conversation he heard, and defendant's testimony that he had admitted to talking with the informant before the sale, provided the foundation for the tape recording's authentication. Brock v. State, 795 So. 2d 566 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Audiotapes of two drug transactions were properly admitted into evidence where (1) defense counsel conceded on a motion that the tapes were relevant evidence, (2) three witnesses having first hand knowledge of the transactions were presented by the state and all testified that they had listened to the tapes prior to trial and that the tapes were accurate depictions of the drug transaction, and (3) the fact that portions of the recording were inaudible did not render it inadmissible. Lawrence v. State, 780 So. 2d 652 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

An audiotape was properly authenticated where a police officer specifically identified two statements from the tape as what the defendant said during a drug transaction and testified that he heard the voice during the transaction itself and that the recording played for the jury accurately represented the transaction that occurred between himself and the defendant. Feazell v. State, 800 So. 2d 1175 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

An audiotape of a drug transaction was properly authenticated where there were two principal players on the audiotape, a police officer identified one voice as that of his informant, and the informant supplied the "missing link" by testifying that the defendant was the person who sold him crack cocaine that day. White v. State, 761 So. 2d 221 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Tape of phone conversation was properly authenticated where narcotics agent described how the tapes were made, and testified (1) that the tapes accurately reflected what he heard over the telephone during the drug transaction, (2) that the voice was that of defendant, (3) that he had dialed defendant's telephone number, and (4) that the tapes had been kept in his custody or in a vualt after the incident until trial. Hogan v. State, 755 So. 2d 57 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Where an undercover agent who wore a body wire listened to the tape and testified that what was contained on the tape was an accurate reflection of the drug transaction between himself, the confidential informant, and the defendant, the agent's testimony was sufficient for the trial court to make a finding that the tape was in fact what the State claimed it was. Ratliff v. State, 752 So. 2d 416 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

An audiotape of a drug transaction was properly authenticated where an informant identified the four people on the tape, including himself, the defendant, and the defendant's wife, and two police officers identified the voices of the informant and the defendant. Jones v. State, 740 So. 2d 904 (Miss. 1999).

An audiotape of a drug transaction was properly authenticated where a police officer testified as to the authenticity of the tape and was able to distinguish the voices on the tape. White v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 535 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 17, 1999), subst. op., 761 So. 2d 221 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for sale of cocaine within 1,500 feet of a church, the trial court abused its discretion in admitting an audiotape into evidence to prove the defendant's involvement in the drug transaction at issue where the prosecution failed to ask the witness/police officer to identify the speakers on the tape and it was of no doubt that the witness could not have identified the defendant as one of the persons talking on the tape as he was not party to the conversation. White v. State, 755 So. 2d 1148 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

An audiotape of a drug transaction was properly authenticated where a narcotics agent described the manner in which the recording was made, testified that he had listened to the tape and that the tape accurately reflected what he had heard over the body wire on the day of the transaction, and that the tape had been kept in his custody or in a vault after the incident up until trial. Summerall v. State, 734 So. 2d 242 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

An audiotape of a drug transaction was proven authentic where the surveillance agent who operated the recording equipment testified that the audiotape accurately depicted what occurred at the time, that he personally participated in the preparation of the accompanying transcript, and that the audiotapes had been in his custody since that time. Ragin v. State, 724 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 1998).

Biological evidence.

Admission of a towel allegedly stained with defendant's semen was improper in a statutory rape case because, although the evidence was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 404(b), it was not authenticated or conclusively linked to defendant through biological testing. Walker v. State, 878 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2004).

Chain of custody.

There was no error, much less a miscarriage of justice, in admitting a bag of cocaine into evidence because a reasonable jury could have found that the bag of cocaine introduced at trial was the same bag defendant sold to a confidential informant the State satisfied the requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 901(a) because an officer testified that the moment the informant handed over the plastic bag, the officer sealed it in an evidence bag with a distinct identification number, and the officer identified the evidence bag as the same one he sealed right after the sale. Pearson v. State, 64 So. 3d 569 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Results of defendant's blood test were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 901(a); the trial court found no indication or reasonable inference of tampering with evidence or substitution of evidence, and the appeals court found sufficient evidence, under an abuse of discretion standard, to support the trial court's finding that the blood sample was what it was claimed to be. Deeds v. State, 27 So. 3d 1135 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 131 S. Ct. 150, 178 L. Ed. 2d 37, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 5807, 79 U.S.L.W. 3196 (U.S. 2010).

Evidence was legally sufficient to support the conviction of the sale of cocaine, Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(a), and the State sufficiently established chain of custody, Miss. R. Evid. 901(a), and, therefore, properly included the cocaine and lab report into evidence; defendant failed to put forth any evidence of probable tampering or substitution of evidence, and the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the cocaine. Turner v. State, 3 So. 3d 742 (Miss. 2009).

Where a witness testified that defendant was parked on his property, he saw a shotgun underneath the car seat and threw it into a ditch; a deputy testified that he retrieved the shotgun from the ditch and locked in it his trunk until he turned it over to the sheriff. The shotgun was then placed in the evidence locker where it remained until an employee of the sheriff's office brought it to court on the morning of the trial; the testimony was sufficient to establish the chain of custody so that the shotgun was properly admitted into evidence during defendant's trial for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-37-5(1). Cooley v. State, 14 So. 3d 63 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant argued unsuccessfully on appeal that an exhibit of cocaine should not have been admitted at trial because an agent's confusion rendered his testimony unreliable and the fact that he made multiple buys on the same day supported a conclusion that the cocaine was not the substance that he purchased from defendant. The trial court acted within its discretion in admitting the bag of cocaine because there was sufficient evidence to enable a reasonable jury to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the bag of cocaine was the substance sold by defendant- -the "buying" agent properly identified the bag of cocaine, by pointing out his initials on the bag, the case number, and his seal, the evidence established who it was that carried the substance to the lab, the substance was tracked at the lab via bar code and initialed by employees, and the lab's policies and procedures were followed. Downing v. State, 981 So. 2d 334 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant authenticated the shirt and gun admitted into evidence as his items seized from his car one hour after the carjacking; thus, chain of custody was established. Jackson v. State, 969 So. 2d 124 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the state's DNA evidence, where, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 901(a), defendant offered no proof that the blood sample tubes were substituted, and the state did not have to call every witness who handled the blood to establish the chain of custody. Ellis v. State, 934 So. 2d 1000 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine within 1,500 feet of a church in violation of Miss. Code Ann. §§ 41-29-139 and 41-29-142 was proper where the State offered sufficient testimony from two officers and an employee of the Mississippi Crime Lab to satisfy the requirement of Miss. R. Evid. 901(a) for establishing a proper chain of custody for admission of the cocaine at trial. Johnson v. State, 904 So. 2d 162 (Miss. 2005).

Court did not err in admitting evidence under Miss. R. Evid. 901(a) of marijuana sold to a special agent at defendant's trial for the sale of marijuana because the State presented sufficient evidence to support the finding that the marijuana admitted into evidence was the same marijuana that the special agent purchased from defendant, and that the evidence had not been tampered with or substituted. Anderson v. State, 904 So. 2d 973 (Miss. 2004).

State met the requirement of Miss. R. Evid. 901(a) with substantial proof that the material tested at the crime laboratory was the same material obtained by the undercover agent and detective; defendant's claim that the physical evidence or the test results should have been excluded was without merit. Chambers v. State, 878 So. 2d 153 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Test for chain of custody was whether there was any indication of tampering or substitution of evidence, the State also did not have to produce every person who handled the evidence, nor did the State have to account for every minute of every day. Muscolino v. State, 803 So. 2d 1240 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The trial court properly allowed the introduction of rocks of cocaine in a prosecution for sale or transfer of a Schedule II controlled substance even though a crime laboratory employee who signed for receipt of the the cocaine did not testify where there was evidence of delivery to her in a sealed condition and testimony that it was the standard custom and practice of the crime laboratory to receive such material only if it was properly sealed and to securely preserve the material in its sealed condition until an appropriate official of the laboratory was prepared to unseal the material for chemical analysis. Peyton v. State, 796 So. 2d 243 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine within 1500 feet of a church, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence over a chain of custody objection where there was no indication of tampering or substitution of evidence. City of Robinson v. State, 733 So. 2d 333 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it carried over proof of a chain of custody from a suppression hearing to a trial. Haley v. State, 737 So. 2d 371 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

E-mails.

Trial judge properly determined that the e-mails and letters were admissible and had been adequately authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 1001 and Miss. R. Evid. 1003; the trial judge found that the witness had vouched for the accuracy of the e-mail printouts and the document that was hand-delivered to the witness, and the officer testified that defendant admitted that he sent the e-mails to witness as well. Kearley v. State, 843 So. 2d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 842 So. 2d 578 (Miss. 2003).

Handwriting.

While codefendants' Fifth Amendment rights would not have been violated by having handwriting exemplars examined by an expert to authenticate a statement allegedly written by the codefendant because the evidence would not have been used as testimonial evidence at trial, there was not a substantial need for expert assistance shown in that nothing in the record indicated that defendant ever attempted to have these statements authenticated by locating someone familiar with the handwriting of the codefendants under Miss. R. Evid. 901(b)(2). Therefore, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to compel handwriting exemplars. Flora v. State, 925 So. 2d 797 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 912, 127 S. Ct. 253, 166 L. Ed. 2d 197, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 6127, 75 U.S.L.W. 3172 (2006).

Defendant, tried for embezzlement, was employed by the owner for approximately nine months and the owner testified that he had become familiar with defendant's handwriting during said period. By virtue of his familiarity with defendant's handwriting, the owner was fully qualified to offer his opinion as to whether or not the writing was in fact defendant's signature; such testimony was rationally based upon his perception, was helpful in making a determination of a fact in issue, was not based on scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge within the scope of Miss. R. Evid. 702, and it therefore met the requirements for both Miss. R. Evid. 701 and 901(b)(2). Bell v. State, 910 So. 2d 640 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's journal in which she wrote of her intention to murder her husband was admissible at trial because defendant's handwriting in the journal was authenticated by her son, her son testified he had seen her writing in journals, the inside cover of the journal indicated that the journal was the property of defendant, and the journal was found in defendant's house next to her chair. Black v. State, 823 So. 2d 543 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit into evidence a letter in which the minor victim of an alleged sexual assault allegedly recanted her accusations since the child denied writing the letter and the only evidence defendant offered in support of the letter was the testimony of a handwriting expert who had compared the handwriting in the letter to photocopies of the child's handwriting and the testimony of a witness who had received letters from the child earlier. Todd v. State, 806 So. 2d 1086 (Miss. 2001).

A witness was properly permitted to testify that signatures on two checks were neither hers nor the one other person authorized to sign the checks where she was able to testify that the handwriting and signatures were not those of the other authorized person based on the past five and one-half years of her daily business routine and contact with him and where she testified that she saw the signature of the other authorized person "one hundred times a day." Robinson v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 320 (Miss. Ct. App. June 8, 1999), remanded by 761 So. 2d 209, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 147 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for voter fraud, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of an exhibit which was composed of various documents apparently signed by the defendant since (1) the documents were compared with other writings by the defendant that were properly authenticated, (2) the jury was permitted to compare specimens with authenticated specimens for determination of their authenticity, and (3) there is a liberal preference for admission of evidence as the approach for authentication and identification. Sewell v. State, 721 So. 2d 129 (Miss. 1998).

A person's handwriting may be authenticated by a handwriting expert or by a lay witness with a prior familiarity with that person's handwriting. Hentz v. State, 542 So. 2d 914 (Miss. 1989).

Letters.

Finding in favor of a psychiatrist in a negligence action after the decedent killed herself was proper, in part because letters that the decedent wrote to her children and to the personal representative while hospitalized were sufficiently authenticated by the representative's testimony. Likewise, during her trial testimony, the decedent's best friend sufficiently authenticated a letter that the decedent wrote to her and the trial court appropriately allowed the jury to compare the letters with the unauthenticated suicide notes, Miss. R. Evid. 901(b)(3). Young v. Guild, 7 So. 3d 251 (Miss. 2009).

In a suicide wrongful death case against a doctor, the letters the decedent wrote to plaintiff and her children while hospitalized were properly admitted because they were sufficiently authenticated by plaintiff's testimony. The trial court appropriately allowed the jury to compare the letters with the unauthenticated suicide notes. Young v. Guild, — So. 2d —, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 548 (Miss. Oct. 30, 2008), substituted opinion at, opinion withdrawn by 7 So. 3d 251, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 193 (Miss. 2009).

In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not err in admitting the letter defendant allegedly wrote to a witness while in prison because defendant acknowledged that he wrote the letter, the letter presented in court was an exact duplicate of the original which was in his attorney's possession during trial, and the witness testified that the jail trustee specifically noted that the letter came from defendant. Brown v. State, 965 So. 2d 1023 (Miss. 2007).

Where defendant sought to admit letter purportedly written by child victim recanting the charges, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in disregarding the testimony of defendant's handwriting expert, particularly in light of concerns about the expert's qualifications, nor did the trial court abuse its discretion in disregarding the testimony of a witness who admitted not having seen the child victim's handwriting in two years. The victim had testified that the victim did not write the letter, and the Mississippi Crime Lab examiner's report indicated that the letter showed tracings and simulations, thus defendant did not meet the burden of proving authenticity. Todd v. State, 873 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

The state properly authenticated letters alleged to have been written by the defendant where (1) the state's handwriting expert properly authenticated the letters by comparing them to a known writing example obtained from the defendant, and (2) a fingerprint expert testified that the defendant's fingerprints were found on the letters. Burns v. State, 729 So. 2d 203 (Miss. 1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1041, 119 S. Ct. 2406, 144 L. Ed. 2d 804 (1999).

Court at trial for possession of drugs erred in admitting handwritten note into evidence; State failed to establish who wrote the note and when it was written, and without adequate authentication and identification the note was irrelevant and should have been excluded. Frierson v. State, 606 So. 2d 604 (Miss. 1992).

Medical records.

As plaintiff was present when her doctor made each record, determined the information that went into the medical records, and testified to the accuracy of the records, the records were properly authenticated and their admission into evidence was not error. Cassibry v. Schlautman, 816 So. 2d 398 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

In a civil action arising from a motor vehicle accident, the plaintiff was not entitled to have her own medical records excluded because of the defendants's failure to call sponsoring witnesses, including the technician who drew her blood, the laboratory representative who performed blood tests, and a witness capable of interpreting the results of the tests; the plaintiff's blood test was no different from the results of an x-ray, a myelogram, or many other medical tests that are routinely admitted into evidence as part of a party's medical records, and there was no abuse of discretion in admitting the test results. Buel v. Sims, 798 So. 2d 425 (Miss. 2001).

Photographs.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a photocopy of the photographic lineup to be admitted as exhibit four where, regardless of the conflicting testimony concerning the form of the original photographic lineup, the testimony at trial and during the suppression hearing established that exhibit four did, indeed, contain copies of the photographs shown to the witnesses. Anderson v. State, 25 So. 3d 1074 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 24 So. 3d 1038, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 19 (Miss. 2010).

In an aggravated assault case where defendant claimed that her boyfriend witnessed the incident from the front of the hotel, because the detective testified that the photographs accurately represented the hotel doors at the time of his investigation, the photographs were properly authenticated and the trial court did not err by overruling defenadant's objection. Ford v. State, 975 So. 2d 859 (Miss. 2008).

Process or system.

State clearly met authentication requirement for admission of certificate of accuracy for intoxilyzer machine, and therefore State did not fail to lay proper predicate for admission of intoxilyzer test results. McIlwain v. State, 700 So. 2d 586 (Miss. 1997).

Trial court erred in admitting results of intoxilyzer test, where State failed to lay a sufficient predicate to support accuracy of the results. Johnston v. State, 567 So. 2d 237 (Miss. 1990).

Public records.

Trial court erred in admitting passports of defendant's son and defendant's daughter-in-law because, while the passports themselves were admissible, the notations made by an agent were inadmissible to show arrival and departure times without a certificate. Kea v. State, 986 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Certificates of intoxilyzer calibration were an example of a public record, the authentication of which was contemplated by Miss. R. Evid. 901(b)(7); because defendant did not contest that the certificates came from the county jail, they satisfied the authentication requirements of Rule 901(b)(7) and were properly admissible. Pulliam v. State, 856 So. 2d 461 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 859 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court erred in admitting intoxilyzer test results because the State failed to properly authenticate copies of a page from the intoxilyzer log book and the calibration certificate; the State was required to offer either the testimony of the calibrating officer, the original certificate of calibration, or a certified copy of the certificate as evidence of the machine's accuracy. Jones v. State, 798 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Indictment charging defendant with aggravated assault was properly certified where it bore signature of county clerk and clerk attested to its origins, and thus indictment was a proper substitute for the actual judgment of conviction. Blue v. State, 674 So. 2d 1184 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1030, 117 S. Ct. 588, 136 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1996).

Prior convictions should not have been admitted, where they were merely notarized by a notary public and were thus improperly authenticated. Cox v. State, 586 So. 2d 761 (Miss. 1991).

Radar.

A radar device reading should be deemed admissible only upon a showing of the radar device's accuracy, and the showing of that accuracy is a prerequisite to the admissibility of evidence of speed obtained by use of the device. Stidham v. State, 750 So. 2d 1238 (Miss. 1999).

Although the radar evidence of defendant's speed was admitted before the proper foundation was laid, adequate evidence of the device's accuracy was subsequently introduced. Stidham v. State, 750 So. 2d 1238 (Miss. 1999).

Receipt.

Trial court did not commit reversible error by admitting a receipt for the rental of a pornographic movie in a sexual battery case because there were sufficient indicia of trustworthiness to show that the receipt was what it purported to be; a police officer obtained the receipt after presenting a properly executed subpoena duces tecum. Seigfried v. State, 869 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 870 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 2004).

Telephone conversations.

In defendant's trial for capital murder of defendant's five-year-old child, a recording of defendant's phone call made from the jail in which defendant admitted to killing the child was admissible because the recording was sufficiently authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 901 when a detective testified that he recognized defendant's voice and defendant identified herself during the phone call. Even if there were any error on the trial court's part in admitting the tape, that error would be harmless because it was debatable whether the audio recording in question contained any more incriminating information than what defendant gave in her statement to police and on the stand at trial. Broadhead v. State, 981 So. 2d 320 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 981 So. 2d 298, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 210 (Miss. 2008).

In a child custody case, the mother waived an authentication objection concerning the admissibility of tape recordings made secretly by the husband, where the only objection made at trial concerned the chain of custody. Copeland v. Copeland, 904 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. 2004).

Telephone conversations are authenticated when the evidence shows that a call was made to a number assigned at the time by the telephone company to a particular person and self-identification shows that the person answering is the person who was called. Gatlin v. State, 724 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 1998).

Testimony of witness with knowledge.

At trial, the director of medical records for a center, stated that she served as the custodian of all center records, and testified as to the authenticity of the husband's center records; she also testified as to the center's regular practice of maintaining their medical records. The chancellor and the parties were already aware of the records since the guardian ad litem used the records to compile her report for the court, and since the husband's records were available to both parties; therefore, there was no abuse of discretion in the chancellor's admission of the records, as they fell within Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) and were properly authenticated. Jones v. Jones, 43 So. 3d 465 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 463 (Miss. 2010).

In defendant's murder trial, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting ATF Gun Trace and Trace Return document into evidence because the documents were properly authenticated where a police officer testified that he was familiar with the document and that it was the document that he received from the ATF in response to his ATF gun trace request for defendant; this testimony, paired with the information on the face of the document, was evidence sufficient to suport a finding that the document was what the prosecution claimed. Jordan v. State, 995 So. 2d 94 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's murder trial, trial court properly overruled defense objections to the testimony of a pawnshop owner concerning defendant's purchase of a gun and the documents related to defendant's purchase because the record reflected that the pawnshop owner was familiar with the documents and, as a federal firearms holder, was responsible for maintaining the documents. Jordan v. State, 995 So. 2d 94 (Miss. 2008).

In an action concerning underinsured motorist benefits, the witness testified she was an employee of the insurer with the knowledge of the contents of the computer-generated document, its preparation, and how to access the documents from storage on her computer. The witness testified to the contents of the document in question, which recorded every transaction on the insurance policy, and to exactly how each number on the page came to be, and she further testified as to how the computer system functioned; the record reflected that each of the subject entries were done in the course of regular business with the insurer and all the requirements for admission of said document under Miss. R. Evid. 803(6) and 901(b) were met. Ferguson v. Snell, 905 So. 2d 516 (Miss. 2004).

Where police officer testified that photographs accurately represented the appearance of the victim on the night of the assault, the photographs were relevant and properly authenticated; it was immaterial that the officer was not the person who took them. Smith v. State, 792 So. 2d 343 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A videotape of an alleged drug transfer admitted at trial was properly authenticated where a police officer testified that he set up the video equipment, was present when the events on the videotape transpired, and that the video was an accurate depiction of the events as they transpired that day. Trull v. State, 811 So. 2d 243 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a divorce proceeding in which the wife's use of the Internet to meet men was at issue, the husband was not qualified to authenticate America Online (AOL) documents which showed the household usage of the parties' AOL account as he was not involved in the preparation of the documents, he did not work directly for AOL, and he could not testify to the accuracy of the documents. Bower v. Bower, 758 So. 2d 405 (Miss. 2000).

Summary of retail store's business transactions was properly admitted at trial for embezzlement, where underlying bank deposits, cash register tapes and daily accounting sheets were prepared and utilized in the regular conduct of business, and summary was properly authenticated by store owner who prepared it with help of his bookkeeper, and owner was a witness with knowledge that the summary was what it was claimed to be. Wells v. State, 604 So. 2d 271 (Miss. 1992).

Transcript of police interview.

Transcript of defendant's interview with the police was admissible into evidence as it was properly authenticated by a police officer who was present while the interview was conducted. Black v. State, 823 So. 2d 543 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Videotape.

Defendant's conviction for selling cocaine was affirmed as the State properly authenticated a videotape of a drug transaction under Miss. R. Evid. 901; two officers testified that it accurately depicted the transaction as it occurred and defendant presented no evidence or reasonable inference to support defendant's claim that there was a break in the chain of custody of cocaine. Crutcher v. State, 68 So. 3d 724 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 69 So. 3d 767, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 415 (Miss. 2011).

Denial of appellant's, an inmate's, motion for postconviction relief was proper because he failed to show that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. The admission of a videotape was erroneous not based upon any substantive flaw in the videotape itself that could have been objected to prior to the videotape's admission into evidence, but upon a violation of Miss. R. Evid. 901; the inmate's trial counsel did object to the admission of the videotape for that precise reason and therefore, the inmate was unable to show that his trial counsel's failure to renew his motion for a continuance satisfied either prong of Strickland. Conway v. State, 48 So. 3d 588 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 627 (Miss. 2010).

State satisfied its burden under Miss. R. Evid. 901(b)(1) in laying a foundation for admission of the videotape of the cocaine sale because: (1) the audio and video equipment was set up in the confidential informant's trailer; (2) the informant possessed suffidient knowledge of the transaction that occurred on the recording; (3) the informant described the location of both the audio and video recording and acknowledged that she was being recorded; and (4) the informant stated that the video recording was a true and accurate description of the transaction that took place on February 15, 2006 between herself and defendant. Thames v. State, 5 So. 3d 1178 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted a videotape of a drug transaction between defendant and an informant into evidence because the videotape was authenticated through the testimony of an officer and the informant stating that it accurately showed the transaction and that it had not been altered. Hoye v. State, 1 So. 3d 946 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Appellate court held that the admission of a videotape depicting the drug transaction was proper as it was properly authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 901 by the confidential informant (CI) who bought the drugs from defendant, as the CI had reviewed the tape and testified that it accurately depicted the transaction. Griffin v. State, 918 So. 2d 882 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was tried for grand larceny, the court did not err in admitting into evidence video surveillance footage showing defendant throwing the stolen wallet into a trash can. A security supervisor's testimony that the tape was in the same condition as when he viewed it provided authentication. Moore v. State, 911 So. 2d 1037 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In defendant's murder trial, the State failed to prove the detective had sufficient knowledge of the crime scene to have been able to testify that the edited videotape accurately depicted the events on the day in question. However, because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming, such error was harmless. Conway v. State, 915 So. 2d 521 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 217 (Miss. 2006).

Because defendant did not object to the surveillance video authentication procedure, he was barred from raising the issue on appeal. McDonald v. State, 881 So. 2d 895 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Plaintiff's witness testified to setting up the video equipment and to being present when the events on the videotape transpired, and could identify the videotape through the witness's observation of it; and since the witness was familiar with the scene, and testified sufficiently to the accuracy of the recording, the authenticity of the videotape was proven. Chapman v. Williams, 860 So. 2d 837 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Illustrative cases.

Reading of a stipulation to the jury effectively placed the stipulation in evidence because defendant's counsel did not object to the stipulation for any reason, including the issue of authentication; both parties agreed to the stipulation, and the circuit judge read the words contained on an exhibit and referred to the stipulation as a "fact" agreed to by both parties. Peterson v. State, 37 So. 3d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing three "pen packs" into evidence; the pen packs were appropriate evidence of prior convictions in order to enhance sentencing and were properly authenticated by defendant's probation and parole officer, who testified that the prior convictions were part of a file he received on defendant when he became his parole officer. Grant v. State, 8 So. 3d 213 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 207 (Miss. 2009).

To convict a defendant of trafficking in stolen firearms, the State did not need to enter the actual firearms into evidence as (1) there was no best evidence rule with regard to physical evidence that was not writings, recordings, or photographs; (2) requiring the State to offer actual firearms into evidence would impose a high burden on prosecutors and the courts in cases where there were large quantities of physical evidence; and (3) the State satisfied the relevancy and authentication requirements permitting the photographs of the firearms to be introduced into evidence. Riley v. State, 1 So. 3d 877 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 18 (Miss. 2009).

Husband was properly awarded child custody because it was harmless error to admit a list of prior arrests and charges against the wife's boyfriend that was not properly authenticated since there was other evidence regarding the boyfriend's violent behavior. Weeks v. Weeks (In re Dissolution of Marriage of Weeks), 989 So. 2d 408 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a child custody modification proceeding, a private investigator's DVD was properly admitted since it was authenticated based on the ex-wife's identification of the ex-wife's home and vehicle, as well as the vehicle of the ex-wife's boyfriend in front of the ex-wife's house. Pruett v. Prinz, 979 So. 2d 745 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Certificate of title and a bill of sale that were produced to the State during discovery were admissible into evidence because they were relevant under Miss. R. Evid. 401, as a reasonable juror could conclude that, because defendant produced the fraudulent documents during discovery, he knew the vehicle was stolen. In addition, to authentic the documents, the State had only to show that the documents were what the State claimed them to be, and defendant offered no objection to their authenticity. Hayden v. State, 972 So. 2d 525 (Miss. 2007).

In a drug case, defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because (1) he offered no evidence to rebut the presumption that the jury had been properly sworn, so no objection by counsel was required; (2) defense counsel was not required to request an instruction regarding an accomplice because the State's evidence did not rest upon the testimony of two others involved; (3) defense counsel's failure to request an additional instruction when mention was made of defendant's prior incarceration was not deficient where an objection was made immediately and a curative instruction was given; and (4) the failure to object to defendant's criminal record was not deficient since the testimony of a correctional department custodian was permissible to authenticate such under Miss. R. Evid. 901. Vardaman v. State, 966 So. 2d 885 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In an aggravated assault case, the court properly admitted the tire iron into evidence because a witness explained that he had used the very same tire iron for many years during his employment at the automotive shop. Additionally, although the tire iron had been moved frequently at the sheriff's office, testimony showed that it was the only tire iron in storage from the time it was bagged as evidence until the trial. Walker v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 728 (Miss. Ct. App. Oct. 11, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 936 So. 2d 424, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence cocaine that allegedly belonged to defendant because the exhibit was properly authenticated by Miss. R. Evid. 901 where two officers testified that the cocaine was what was found in a bag in the car defendant was driving. Magee v. State, 912 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a memorandum from the corporation offered by an individual as the individual tried to offer the memo through a witness who neither prepared the memo nor knew who prepared it. Welsh v. Mounger, 883 So. 2d 46 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in refusing to admit notes from a decedent that purportedly set out some terms of a trust agreement that would benefit the individuals as there was no substantial proof that the decedent had actually written the notes. Dear v. Boggan (In re Estates of Gates), 876 So. 2d 1059 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In defendant's prosecution for unlawfully filming another person, the victim testified that the victim took the tape to the victim's lawyer's office, a copy was made, and the tapes were then sent to the prosecutor and to defendant's attorney, and the lawyer's paralegal testified that the tape had not been altered and that the copy was the same as the original; even absent a presumption of regularity, there was no evidence of tampering, there was sufficient authentication, and the tape was properly admitted. Moen v. State, 861 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for timber theft, settlement sheets showing the value of the timber were improperly authenticated by an investigator who had not prepared them; however, as there was also competent testimony on the same issue, the error was harmless. Chisolm v. State, 856 So. 2d 681 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a kidnapping and rape prosecution, exhibits taken from defendant's home (lotion, samples extracted from his mattress, a laundry bag, a towel, and a sheet) were not erroneously admitted as they were introduced following sufficient foundational testimony by both the victim and a sheriff; there was thus no abuse of discretion, and no substantial right of defendant was adversely affected. Townsend v. State, 847 So. 2d 825 (Miss. 2003).

Evidence was sufficient to authenticate audiotapes of a drug transaction where (1) one officer testified that he had eight or nine separate conversations with the defendant prior to the transaction at issue and that some of those conversations lasted upwards of 40 minutes and that he spoke to the defendant only hours before the transaction, and (2) another officer testified further that he heard the defendant's voice on several occasions "over the body mic." Wilson v. State, 775 So. 2d 735 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

There was sufficient evidence to allow marijuana to be admitted into evidence where there was the officers' testimony and an audiotape of the drug deal, and there was no indication or reasonable inference of probable tampering or substitution of the evidence and no demonstrated prejudicial impact on defendant's case. Cockerham v. State, 752 So. 2d 431 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a prosecution for defrauding the state government and uttering forgery, the court erroneously permitted a state investigator to testify insurance investigative reports as he was not involved in preparing the insurance files, did not work directly for the insurance companies, and did not even know the adjusters. Logan v. State, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 182 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 20, 1999), subst. op., 773 So. 2d 338 (Miss. 2000).

Oil change sticker indicating mileage on vehicle was authenticated in the only way relevant to its evidentiary purpose, notice to car dealership, and therefore sticker was properly admitted. Regency Nissan, Inc. v. Jenkins, 678 So. 2d 95 (Miss. 1996).

The custodian of an intoxilyzer calibration certificate is a proper witness for the introduction of such a certificate. Shands, May 7, 1999, A.G. Op. #99-0210.

Rule 902. Self-authentication.

Extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following:

(1) Domestic public documents under seal. A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, or of any State, district, Commonwealth, territory, or insular possession thereof, or of the Panama Canal Zone, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or of a political subdivision, department, officer, or agency thereof, and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution.

(2) Domestic public documents not under seal. A document purporting to bear the signature in his official capacity of an officer or employee of any entity included in paragraph (1) hereof, having no seal, if a public officer having a seal and having official duties in the district or political subdivision of the officer or employee certifies under seal that the signer has the official capacity and that the signature is genuine.

(3) Foreign public documents. A document purporting to be executed or attested in his official capacity by a person authorized by the laws of a foreign country to make the execution or attestation, and accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and official position (A) of the executing or attesting person, or (B) of any foreign official whose certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relates to the execution or attestation or is in a chain of certificates of genuineness of signature and official position relating to the execution or attestation. A final certification may be made by a secretary of an embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. If reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of official documents, the court may, for good cause shown, order that they be treated as presumptively authentic without final certification or permit them to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without final certification.

(4) Certified copies of public records. A copy of an official record or report or entry therein, or of a document authorized by law to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed in a public office, including data compilations in any form, certified as correct by the custodian or other person authorized to make the certification, by certificate complying with paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this rule or complying with any Act of Congress or rule prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority.

(5) Official publications. Books, pamphlets, or other publications purporting to be issued by public authority.

(6) Newspapers and periodicals. Printed materials purporting to be newspapers or periodicals.

(7) Trade inscriptions and the like. Inscriptions, signs, tags or labels purporting to have been affixed in the course of business and indicating ownership, control or origin.

(8) Acknowledged documents. Documents accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgment executed in the manner provided by law by a notary public or other officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments.

(9) Commercial paper and related documents. Commercial paper, signatures thereon, and documents relating thereto to the extent provided by general commercial law.

(10) Presumptions created by law. Any signature, document, or other matter declared by any law of the United States or of Mississippi to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic.

(11) Certified records of regularly conducted activities.

(A) The records of a regularly conducted activity, within the scope of Rule 803(6), about which a certificate of the custodian or other qualified witness shows (i) the first hand knowledge of that person about the making, maintenance and storage of the records; (ii) evidence that the records are authentic as required by Rule 901(a) and comply with Article X; and (iii) that the records were (a) made at or near the time of the occurrence of the matters set forth by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge of those matters; (b) kept in the course of the regularly conducted activity; and (c) made by the regularly conducted activity as a regular practice. Such records are not self-authenticating if the sources of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(B) As used in this subsection, "certificate" means, (i) with respect to a domestic record, a written declaration under oath or attestation subject to the penalty of perjury; and, (ii) with respect to records maintained or located in a foreign country, a written declaration signed in a foreign country which, if falsely made, would subject the maker to criminal penalty under the laws of that country. A certificate relating to a foreign record must be accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and the position in the regularly conducted activity of the executing individual as is required for certification of Foreign Public Documents by subsection (3) of this rule.

(C)(i) Records so certified will be self-authenticating only if the proponent gives notice to adverse parties of the intent to offer the records as self-authenticating under this rule and provides a copy of the records and of the authenticating certificate. Such notice must be given sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing at which they will be offered to provide the adverse party a fair opportunity to consider the offer and state any objections. (ii) Objections will be waived unless, within fifteen days after receiving the notice, the objector serves written specific objections or obtains agreement of the proponent or moves the court to enlarge the time. (iii) The proponent will be responsible for scheduling a hearing on any objections and the court should hear and decide such objections before the trial or hearing at which they will be offered. If the court cannot rule on the objections before the trial or hearing, the records will not be self-authenticating. (iv) If in a civil case, on motion by the proponent after the trial or hearing, the court determines that the objections raised no genuine questions and were made without arguable good cause, the expenses incurred by the proponent in presenting the evidence necessary to secure admission of the records shall be assessed against the objecting party and attorney. (Amended January 31, 1990; July 1, 1997.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 1, 1997, Rule 902 was amended to add subsection (11) to allow predicates for records of regularly conducted activities to be proven by affidavit. 689-692 So. 2d LXVIII (West Miss. Cas. 1997).

Effective March 20, 1995, the Comment to Rules 902(3), (8) and (9) were amended to note the repeal of statutes and to delete reference to a UCC section. 648-651 So. 2d XXVI (West Miss. Cas. 1995).

Effective January 31, 1990, Rule 902(3) was amended to make a technical change. 553-556 So. 2d XXVII (West Miss. Cas. 1990).

[Amended effective July 1, 1997.]

Rule 902 lists situations in which authenticity is taken as sufficiently established for purpose of admissibility without extrinsic evidence. However, the opponent of the evidence may always challenge the authenticity. In essence, the rule shifts the burden to the opponent. In 1990 a technical amendment was made. No substantive change was made or intended.

(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. — The underlying policy rests on the fact that forgery is easily detected, and the possibility of the documents not being genuine is, thus, remote. A wide range of Mississippi public records fall into this category, including acknowledgments and certificates authenticating copies of public records.

(2) Domestic Public Documents Not Under Seal. — This provision permits the admission in evidence of documents signed by an official whose office has no seal, provided a second official having a seal certifies, under seal, the genuineness of the first signature.

(3) Foreign Public Documents. — Rule 902(3) extends the presumption of authenticity to foreign official documents by a procedure of certificate. It is derived from M.R.C.P. 44(a)(2). M.C.A. § 13-1-101 (repealed effective July 1, 1991) formerly governed this procedure.

(4) Certified Copies of Public Records. — Numerous statutes already exist in Mississippi providing for the authentication of copies of public records by certificate. The certificate itself qualifies as a public document, receivable as authentic when it conforms to Rule 902(1), (2), or (3). See M.R.C.P. 44(a). The certification under Rule 902(4) pertains to public records and not to public documents in general.

(5) Official Publications. — M.R.C.P. 44(a)(1) has the same effect.

(6) Newspapers and Periodicals. — This is new practice in Mississippi. The rule is based on the premise that the possibility of forgery in this area is negligible.

(7) Trade Inscription and the Like. — Curtiss Candy Co. v. Johnson, 163 Miss. 426, 141 So. 762 (1932) early established this rule in Mississippi. The possibility of forgery is too slim for the court to require a more detailed method of authentication.

(8) Acknowledged Documents. — This extends existing Mississippi law. In Mississippi the self-authentication of acknowledged documents was formerly available through a limited number of statutes, e.g., M.C.A. § 13-1-97, § 13-1-143 (both repealed effective July 1, 1991).

(9) Commercial Paper and Related Documents. — Mississippi practice already allows for authentication of commercial paper pursuant to U.C.C. § 1-202, § 3-307, and § 8-105.

(11) Certified Records of Regularly Conducted Activities. — This method of self-authenticating the records of regularly conducted activities is suggested by Rule 902(11) of the Uniform Rules of Evidence. It is intended to allow, in proper cases, the introduction of these records without the expense, trial time consumption and inconvenience to witnesses who are called to provide what is often purely formalistic and undisputed predicate evidence. Part (A) permits proof by affidavit of the qualifications of the witness and the usual predicates of authenticity, the Best Evidence Rule and the Rule 803(6) hearsay exception. Part (B) explains the required certification. Part (C) requires that the proponent have early anticipation of the use of this method so there is time before trial for notice, objections and a hearing. If objections are not decided before the trial, the proponent must plan to call the witness. The sanction for frivolous objections in civil cases is based on the M.R.C.P. 37(c) sanction for failure to admit.

When self-authenticating records are offered against the defendant in criminal cases, the rights of the defendant under the confrontation clauses of Federal and State Constitutions must be considered.

Certified copies.

Calibration certificates were prepared under the seal of the Mississippi Crime Laboratory; the exhibits in defendant's trial bore both the seal of the office as well as the signature of one attesting the truth of their contents, and as such, the certificates could be considered self-authenticating pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902(1). Pulliam v. State, 856 So. 2d 461 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 859 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. 2003).

There is nothing in subsection (4) that states the certified copies must come from the level of government or specific agency who issued the document; it is only necessary that the office where an official document is authorized by law to be filed certify as to authenticity; thus, as a municipal clerk's statutory duties included the maintaining of records of the calibration of the city's intoxilyzer machines, a certified copy of such a record was admissible into evidence. Callahan v. State, 811 So. 2d 420 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Public records or reports.

In a capital murder trial, the introduction of the victim's death certificate into evidence was proper under Miss. R. Evid. 803(9) and the authenticity of the death certificate was established by Miss. R. Evid. 902(4). Any failure to redact the time of injury from the certificate was unimportant in relation to everything else the jury considered on the issue in question. Birkhead v. State, 57 So. 3d 1223 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's capital murder conviction was appropriate because his right to confrontation was not violated by the admission of the victim's death certificate into evidence. The death certificate was admissible as a public record under Miss. R. Evid. 902(4) and, while the trial court erred in allowing the death certificate into evidence showing the purported time of injury under Miss. R. Evid. 803(9), the error was harmless because witnesses testified that they could not be positive of the time of injury or the time of death. Birkhead v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 73 (Miss. Feb. 19, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 57 So. 3d 1223, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 99 (Miss. 2011).

Trial court erred in admitting passports of defendant's son and defendant's daughter-in-law because, while the passports themselves were admissible, the notations made by an agent were inadmissible to show arrival and departure times without a certificate. Kea v. State, 986 So. 2d 358 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting into evidence during sentencing defendant's prior Texas conviction of second-degree robbery because it was relevant for the sentencing jury, consistent with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 10.04(B)(1), to consider; in addition, the documentation of the prior conviction and sentence was properly certified and authenticated according to the Acts of Congress, and therefore was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) as an exception to the hearsay rule. Taggart v. State, 957 So. 2d 981 (Miss. 2007).

State can use a self-authenticating certificate from a prison records custodian to overcome the presumption that an inmate timely filed a notice of appeal. Jewell v. State, 946 So. 2d 810 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 56 (Miss. 2007).

In a child support case, medical evidence presented by a father to show that he was unable to work due to a injuries suffered in a childhood accident was not accepted by a chancery court because it constituted hearsay; a third document was not accepted because there was no testimony of a custodian under Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), and the document was not self-authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 902(11), Davison v. Miss. Dep't of Human Servs., 938 So. 2d 912 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a grand larceny case, the self-authenticating pen-packs were not inadmissible as the certificate on the pen-packs indicated that the custodian of records swore that the documents were true and correct copies, not that defendant actually committed any act. Accordingly, the "matter asserted" was that the pen-packs were accurate copies of official records, not that defendant was, in fact, a habitual offender, making the pen-packs admissible. Frazier v. State, 907 So. 2d 985 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Public safety department printout of defendant's driving record was admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 803(8) after having been certified as correct by the signature of the custodian of the records, and because the record was under seal, it was self-authenticated pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902(1); this printout met requirement of Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(2)(c) for evidence of two prior driving-under-the-influence convictions of defendant, and no prejudice resulted from the admission of the corroborating justice court record in this regard. Doolie v. State, 856 So. 2d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Certified copies of defendant's criminal history were properly admitted to show that defendant charged with murder was a habitual criminal; issues relating to whether the documents adequately identified defendant as the person who had committed the offense went to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. Smith v. State, 835 So. 2d 927 (Miss. 2002).

Facsimile copy of a prior driving-under-the-influence conviction was properly admitted into evidence, despite the fact that the seal was blurred, because it was self-authenticating under Miss. R. Evid. 902(1), and no genuine question was raised as to the authenticity of the original under Miss. R. Evid. 1003. Lewis v.

State, 831 So. 2d 553 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Indictment charging defendant with aggravated assault was properly certified where it bore signature of county clerk and clerk attested to its origins, and thus indictment was a proper substitute for the actual judgment of conviction. Blue v. State, 674 So. 2d 1184 (Miss. 1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1030, 117 S. Ct. 588, 136 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1996).

Prior convictions should not have been admitted, where they were merely notarized by a notary public and were thus improperly authenticated. Cox v. State, 586 So. 2d 761 (Miss. 1991).

Receipt.

Trial court did not commit reversible error in admitting a receipt for the rental of a pornographic movie in a sexual battery case because there were sufficient indicia of trustworthiness to show that the receipt was what it purported to be; a police officer obtained the receipt after presenting a properly executed subpoena duces tecum. Seigfried v. State, 869 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 870 So. 2d 666 (Miss. 2004).

Illustrative cases.

In the client's tort action against the attorney and law firm, regarding authentication of the transcript, certification by the court reporter was sufficient, Miss. R. Evid. 902(8). Baker Donelson Bearman Caldwell & Berkowitz, P.C. v. Seay, 42 So. 3d 474 (Miss. 2010).

Car dealership's former business manager's affidavit did not present a meritorious defense to the default judgment since the cancellation worksheet was inadmissible hearsay pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 802; the manager failed to qualify the cancellation worksheet as an exception to the hearsay rule pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 803(6), or authenticate the worksheet pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 902; and because the dealership failed to assert a meritorious defense, its motion to set aside default judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(6) was properly denied. Greater Canton Ford Mercury, Inc. v. Lane, 997 So. 2d 198 (Miss. 2008).

Husband was properly awarded child custody because it was harmless error to admit a list of prior arrests and charges against the wife's boyfriend that was not properly authenticated since there was other evidence regarding the boyfriend's violent behavior. Weeks v. Weeks (In re Dissolution of Marriage of Weeks), 989 So. 2d 408 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Rule 903. Subscribing witness' testimony unnecessary.

The testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing.

COMMENT

Under this rule testimony of subscribing witnesses to a will may nonetheless be necessary to authenticate the will. See M.C.A. § 91-7-7 and § 91-7-9.

ARTICLE X. CONTENTS OF WRITINGS, RECORDINGS, AND PHOTOGRAPHS

Rule 1001. Definitions.

For purposes of this article the following definitions are applicable:

(1) Writings and recordings. "Writings" and "recordings" consist of letters, words, or numbers, or their equivalent set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation.

(2) Photographs. "Photographs" include still photographs, x-ray films, video tapes, and motion pictures.

(3) Original. An "original" of a writing or recording is the writing or recording itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An "original" of a photograph includes the negative or any print therefrom. If data are stored in a computer or similar device, any printout or other output readable by sight, shown to reflect the data accurately, is an "original."

(4) Duplicate. A "duplicate" is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original. (Amended July 1, 1997.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 1, 1997, Rule 1001(3) was amended to correct what was apparently a printing or typographical error by replacing the word "sign" with the correct word, "sight". — So. 2d — (West Miss. Cases).

[Adopted effective July 1, 1997.]

COMMENT

(1) Writings and Recordings. — This provision recognizes that current techniques of recordation are more complex than what we have traditionally defined as "written" or "recorded." To the extent that the best evidence rule is concerned, the rule is expanded to include modern technological methods of recording.

(2) Photographs. — Photographs are defined to include an assortment of pictures.

(3) Original. — This rule covers multiple originals, copies which are executed in multiple numbers. A computer printout under the rule is deemed to be an original.

(4) Duplicate. — Copies which are produced by such highly accurate methods that the possibility of error is improbable are treated as originals pursuant to Rule 1003. Other copies which are subsequently produced manually are outside the definition. See FRE 1001, Advisory Committee's Note.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Duplicate.
Photograph properly admitted.

Duplicate.

Photocopy of scratch pad sheet was a duplicate, and since opposing party raised no objection to its authenticity it was admissible to the same extent as an original; moreover, because original was destroyed by a party other than the proponent, the copy, even if not considered a duplicate original, would be admissible under M.R.E. 1004(1). Dixie Ins. Co. v. Mooneyhan, 684 So. 2d 574 (Miss. 1996).

Photograph properly admitted.

Photograph of the victim's exhumed body was properly admitted where the trial court conducted a Miss. R. Evid. 403 balancing on the record, and did not abuse its discretion in finding that the photograph possessed probative value, and that such value outweighed any potential prejudice; defendant's argument that the admission of the photograph through the victim's girlfriend was intended to arouse the passions and sympathies of the jury was rejected as the State had attempted to introduce the photograph through a police investigator, to which defendant had objected, and the girlfriend was a proper witness to identify the distinguishing tattoos depicted in the photograph. Roy v. State, 878 So. 2d 84 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Rule 1002. Requirement of original.

To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided by law.

COMMENT

This rule is a statement of the so-called best evidence rule. The best evidence rule only applies to writings, recordings, or photographs, as defined in Rule 1001, when a party seeks to prove their contents.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Recording.
Writing.
Illustrative cases.

Recording.

There was no error when the court permitted the playing of an "enhanced" copy of an audiotape made during a drug transaction where a party to the transaction testified that it reflected an accurate recording of the conversation had between himself and the defendant, with the only alteration being the reduction of inconsequential background noise. Cook v. State, 728 So. 2d 117 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Writing.

Trial court incorrectly applied best evidence rule in excluding witness' testimony as to amount of his oral timber bid after his memory had been refreshed with his written bid; property owner was not seeking to introduce contents of the written memo evidencing the bid, but in essence was seeking to have witness testify to the oral agreement, and the best evidence rule was not a basis for exclusion. Kinard v. Morgan, 679 So. 2d 623 (Miss. 1996).

Illustrative cases.

To convict a defendant of trafficking in stolen firearms, the State did not need to enter the actual firearms into evidence as (1) there was no best evidence rule with regard to physical evidence that was not writings, recordings, or photographs; (2) requiring the State to offer actual firearms into evidence would impose a high burden on prosecutors and the courts in cases where there were large quantities of physical evidence; and (3) the State satisfied the relevancy and authentication requirements permitting the photographs of the firearms to be introduced into evidence. Riley v. State, 1 So. 3d 877 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 18 (Miss. 2009).

In a child custody modification proceeding, a private investigator's DVD was properly admitted because it satisfied the best evidence rule since there was no evidence in the record that the DVD was not the original and complete recording of the surveillance of the ex-wife. Pruett v. Prinz, 979 So. 2d 745 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

A chancellor erred in accepting a husband's check register as proof of payment of any installments of child support not conceded by the wife where it was uncontroverted that actual copies of the husband's cancelled checks were available from his bank, but the husband testified that he made no effort to obtain such copies because of his understanding that the cost of obtaining such copies would be prohibitive, while offering no evidence to that effect other than his own assertion and giving no clarification of what he considered to be a "prohibitive" cost. Dorr

v. Dorr, 797 So. 2d 1008 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Cited. Willis v. State, 911 So. 2d 947 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 1003. Admissibility of duplicates.

A duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original.

COMMENT

This rule is a change from existing Mississippi law. The Mississippi practice has been to exclude duplicates except in cases where the original was unavailable and there was a legitimate basis for the unavailability. See Turner v. Thomas, 77 Miss 864, 28 So. 803 (1900). A body of case law has developed to define "unavailability" and legitimate reasons for it. See Ellis & Williams, Mississippi Evidence, § 11-3.

Authenticity.

Chancery court correctly declined to exercise its equitable powers to determine that a partial copy of a reconveyance deed without an acknowledgment could be substituted for the original because the party seeking reconveyance had transferred his assets in order to conceal them from Medicaid and thus had unclean hands. Ellzey v. James, 970 So. 2d 193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In defendant's murder case, the trial court did not err in admitting the letter defendant allegedly wrote to a witness while in prison because defendant acknowledged that he wrote the letter, the letter presented in court was an exact duplicate of the original which was in his attorney's possession during trial, and the witness testified that the jail trustee specifically noted that the letter came from defendant. Brown v. State, 965 So. 2d 1023 (Miss. 2007).

Facsimile copy of a prior driving-under-the-influence conviction was properly admitted into evidence, despite the fact that the seal was blurred, because it was self-authenticating under Miss. R. Evid. 902(1), and no genuine question was raised as to the authenticity of the original under Miss. R. Evid. 1003. Lewis v. State, 831 So. 2d 553 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Photocopy of scratch pad sheet was a duplicate, and since opposing party raised no objection to its authenticity it was admissible to the same extent as an original; moreover, because original was destroyed by a party other than the proponent, the copy, even if not considered a duplicate original, would be admissible under M.R.E. 1004(1). Dixie Ins. Co. v. Mooneyhan, 684 So. 2d 574 (Miss. 1996).

E-mails.

Trial judge properly determined that the e-mails and letters were admissible and had been adequately authenticated under Miss. R. Evid. 1001 and Miss. R. Evid. 1003; the trial judge found that the witness had vouched for the accuracy of the e-mail printouts and the document that was hand-delivered to the witness, and the officer testified that defendant admitted that he sent the e-mails to witness as well. Kearley v. State, 843 So. 2d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 842 So. 2d 578 (Miss. 2003).

Videotapes.

Appellate court held that the admission of a videotape depicting the drug transaction was proper even though it was a copy, as the best evidence rule under Miss. R. Evid. 1003 did not preclude the use a copy of the tape. Griffin v. State, 918 So. 2d 882 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting a videotape that was a copy of the small tape used to film the drug sale; the confidential informant involved in the sale testified that what was seen on the tape accurately depicted what occurred at the sale. Seals v. State, 869 So. 2d 429 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

A copy of a videotape of a drug transaction was properly introduced into evidence where the prosecution explained that the original was in their possession, but that taping of other drug transactions was contained on the original and that, therefore, the copy of only the defendant's transaction was made from the original and offered into evidence. Trull v. State, 811 So. 2d 243 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 1004. Admissibility of other evidence of contents.

The original is not required, and other evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible if:

(1) Originals lost or destroyed. All originals are lost or have been destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith; or

(2) Original not obtainable. No original can be obtained by any available judicial process or procedure; or

(3) Original in possession of opponent. At a time when an original was under the control of the party against whom offered, he was put on notice, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the contents would be a subject of proof at the hearing, and he does not produce the original at the hearing; or

(4) Collateral matters. The writing, recording, or photograph is not closely related to a controlling issue.

COMMENT

Secondary evidence is admissible in lieu of the original in certain instances. Subsections 1, 2, and 3 conform to existing Mississippi case law. Subsection 4 dispenses with the best evidence rule in collateral matters. The rule follows the "English Rule" which holds that there are no degrees of secondary evidence. Secondary evidence is not ranked, and, thus, no principle of preference is established.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Originals lost or destroyed.

Photocopy of scratch pad sheet was a duplicate, and since opposing party raised no objection to its authenticity it was admissible to the same extent as an original; moreover, because original was destroyed by a party other than the proponent, the copy, even if not considered a duplicate original, would be admissible under M.R.E. 1004(1). Dixie Ins. Co. v. Mooneyhan, 684 So. 2d 574 (Miss. 1996).

Rule 1005. Public records.

The contents of an official record, or of a document authorized to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed, including data compilations in any form, if otherwise admissible, may be proved by copy, certified as correct in accordance with rule 902 or testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. If a copy which complies with the foregoing cannot be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, then other evidence of the contents may be given.

COMMENT

This rule is similar to Mississippi practice. It recognizes that it is improbable that one could utilize an original public record in court. Therefore, certified copies are admissible, as well as oral testimony of a witness who has compared the original with the copy. Rule 1005 differs from 1004 by recognizing "degrees" of secondary evidence in regard to the admission of public records.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Criminal convictions.

Abstracts of court records, when properly certified, are clearly allowed to prove prior convictions. McIlwain v. State, 700 So. 2d 586 (Miss. 1997).

Rule 1006. Summaries.

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court.

COMMENT

This rule represents a change in Mississippi practice. Rule 1006 refers to voluminous writings, as well as recordings and photographs. Under the rule, a summary of the voluminous material is sufficient as admissible evidence. The underlying material need not be introduced simultaneously into evidence as had been the practice in Mississippi. See Crawford v. State, 162 Miss. 158, 138 So. 589 (1932). This Mississippi court has treated the summaries as demonstrative tools rather than as evidence. Rule 1006 provides that the summaries are clearly admissible as evidence, but requires that the underlying material be made available to the other parties for their examination.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Business transactions.
Exclusion.
Inclusion.
Stipulations.

Business transactions.

In a prosecution for embezzlement, summary charts were properly admitted into evidence where the charts reflected some of the transactions at issue, the maker of the charts explained each chart in her testimony indicating that the charts reflected only some of the transactions, and the jury was provided the bank statements and checks that were reflected in the charts. Gulley v. State, 779 So. 2d 1140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Summary of retail store's business transactions was properly admitted at trial for embezzlement, where underlying bank deposits, cash register tapes and daily accounting sheets were prepared and utilized in the regular conduct of business, and summary was properly authenticated by store owner who prepared it with help of his bookkeeper, and owner was a witness with knowledge that the summary was what it was claimed to be. Wells v. State, 604 So. 2d 271 (Miss. 1992).

Exclusion.

In an injured party's negligence suit against a driver regarding an automobile accident, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to admit into evidence a summary of entries from the injured party's business time book, because the injured party's medical records were admitted into evidence and these items also detailed the times the injured party missed work for doctor visits. Dobbins v. Vann, 981 So. 2d 1041 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Inclusion.

Defendant could not object to the introduction of a document prepared by a police investigator purporting to be a list of the incoming and outgoing phone calls from defendant's cell phone based on the summary allegedly being inaccurate because defense counsel could have reviewed the cell phone's call log at any time prior to trial and if there was any inconsistency between the actual call log and the investigator's summary, defense counsel could have cross-examined the investigator regarding those inconsistencies. Esco v. State, 9 So. 3d 1156 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 228 (Miss. 2009).

Stipulations.

Where objections were raised about a compilation of calls to police for which there were no underlying reports of the calls, a stipulation was entered on the record and the effect of this stipulation was to remove the purpose of Rule 1006's requirement of providing the documents supporting a summary, to limit the impact of the compilations, and to inform the jury fully of the relevance of the exhibit. American Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Hogue, 749 So. 2d 1254 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

ALR. Admissibility of summaries or charts of writings, recordings, or photographs under Rule 1006 of Federal Rules of Evidence. 198 A.L.R. Fed. 427.

Rule 1007. Testimony or written admission of party.

Contents of writings, recordings, or photographs may be proved by the testimony or deposition of the party against whom offered or by his written admission, without accounting for the nonproduction of the original.

COMMENT

The original of a writing, recording, or photograph is not required to be produced if the party against whom it is offered testifies about, or admits in writing, the contents of such original.

Rule 1008. Functions of court and jury.

When the admissibility of other evidence of contents of writings, recordings, or photographs under these rules depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the question whether the condition has been fulfilled is ordinarily for the court to determine in accordance with the provisions of rule 104. However, when an issue is raised (a) whether the asserted writing ever existed, or (b) whether another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original, or (c) whether other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine as in the case of other issues of fact.

COMMENT

Most preliminary questions of fact regarding the best evidence rule will be decided by the judge pursuant to Rule 104. For example, the judge must decide whether the loss of the original has been established. On the other hand, questions which go to the merits of the case are properly jury questions, subject, however, to the control vested in the trial judge by Rule 104(b), supra.

ARTICLE XI. MISCELLANEOUS RULES

Rule 1101. Applicability of rules.

(a) Courts and proceedings. Except as otherwise provided by subdivision (b), these rules apply to all actions and proceedings in the courts of the State of Mississippi.

(b) Rules inapplicable. Except for the rules pertaining to privileges, these rules do not apply in the following situations:

(1) Preliminary questions of fact. The determination of questions of fact preliminary to admissibility of evidence when the issue is to be determined by the court under Rule 104(a).

(2) Grand jury. Proceedings before grand juries.

(3) Miscellaneous proceedings. Proceedings for extradition or rendition; probable cause hearings in criminal cases and youth court cases; sentencing; disposition hearings; granting or revoking probation; issuance of warrants for arrest, criminal summonses, and search warrants; and proceedings with respect to release on bail or otherwise.

(4) Contempt proceedings. Contempt proceedings in which the court may act summarily.

COMMENT

Subsection (a) provides for the applicability of the rules in all actions in courts in the state with enumerated exceptions which are set forth in Subsection (b).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Applicability.

National Crime Information Center report on defendant was admissible during sentencing proceedings as the rules of evidence were inapplicable during sentencing hearings. Armstrong v. State, 828 So. 2d 239 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Rule 1102. Title.

These rules shall be known as the Mississippi Rules of Evidence and may be cited as M.R.E., e.g., M.R.E. 501.

Rule 1103. Repeal of inconsistent evidentiary rules.

All evidentiary rules, whether provided by statute, court decision or court rule, which are inconsistent with the Mississippi Rules of Evidence are hereby repealed.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Blood alcohol test.
Harmless error.

Blood alcohol test.

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence results of blood alcohol test performed on defendant without his consent while he was unconscious; statutory exclusion was inconsistent with and required to yield to Mississippi Rules of Evidence, since it attempted to prohibit use of evidence which would otherwise be admissible under evidentiary rules. Whitehurst v. State, 540 So. 2d 1319 (Miss. 1989).

Harmless error.

Although it was arguable that the statute making treating family therapists' testimony inadmissible in family proceedings was repealed by Miss. R. Evid. 1103 because it conflicted with Miss. R. Evid. 601, any error was harmless because the excluded evidence in question was cumulative of other evidence provided by expert witnesses. Mabus v. Mabus, 890 So. 2d 806 (Miss. — 2003).

ORDER ADOPTING THE MISSISSIPPI RULES OF EVIDENCE

SUPREME COURT OF MISSISSIPPI

On May 15, 1985, this Court entered an Order effecting preliminary actions with regard to the adoption of The Mississippi Rules of Evidence. That Order was published in the Southern Reporter, Mississippi Edition, on June 6, 1985, and provided for a ninety (90) day period of time within which interested persons could submit to the Court and to the Advisory Committee On Rules views with respect to The Mississippi Rules of Evidence, or any of them. That ninety (90) day period of time has now elapsed, and the Court has received from a number of interested persons written suggestions as well as other less formal suggestions.

The Court now having heard and considered in their entirety The Mississippi Rules of Evidence, and each of them, and having received the comments and suggestions of interested persons and having carefully and deliberately considered the same, and being of the opinion that the fair and efficient administration of justice in the courts of this state will be promoted hereby, it is

ORDERED:

(a) That The Mississippi Rules of Evidence in the form attached hereto shall be, and the same hereby are adopted as rules of evidence governing proceedings in the courts of the State of Mississippi to the extent and with the exceptions provided in said rules;

(b) that the comments appended to each rule in The Mississippi Rules of Evidence shall be, and they hereby are, adopted as the Official Comments of the Court and these Comments shall be used by all courts as authoritative guides to the interpretation of these Rules;

(c) that The Mississippi Rules of Evidence shall govern all proceedings in any action had on or after January 1, 1986;

(d) that the Clerk of this Court shall be, and [s]he hereby is, authorized and directed to spread this order at large on the minutes of the Court and to forward a certified copy of this order and the rules attached hereto to West Publishing Company for publication as soon as is reasonably practicable in a forthcoming edition of the advance sheets of the Southern Reporter, Mississippi cases, the official reporter of decisions of this Court;

(e) that the Advisory Committee on Rules and each member thereof shall be, and they hereby are, commended for their outstanding, competent and diligent work in preparing and submitting to the Court The Mississippi Rules of Evidence together with the official comments thereto;

(f) that the Court expresses its appreciation to the Mississippi State Bar and the Mississippi Trial Lawyers Association and the members of each such organization for having filed with the Court petitions for the adoption of proposed Rules of Evidence and their having furnished to the Court insightful comments and critique and other assistance in the development of The Mississippi Rules of Evidence.

ORDERED this 24th day of September, 1985.

APPLICABILITY OF RULES

Rule 1. Scope of rules.

These rules govern procedure in appeals to the Supreme Court of Mississippi and the Court of Appeals of the State of Mississippi, and proceedings on petitions for writs or other relief which the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals or a justice of the Supreme Court or judge of the Court of Appeals is empowered to grant. When these rules provide for the making of a motion in the trial court, the procedure for making such motion shall be in accordance with the practice of the trial court.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 1 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 1, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXIII-XXIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

These rules are not to be construed to extend or limit jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, except that Rule 5 is intended to expand the occasions upon which the Court may exercise its power to hear interlocutory appeals. See Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. v. Holland, 469 So. 2d 55, 62-64 (Miss. 1985), (Anderson, J., concurring). The jurisdictional statute permits interlocutory appeals "in cases particularly provided for by law." Miss. Code Ann. § 9-3-9 (Supp. 1994). These rules are "law." See Newell v. State, 308 So. 2d 71 (Miss. 1975).

Rules which provide for the making of a motion in the trial court include Rules 4(g), extension of time to appeal; 6, determination of in forma pauperis status; 8(b), stay on appeal to be first sought in trial court; and 10(e) correction of record on appeal. Trial court practice is governed by the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, Mississippi Rules of Evidence, applicable uniform rules, and local rules where adopted pursuant to M.R.C.P. 83. The term "trial court" in these rules includes a circuit or chancery court sitting as an appellate court. Rule 46(b) concerning the admission of foreign attorneys governs admission in trial courts, in administrative agencies, and in the appellate courts.

The Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure, effective January 1, 1995, are based on the Mississippi Supreme Court Rules and were adopted to include procedure in the Court of Appeals of the State of Mississippi pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. §9-4-1 et seq. (Supp. 1994).

Rule 2. Penalties for noncompliance with rules; suspension of rules.

(a) Dismissal of appeal.

(1) Mandatory Dismissal. An appeal shall be dismissed if the notice of appeal was not timely filed pursuant to Rules 4 or 5.

(2) Discretionary Dismissal. An appeal may be dismissed upon motion of a party or on motion of the appropriate appellate court (i) when the court determines that there is an obvious failure to prosecute an appeal; or (ii) when a party fails to comply substantially with these rules. When either court, on its own motion or on motion of a party, determines that dismissal may be warranted under this Rule 2(a)(2), the clerk of the Supreme Court shall give written notice to the party in default, apprising the party of the nature of the deficiency. If the party in default fails to correct the deficiency within fourteen 14 days after notification, the appeal shall be dismissed by the clerk of the Supreme Court. The attorney for the party in default has the burden to correct promptly any deficiency or to see that the default is corrected by the appropriate official. Motions for additional time in which to file briefs will not be entertained after the notice of the deficiency has issued.

(b) Other sanctions. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may, after reasonable notice given by the clerk of the Supreme Court and opportunity to show cause to the contrary, and after hearing, if requested, impose such sanctions as may be appropriate on any party, court reporter, trial court clerk, or attorney who fails to comply with these rules or any order issued pursuant to these rules. Trial court judges have concurrent jurisdiction to sanction any party, court reporter, trial court clerk, or attorney who fails to comply with Rules 3, 10, and 11. A copy of any such sanction order shall be served on the clerk of the Supreme Court and may be reviewed by the Supreme Court for abuse of discretion.

(c) Suspension of rules. In the interest of expediting decision, or for other good cause shown, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may suspend the requirements or provisions of any of these rules in a particular case on application of a party or on its own motion and may order proceedings in accordance with its direction; provided, however, in civil cases the time for taking an appeal as provided in Rules 4 or 5 may not be extended. (Amended effective January 1, 1999.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 1, 1997, the Comment to Rule 2 was amended to reflect the promulgation of new Rule 4(h). 689-692 So.2d LXVI (West Miss. Cases 1997).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R. App. P. 2 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 2, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXIV-XXVI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective March 17, 1994, Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 2(a)(2) was amended to provide that if the party in default fails to correct the deficiency within 14 days after notification, the appeal shall be dismissed by the clerk. 632-635 So.2d XLII-XLIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1998.]

Perpetuating the spirit underlying the former rules of the Mississippi Supreme Court, the present rules will be construed to facilitate the just and efficient disposition of causes brought before the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. Accordingly, compliance with even the most technical requirements of the rules is encouraged.

Under Rule 2(a)(1), if an appeal is not taken within the time specified in Rules 4 or 5, either court, on its own motion or on motion of party, shall dismiss it. Rule 4(g) states when an extension of time may be granted by the trial court. Rule 2(c) provides for the suspension of Rule 2(a)(1) in criminal cases.

Where dismissal appears warranted for any other reason, the rule provides for the clerk to give written notice of the deficiency to counsel for the defaulting party. Specifically, the clerk will notify counsel that the party is in default in some manner and has 14 days to correct the noted deficiency. If the deficiency is not corrected within 14 days after notification, the appeal shall be dismissed by the clerk. In pro se proceedings, notification of deficiency shall be sent to the party. The rule recognizes that deficiencies may result from actions of third parties, such as court officials. The primary responsibility, however, for assuring correction of the deficiency remains with the defaulting party.

Rule 2(b) states the inherent disciplinary authority of either appellate court over parties and officers of the court. Because Rules 3, 10, and 11 involve actions to be taken in the trial court to prepare the appellate record, the rule recognizes the concurrent jurisdiction of the trial court to impose sanctions for noncompliance with those rules. See Wilson v. State, 461 So. 2d 728, 729 (Miss. 1984).

Rule 2(c) provides for suspension of the rules for reasons of expedition or good cause shown. It is important to note that in civil cases, under Rule 2(c), the Court may not extend the time for taking an appeal except as provided by Rule 4 (g) or (h). This is a departure from prior law. See Clark v. City of Pascagoula, 473 So.2d 477 (Miss.1985); but see Roberts v. Grafe Auto Co., Inc., 653 So.2d 250, 250-251 (Miss. 1994) (The Court held that several verdict forms signed by the trial court were not "final judgments" triggering the 30-day time for appeal. The Court further stated that "[e]ven assuming arguendo that the forms could be construed to be final judgments, [appellant] was never notified of their existence, and her right to due process would protect her from losing her right to appeal since she was not aware of the jury verdict forms and was not notified of their existence.") Where a party has filed an otherwise timely notice of appeal which is ineffective under Rule 4(d) or 4(e), the Court may, however, suspend the operation of 4(d) or 4(e) to prevent manifest injustice. This is not an extension of the "time for taking" the appeal. Also, because procedures for criminal appeals apply to post-conviction relief proceedings, Miss.Code Ann. § 99-39-25(1); Williams v. State, 456 So.2d 1042, 1043 (Miss.1984), the Supreme Court may suspend the rules and extend the time for taking an appeal in those proceedings. Rules 2(c) and 4(g) thus supplant the procedure described in Jones v. State, 355 So.2d 89, 90 (Miss.1978).

[Amended effective July 1, 1997; amended effective April 18, 2007.]

Discretionary dismissal.
Inherent power of supreme court.
Notice of default.
Suspension of rules.
Timeliness of appeal.

Discretionary dismissal.

Fugitive dismissal rule applied in a custody matter where a mother fled the jurisdiction with her children, and the mother's appeal of a chancery court order awarding custody of the children to their father was dismissed because dismissal was in the best interests of the children. D.C. v. D.C., 988 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1178, 129 S. Ct. 1320, 173 L. Ed. 2d 597, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1554, 77 U.S.L.W. 3468 (2009), remanded by 13 So. 3d 269, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 270 (Miss. 2009).

Rule 2(a)(2) applies to appeals from county court to circuit court. Van Meter v. Alford, 774 So. 2d 430 (Miss. 2000).

A motion to dismiss cannot be substituted for an official notice of deficiencies from the court clerk; even where a party has moved to dismiss, the plain language of Rule 2(a)(2) requires a notice from the clerk of the deficiency and a 14-day opportunity to cure the deficiency. Van Meter v. Alford, 774 So. 2d 430 (Miss. 2000).

Inherent power of supreme court.

When an appeal has been referred to the Court of Appeals and only then is it discovered that the appeal is interlocutory in nature, the court's authority to suspend the appellate rules under the rule and proceed to reach the merits of the case is the same as that possessed by the Supreme Court. McGriggs v. Montgomery, 710 So. 2d 886 (Ct. App. 1998).

Supreme Court's delegation of responsibility for attorney discipline to complaint tribunal and to Mississippi Bar, as expressed in Rules of Discipline, does not strip court of its fundamental responsibility to prevent injustice to litigants; court retains ability to regulate, pending further proceedings under rules, the operation of the courts and the fair and just progress of litigation. In re Lewis, 654 So. 2d 1379 (Miss. 1995).

Notice of default.

Circuit court erred in dismissing a lessor's appeal from a county court's judgment in favor of a lessee because the lessor was never informed of the deficiencies in his appellate brief and was never given 14 days to cure such deficiencies after receiving such notice as required by Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2). Adams v. A & C Entm't, 6 So. 3d 1082 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court erred in dismissing an employee's appeal of an order denying a claim for workers' compensation benefits because notwithstanding the employee's failure to file a brief pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2), the employee was entitled to written notice from the clerk of the deficiencies in the appeal and a 14-day period in which to cure any deficiencies. Thomas v. Five County Child Dev. Program, Inc., 958 So. 2d 247 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In employee's personal-injury action, although his brief was filed after the deadline, the supreme court never gave him notice of the alleged default and his brief was filed only two days after the deadline, and according to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2) well within the 14 days, the supreme court permitted parties to correct a deficiency; therefore, the employee's appeal was not dismissed under Rule 2. Green v. Allendale Planting Co., 954 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2007).

Dismissal of the citizen's action challenging the issuance of environmental permits was improper where the imperfection was in the bond amount, not in the notice of appeal; Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2) required the clerk of the court to give written notice to the citizen of his default and an opportunity to correct the deficiency before granting the dismissal. Wheeler v. Miss. Dep't of Envtl. Quality Permit Bd., 856 So. 2d 700 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Suspension of rules.

In a case in which defendant's appeal was clearly untimely under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(c), the appellate court suspended Rule 4(a) and heard defendant's appeal on the merits because defendant was represented by counsel, and there was a strong likelihood that any fault for the untimely appeal was not attributable to defendant. A dismissal for lack of jurisdiction by the appellate court would likely result in a subsequent claim by defendant of ineffective assistance of counsel. Williams v. State, 30 So. 3d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Where appellant's notice of appeal was filed one day late, but no mention of this jurisdictional issue was made by either appellant or the State, as the dismissal of the appeal for lack of jurisdiction would likely result in appellant's filing a motion for post-conviction relief citing ineffective assistance of appellate counsel based on the failure to file a timely notice of appeal, the court suspended the mandatory dismissal rule pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(c). Blakeney v. State, — So. 3d —, 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 887 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 8, 2009), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2009 Miss. App. LEXIS 978 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 8, 2009).

Since the circuit court dismissed defendant's motion for post-conviction relief on January 2, 2008, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), defendant's notice of appeal should have been filed by February 1, 2008; however, since the notice was not filed until February 25, 2008, the appeal was untimely, unless it is saved by the prison mailbox rule. Because there was no evidence in the record to show when defendant delivered his notice of appeal to prison officials, the appellate court exercised its discretion under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) to suspend the 30-day filing requirement, as defendant's filing may have been timely under the prison mailbox rule. Walton v. State, 16 So. 3d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Justice demanded that the appellate court suspend the time for taking an appeal and afford appellate review to defendant's fully briefed appeal. Dorsey v. State, 986 So. 2d 1080 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the denial of a motion for post-conviction relief because defendant did not file a notice of appeal within 30 days, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a); it declined to suspend the requirement under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) because defendant did not try to reopen the time for appeal or seek an extension. Minchew v. State, 967 So. 2d 1244 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Even though an appeal from the denial of post-conviction relief was not timely filed, an appellate court was permitted to consider the merits to prevent manifest injustice under Miss. R. App. P. 4(g), Miss. R. App. P. 2(c),and Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-25(1). Heafner v. State, 947 So. 2d 354 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court could not tell when defendant's petition was given to prison officials to mail, and it did not know when defendant received notice of the ruling on his motion by the circuit court; because of the unique circumstances presented in this case, the appellate court opted to exercise its discretion under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) to suspend the 30-day filing requirement to the extent defendant's filing may have been untimely under the prison mailbox rule; thus, jurisdiction was proper. Vance v. State, 941 So. 2d 225 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Suspension of Miss. R. App. 4(a) was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) because it was clearly not defendant's fault that his appeal was untimely; his counsel inadvertently failed to file defendant's motion for a new trial as well as the notice of appeal. McFarland v. State, 936 So. 2d 960 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant was not at fault for failing to file a formal notice of appeal from his conviction, and no in-court waiver of appeal had been made, the Supreme Court exercised its discretion, in the interests of justice, to allow defendant to file untimely appeal. DeLoach v. State, 890 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 2004).

Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) allows either the Mississippi Supreme Court or the Mississippi Court of Appeals to suspend the application of any of its rules upon its own motion in the interest of expediting a decision or for other good cause shown. Franklin v. Franklin, 864 So. 2d 970 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

While the trial court's authority to sua sponte grant a capital murder defendant an out-of-time appeal, almost one year after the denial of a motion for new trial, was doubtful, the demands of justice required suspension of the rules under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) and allowance of defendant's appeal. Coleman v. State, 804 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2002).

The court used its power to suspend the operation of the rules for good cause where the appellant failed to list an issue in the statement of issues in his brief, but the issue was listed in the table of contents as a separate issue and presented separately in the body of the brief. Starks v. State, 798 So. 2d 562 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A court may not suspend the rules regarding the time for taking a civil appeal. Pinkston v. Mississippi DOT, 757 So. 2d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where a petition for rehearing is granted and the result of the case changed, ultimate losing party should not be absolutely denied an opportunity to point out error which could not have been apparent in previous decision of the court. Shaw v. State, 702 So. 2d 386 (Miss. 1997).

Timeliness of appeal.

As victims of chemical exposure filed their notice of appeal almost 90 days after the entry of a trial court order, requiring enforcement of a settlement of the victims' personal injury claims against a pecan company, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider the validity of that order pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) and 4(a); the filing of a motion for relief from judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60(b) did not alter the 30-day jurisdictional filing requirement. Melton v. Smith's Pecans, 65 So. 3d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 65 So. 3d 310, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 342 (Miss. 2011).

Circuit court erred in dismissing an employee's appeal of a city civil service commission's affirmance of his termination on the ground that pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 5.05 his, decision to wait forty days before he requested its assistance in compelling the commission to file the transcript exceeded the allowable thirty days because under Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2), the employee was entitled to notice from the circuit clerk of the deficiency in his appeal and fourteen days to correct any deficiency, and that lack of notice and opportunity to remedy the deficiency deprived the employee of due process; the circuit court may still dismiss an appeal for which an appellant has failed to timely provide a record, but the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure apply to an appeal to circuit court. Fields v. City of Clarksdale, 27 So. 3d 464 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Circuit court erred in dismissing an employee's appeal of a city civil service commission's affirmance of his termination on the ground that pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 5.05 his, decision to wait forty days before he requested its assistance in compelling the commission to file the transcript exceeded the allowable thirty days because under Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2), the employee was entitled to notice from the circuit clerk of the deficiency in his appeal and fourteen days to correct any deficiency, and that lack of notice and opportunity to remedy the deficiency deprived the employee of due process; the circuit court may still dismiss an appeal for which an appellant has failed to timely provide a record, but the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure apply to an appeal to circuit court. Fields v. City of Clarksdale, 27 So. 3d 464 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Instead of filing a notice of appeal within the 30-day requirement, defendant's attorney filed additional post-trial motions; although the failure to timely file a notice of appeal would bar an appeal from review, under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c), the apepllate court could suspend the rules in the interest of expediting decision. Ross v. State, 16 So. 3d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Employer's motion to dismiss an employee's appeal from the denial of his workers' compensation benefits claim was denied because, when the employee eventually received an official notice from the supreme court clerk, he immediately cured the deficiencies within the 14-day time period of Miss. R. App. P. 2(a). Brown v. Robinson Prop. Group, Ltd., 24 So. 3d 320 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant failed to show why 30-day requirement of Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) should be suspended; therefore, a dismissal of defendant's appeal from the denial of his post-conviction relief petition was warranted. Moore v. State, 8 So. 3d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where an appellate court did not know when defendant delivered a notice of appeal to prison officials for mailing, nor did the court know when defendant received notice of the trial court's ruling on a motion for post-conviction relief, the court exercised its discretion under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) to suspend the 30-day requirement to the extent defendant's filing might have been untimely filed under the prison mailbox rule. Hunt v. State, 11 So. 3d 764 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where an attorney appealed the denial of unemployment benefits, it was error to find that the attorney's appeal was untimely based on the failure to include a civil cover sheet, because the attorney demonstrated good cause for an extension of the filing deadline since the cover sheet requirement did not bar the otherwise timely notice of appeal. Cummings v. Miss. Dep't of Empl. Sec., 980 So. 2d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's appeal of an order denying a motion to clarify a rape sentence was dismissed for lack of appellate jurisdiction where the notice of appeal was not filed within 30 days, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a); hence, the appellate court was required to dismiss the appeal pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1). Rabalais v. State, 986 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where appellant failed to timely file her appeal of a child custody order with the clerk of the trial court within thirty days from the entry of judgment as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The appellate court was required to dismiss the appeal in accordance with Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1). Dudley v. Harris, 979 So. 2d 692 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Given that defendant's notice of appeal occurred more than 30 days after the date of entry of the judgment or order appealed from, Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), defendant's appeal was procedurally barred. Lett v. State, 965 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. 2007).

Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1), defendant's appeal of the denial of post-conviction relief was dismissed for failure to timely file the appeal; the appeal was filed 67 days after the trial court denied the motion for post-conviction relief, well beyond the 30 days required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Craft v. State, 966 So. 2d 856 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order denying a motion to reconsider summary judgment because the order was not appealed within 30 days of its entry, notwithstanding that a circuit court clerk had failed to notify the parties of the order as required by Miss. R. Civ. P. 77(d). Payne v. Magnolia Healthcare, Inc., 984 So. 2d 290 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 291 (Miss. June 12, 2008).

Even though a notice of appeal was untimely in a case involving a motion for post-conviction relief, an appellate court chose to proceed with hearing the merits of such, due to the unique circumstances of the case. Jefferson v. State, 958 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Order denying defendant's third request for post-conviction relief was upheld where defendant's appeal was untimely under Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1); in addition, defendant failed to provide the appellate court with any facts that would satisfy any of the exceptions to the successive writ bar in Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6). Johnson v. State, 962 So. 2d 87 (Miss. Ct.

App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 551 (Miss. 2007).

As the state did not overcome the presumption that the inmate's notice of appeal from the denial of his motion for post-conviction relief was timely filed, the appeal did not have to be dismissed. Jewell v. State, 946 So. 2d 810 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 56 (Miss. 2007).

Court declined to dismiss the inmate's pro se appeal of the trial court's denial of his motion for post-conviction relief because the state had not established that the motion was filed outside of the 30-day time limitation when the mailbox rule applied to the inmate; there was no evidence to show that the inmate's motion was not presented for filing within the 30-day period. Melton v. State, 930 So. 2d 452 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) allowed the Court of Appeals of Mississippi, for good cause shown, to suspend the requirement of Miss. R. App. P. 4 that an appeal be filed within 30 days of the entry of judgment; however, the trial court judge committed no error in denying defendant's motion for out-of-time appeal, as the judge had no discretion to allow an out-of-time appeal outside of 180 days from the entry of judgment, and the appellate court concluded that it did not find that justice demanded granting defendant an out-of-time appeal 10 years after his conviction. Parker v. State, 921 So. 2d 397 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where defendant's conviction of misdemeanor driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor was affirmed on January 16, 2003, his motion for reconsideration and/or out of time appeal filed on December, 3, 2003 was untimely. The interests of justice did not favor allowing for an out-of-time appeal; defendant failed to prove his claim that he did not receive notice that his conviction was upheld. Havard v. State, 911 So. 2d 991 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Pursuant to the time periods for filing an appeal under Miss. R. App.P. 4(a) and 26(a), a terminated department of corrections employee's appeal of the circuit court's upholding of his termination was filed late and, because the circuit court had not granted his motion for a late appeal, the Supreme Court of Mississippi was without jurisdiction over the instant appeal, and the supreme court could not extend the time for filing. Redmond v. Miss. Dep't of Corr., 910 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant attempted an appeal of an order denying his motion for post-conviction relief, as the appeal was filed more than 30 days after entry of the order, it was untimely under Miss. R. App. 4(a), and was properly dismissed under Miss. R. App. 2(a)(1). Penn v. State, 909 So. 2d 135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) and 4(a), the appellate court will not consider an appeal that is not timely filed. The former employee filed her notice of appeal regarding the denial of unemployment benefits roughly 42 days after the entry of the final judgment, and her appeal was subject to dismissal for that reason alone. Westbrook v. Miss. Empl. Sec. Comm'n, 910 So. 2d 1135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) provides for the dismissal of an appeal if the notice is not timely filed. Hence, after summary judgment was awarded to a home inspector in a homeowner's action for fraud and negligence, an appellate court dismissed the appeal because the appeal was filed one day beyond the 30-day deadline in Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Hodnett v. Anderson, 913 So. 2d 994 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) reflects the long-standing principle in the State of Mississippi that the failure to file a timely appeal leaves the appellate court without jurisdiction to consider the case. Hodnett v. Anderson, 913 So. 2d 994 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Interlocutory appeal was never perfected by the lessors where it was obvious that other matters had to be addressed before a final resolution of the contempt issue could be reached; the decree from which the attempt to appeal was taken created ambiguities as to whether the trial court intended to enter an order of criminal or civil contempt. Morris v. Walden, 856 So. 2d 705 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Appellate court had to dismiss defendant's appeal of his conviction for burglary of a commercial building, as his failure to file a timely notice of appeal within 30 days of the date the trial court denied his post-trial motions meant the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear his appeal. Franklin v. State, 853 So. 2d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where bank filed its appeal more than thirty days after denial of its motion for new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict, bank was compelled to suffer penalty of dismissal, and bank's filing of motion for relief from judgment was irrelevant since filing of such a motion did not toll running of thirty-day time limit for appeal. Bank of Edwards v. Cassity Auto Sales, Inc., 599 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1992).

Appellant's notice of appeal was dismissed as untimely; legal holiday corresponding to Washington's birthday was governed by statute, and when properly computed, time for perfecting appeal had passed. Moore v. Wax, 554 So. 2d 312 (Miss. 1989).

Rule 3. Appeal as of right — How taken.

(a) Filing the notice of appeal. In all cases, both civil and criminal, in which an appeal is permitted by law as of right to the Supreme Court, there shall be one procedure for perfecting such appeal. That procedure is prescribed in these rules. All statutes, other sets of rules, decisions or orders in conflict with these rules shall be of no further force or effect. An appeal permitted by law as of right from a trial court to the Supreme Court shall be taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the trial court within the time allowed by Rule 4. Failure of an appellant to take any step other than the timely filing of a notice of appeal does not affect the perfection of the appeal, but is ground only for such action as the Supreme Court deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal. Interlocutory appeals by permission shall be taken in the manner prescribed by Rule 5.

(b) Joint or consolidated appeals. If two or more persons are entitled to appeal from a judgment or order of a trial court and their interests are such as to make joinder practicable, they may file a joint notice of appeal, or may join in appeal after filing separate timely notices of appeal, and they may thereafter proceed on appeal as a single appellant. Appeals may be consolidated by order of the Supreme Court (or of the Court of Appeals in cases assigned to the Court of Appeals) upon its own motion or upon motion of a party, or by stipulation of the parties to the several appeals.

(c) Content of the notice of appeal. The notice of appeal shall specify the party or parties taking the appeal and the party or parties against whom the appeal is taken, and shall designate as a whole or in part the judgment or order appealed from. An appeal shall not be dismissed for informality of form or title of the notice of appeal.

(d) Service of the notice of appeal. The clerk of the trial court shall serve notice of the filing of a notice of appeal by mailing a copy of the notice to counsel of record for each party other than the appellant, or, if a party is not represented by counsel, to the last known address of that party, and to the court reporter; and the clerk shall transmit to the clerk of the Supreme Court forthwith a copy of the notice of appeal, together with the docket fee as provided in Rule 3(e), and, with cost to the appellant, a certified copy of the trial court docket as of the date of the filing of the notice of appeal, a certified copy of the opinion, if any, and a certified copy of the judgment from which the appeal is being taken and a certified copy of the Civil Case Filing Form in civil cases or the Notice of Criminal Disposition Form in criminal cases. When an appeal is taken by a defendant in a criminal case, the clerk shall also serve a copy of the notice of appeal upon the defendant, either by personal service or by mail addressed to the defendant. The clerk shall note on each copy served the date on which the notice of appeal was filed. Failure of the clerk to serve notice shall not affect the perfection of the appeal. Service shall be sufficient notwithstanding the death of a party or the party's counsel. The clerk shall note in the docket the names of the parties to whom the clerk mails copies with the date of mailing.

(e) Payment of fees. Upon the filing of any separate or joint notice of appeal from the trial court, the appellant shall pay to the clerk of the trial court the docket fee to be received by the clerk of the trial court on behalf of the Supreme Court. (Amended June 21, 1996.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 3(d) was amended to require the clerk of the trial court to transmit the Civil Case Filing Form or the Notice of Criminal Disposition Form to the clerk of the Supreme Court. 673-678 So.2d XXXVII (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 3 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 3, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 3(d) was further amended to require the clerk of the trial court to transmit additional documents to the clerk of the Supreme Court. 644-647 So.2d XXVI-XXVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 3 was amended to note that the fee to be paid under Rule 3(e) is provided by statute. 632-635 So.2d V (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1997; July 1, 1998.]

COMMENT

Rule 3 and Rule 4 combine to set forth the procedures and time frame for perfecting an appeal. The same procedures are to be used for appeals in civil and criminal cases. Rules 10 and 11 state how the content of the record on appeal is determined and how the record is completed and transmitted to the Court.

Subdivision 3(a) departs from prior practice and provides that the only absolutely necessary step in the process is the timely filing of the notice of appeal. Form 1 in the Appendix of Forms is a suggested form of a notice of appeal. If the notice of appeal is not filed within the time specified in Rule 4, either the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, on its own motion or on motion of a party, will dismiss it. Failure to take any step, other than the timely filing of a notice of appeal, is ground for such action as either appellate court deems appropriate, which may include dismissal of the appeal. Steps which must be taken within seven days after filing the notice of appeal include the designation of the record under Rule 10(b)(1) and deposit of cost estimate under Rule 11(b)(1).

The appellant is required by M.R.C.P. 5(a) to serve on all parties a copy of the notice of appeal as submitted to the trial court clerk. Rule 3(d) requires the clerk to transmit to all parties and to the Supreme Court clerk copies of the notice of appeal indicating the date on which the notice of appeal was filed. Ordinarily, the appellant should supply the trial court clerk with a sufficient number of copies of the notice of appeal to accomplish this. The clerk may alternatively prepare the copies at the appellant's expense. The failure of the appellant or the trial court clerk to serve copies of the notice does not affect the perfection of the appeal.

The fee to be paid under Rule 3(e) is set by statute. See Miss. Code Ann. § 25-7-3 (1994).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Dismissal of Appeal.
Error not preserved.
Improper notice of appeal.
Order to compel arbitration.
Parties.
Sanctions.
Timeliness.

Dismissal of Appeal.

Supreme Court of Mississippi denied a natural father's motion to strike the adoptive parents' appellate brief and dismiss their appeal because, while the parents' notice of appeal should have included the final judgment, the basis of the appeal was abundantly clear from the parents' statement of the issues and their brief of appellant. K.D.F. v. J.L.H., 933 So. 2d 971 (Miss. 2006).

Error not preserved.

Whether a trial court erred in denying a defendant's motion to designate his motion for a reduction of sentence as a motion for post-conviction relief was not properly before the court of appeals because although defendant raised the issue in his brief, no notice of appeal was given on the issue. Seal v. State, 38 So. 3d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Appellant failed to include one of the parties to the wrongful death suit in her notice of appeal. Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 3(c), judicial review was limited to those parties named in appellant's notice of appeal. Estate of Perry v. Mariner Health Care, Inc., 927 So. 2d 762 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Because annexation objectors did not raise an issue at the trial level, the assignment of error was not properly preserved for purposes of appeal. Prestridge v. City of Petal, 841 So. 2d 1048 (Miss. 2003).

Improper notice of appeal.

Where an attorney appealed the denial of unemployment benefits, it was error to find that the attorney's appeal was untimely based on the failure to include a civil cover sheet, because the attorney demonstrated good cause for an extension of the filing deadline since the cover sheet requirement did not bar the otherwise timely notice of appeal. Cummings v. Miss. Dep't of Empl. Sec., 980 So. 2d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Mother failed to comply with the Miss. R. App. P. 3 requirements where the event leading to her appeal had not yet occurred at the time she filed her notice of appeal, and thus the issue was not properly before the supreme court; however, the supreme court addressed the issue on its merits. J.E.W. v. T.G.S., 935 So. 2d 954 (Miss. 2006).

Order to compel arbitration.

A trial court's order compelling arbitration which disposes of all the issues before the court or orders the entire controversy to be arbitrated is a final decision, and therefore, immediately appealable, and further, any final decision with respect to arbitration is appealable to the Supreme Court pursuant to Miss. R. App. 3 and 4 (overruling Banks v. City Finance Co., 825 So. 2d 642 (Miss. 2002)). Sawyers v. Herrin-Gear Chevrolet Co., 26 So. 3d 1026 (Miss. 2010).

Parties.

Although a transportation company entered its appearance in an appeal and filed a brief, this action did not make it a party to the appeal since it was not made a party pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 3(c). Boyd Tunica, Inc. v. Premier Transp. Servs., 30 So. 3d 1242 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Sanctions.

Because Rule 3(a) is permissive as to the imposition of sanctions for appellate deficiencies, the appellate court should consider the full panoply of sanctions before imposing the most harsh sanction of dismissal. Van Meter v. Alford, 774 So. 2d 430 (Miss. 2000).

The dismissal of an appeal was too harsh a sanction where the appellant was delinquent in filing a designation of record, an estimation of costs, and a certificate of compliance. Van Meter v. Alford, 774 So. 2d 430 (Miss. 2000).

Timeliness.

Grandmother's appeal was timely where an immediate appeal of a denial of an application for leave to intervene under Miss. R. Civ. P. 24 was not required and the father did not file a brief in the current appeal, Miss. R. App. P. 31(d). S.G. v. D.C., 13 So. 3d 269 (Miss. 2009).

Rule 4. Appeal as of right — When taken.

(a) Appeal and cross-appeals in civil and criminal cases. Except as provided in Rules 4(d) and 4(e), in a civil or criminal case in which an appeal or cross-appeal is permitted by law as of right from a trial court to the Supreme Court, the notice of appeal required by Rule 3 shall be filed with the clerk of the trial court within 30 days after the date of entry of the judgment or order appealed from. If a notice of appeal is mistakenly filed in the Supreme Court, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall note on it the date on which it was received and transmit it to the clerk of the trial court and it shall be deemed filed in the trial court on the date so noted.

(b) Notice before entry of judgment. A notice of appeal filed after the announcement of a decision or order but before the entry of the judgment or order shall be treated as filed after such entry and on the day of the entry.

(c) Notice by another party. If a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a notice of appeal within 14 days after the date on which the first notice of appeal was filed, or within the time otherwise prescribed by this rule, whichever period last expires.

(d) Post-trial motions in civil cases. If any party files a timely motion of a type specified immediately below the time for appeal for all parties runs from the entry of the order disposing of the last such motion outstanding. This provision applies to a timely motion under the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure (1) for judgment under Rule 50(b); (2) under Rule 52(b) to amend or make additional findings of facts, whether or not granting the motion would alter the judgment; (3) under Rule 59 to alter or amend the judgment; (4) under Rule 59 for a new trial; or (5) for relief under Rule 60 if the motion is filed no later than 10 days after the entry of judgment. A notice of appeal filed after announcement or entry of the judgment but before disposition of any of the above motions is ineffective to appeal from the judgment or order, or part thereof, specified in the notice of appeal, until the entry of the order disposing of the last such motion outstanding. Notwithstanding the provisions of Appellate Rule 3(c), a valid notice of appeal is effective to appeal from an order disposing of any of the above motions.

(e) Post-trial motions in criminal cases. If a defendant makes a timely motion under the Uniform Criminal Rules of Circuit Court Practice (1) for judgment of acquittal notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, or (2) for a new trial under Rule 5.16, the time for appeal for all parties shall run from the entry of the order denying such motion. Notwithstanding anything in this rule to the contrary, in criminal cases the 30 day period shall run from the date of the denial of any motion contemplated by this subparagraph, or from the date of imposition of sentence, whichever occurs later. A notice of appeal filed after the court announces a decision sentence, or order but before it disposes of any of the above motions, is ineffective until the date of the entry of the order disposing of the last such motion outstanding, or until the date of the entry of the judgment of conviction, whichever is later. Notwithstanding the provisions of Appellate Rule 3(c), a valid notice of appeal is effective to appeal from an order disposing of any of the above motions.

(f) Parties under disability. In the case of parties under a disability of infancy or unsoundness of mind, the various periods of time for which provision is made in this rule and within which periods of time action must be taken shall not begin to run until the date on which the disability of any such party shall have been removed. However, in cases where the appellant infant or person of unsound mind was a plaintiff or complainant, and in cases where such a person was a party defendant and there had been appointed for him or her a guardian ad litem, appeals to the Supreme Court shall be taken in the manner prescribed in this rule within two years of the entry of the judgment or order which would cause to commence the running of the 30 day time period for all other appellants as provided in this rule.

(g) Extensions. The trial court may extend the time for filing a notice of appeal upon motion filed not later than 30 days after the expiration of the time otherwise prescribed by this rule. Any such motion which is filed before expiration of the prescribed time may be granted for good cause and may be ex parte unless the court otherwise requires. Notice of any such motion which is filed after expiration of the prescribed time shall be given to other parties, and the motion shall be granted only upon a showing of excusable neglect. No such extension shall exceed 30 days past such prescribed time or 10 days from the date of entry of the order granting the motion, whichever occurs later.

(h) Reopening time for appeal. The trial court, if it finds (a) that a party entitled to notice of the entry of a judgment or order did not receive such notice from the clerk or any party within 21 days of its entry and (b) that no party would be prejudiced, may, upon motion filed within 180 days of entry of the judgment or order or within 7 days of receipt of such notice, whichever is earlier, reopen the time for appeal for a period of 14 days from the date of entry of the order reopening the time for appeal.

(i) Taxpayer appeals. If the board of supervisors of any county, or the mayor and board of aldermen of any city, town or village, or any other board, commission or other officer of any county, or municipality, or district, sued in an official capacity, fails to file a notice of appeal under Rule 4(a) within 20 days after the date of entry of an adverse judgment or order, or within 7 days after filing of a notice by another party pursuant to Rule 4(c), any taxpayer of the county, municipality or district shall have the right at the taxpayer's own expense to employ private counsel to prosecute the appeal in compliance with these rules. If the governmental entity files a notice of appeal, the appeal shall not be dismissed if any such taxpayer objects and prosecutes the appeal at the taxpayer's own expense. (Amended effective July 1, 1997; July 1, 1998.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 1, 1997, a new Rule 4(h) was added to provide for reopening of time for appeal in the event that a notice of entry of judgment is not received. The former Rule 4(h) was redesignated 4(i). 689-692 So. 2d LXII (West Miss. Cases 1997).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 4 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 4, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXVII-XXX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 4 was amended to delete references to repealed statutes and material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice. 632-635 So. 2d V (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 4 was amended to provide that the date of the entry of the judgment is the date the judgment is entered in the general docket of the clerk of court, and to delete an outdated case citation. 632-635 So.2d XLIV-XLV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1997; July 1, 1998.]

Rule 4 applies to appeals and cross-appeals in all civil and criminal cases. The date of entry of judgment is the date the judgment is entered in the general docket of the clerk of the court. M.R.C.P. 58.

The notice of appeal requirement applies to all forms of appeal, including cross-appeals. Rule 4(c) requires that a notice of appeal for a cross-appeal be filed within 14 days after the date on which the first notice of appeal was filed, unless a longer period is prescribed by another provision of Rule 4.

Previously, Rule 4(d) specified certain post-trial motions that had to await disposition before a valid notice of appeal could be filed. Any notice of appeal filed before such disposition had no force or effect. Rule 4(e) had the same provisions for specified post-trial motions in criminal cases. Those provisions of Rules 4(d) and 4(e), however, created a trap for an unsuspecting litigant who filed a notice of appeal before a post trial motion, or while a post trial motion was pending. Because the Rules required a party to file a new notice of appeal after the motion's disposition, unless a new notice was filed the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. See In re Kimbrough, 680 So.2d 799 (Miss.1996). Many litigants, especially pro se litigants, failed to file the second notice of appeal, and the Court expressed dissatisfaction with the rule. See id. (Banks, J., dissenting) and (McRae, J., dissenting).

Rules 4(d) and 4(e) now provide that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a specified post trial motion will become effective upon disposition of the motion. A notice filed before the filing of one of the specified motions or after the filing of a motion but before its disposition is, in effect, suspended until the motions disposition, whereupon the previously filed notice effectively places jurisdiction in the Supreme Court. Still, ordinarily, the filing of a notice of appeal should come after the disposition of these motions. An appeal should not be noticed and docketed in the Supreme Court while it is still possible that the appealing party may obtain relief in the trial court.

Because a notice of appeal will ripen into an effective appeal upon disposition of a post trial motion, in some instances there will be an appeal from a judgment that has been altered substantially because the motion was granted in whole or in part. Many such appeals will be dismissed for want of prosecution when the appellant fails to meet the briefing schedule. But, the appellee may also move to strike the appeal. When responding to such a motion, the appellant would have an opportunity to state that, even though some relief sought in a post trial motion was granted, the appellant still plans to pursue the appeal. Because the appellant's response would provide the appellee with sufficient notice of the appellant's intentions, an additional notice of appeal is unnecessary.

While Rule 4 is patterned after its Federal counterpart, Rule 4(d) departs from Federal practice by providing that a valid notice of appeal is effective to appeal from an order disposing of a post trial tolling motion. Under Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(4), if a party wishes to appeal from the disposition of a post trial tolling motion, the party must amend the notice to so indicate. However, requiring amendment of the notice of appeal would create a new, albeit less severe, trap for unsuspecting litigants, without serving a substantial purpose.

Rule 4(d) is also amended to include, among motions that extend the time for filing a notice of appeal, a Rule 60 motion that is filed within 10 days after entry of judgment. This eliminates the difficulty of determining whether a post trial motion made within 10 days after entry of a judgment is a Rule 59 motion, which tolls the time for filing an appeal, or a Rule 60 motion, which historically has not tolled the time. See Michael v. Michael, 650 So.2d 469 (Miss. 1995).

Rule 4(f) continues to recognize an extension for parties under a legal disability. See Parks v. Knight, 491 So. 2d 217 (Miss. 1986).

Rule 4(g) is based on Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(5). A motion filed before expiration of the 30 day period may be ex parte and may be granted for any "good cause." This standard is identical to that found in Rule 26. The extension may not go beyond 30 days after the time prescribed in Rule 4(a).

If the motion is not filed until the extension period has begun to run, the burden rests on the appellant to show the failure to file a timely notice was a result of "excusable neglect." Mere failure to learn of entry of the judgment is generally not a ground for showing excusable neglect. Counsel in a case taken under advisement has a duty to check the docket regularly. But see City of Gulfport v. Saxon, 437 So. 2d 1215, 1217 (Miss. 1983) (when trial court sits as an appellate court, parties may reasonably expect notification from the court or clerk when a ruling is made). Filing a notice is a simple act, and a party must do all it could reasonably be expected to do to perfect the appeal in a timely fashion. Counsel's failure to read published rules of court and counsel's reliance on mistaken legal advice from a trial court clerk will not show excusable neglect. Campbell v. Bowlin, 724 F. 2d 484, 488 (5th Cir. 1984); Reed v. Kroger Co., 478 F. 2d 1268 (T.E.C.A. 1973). Excusable neglect will not be shown by counsel's busy trial schedule. Pinero Schroeder v. Fed. Nat'l Mtg. Ass'n, 574 F. 2d 1117 (1st Cir. 1978).

On the other hand, a party misled by actions of the court can establish excusable neglect. See Chipser v. Kohlmeyer & Co., 600 F. 2d 1061, 1063 (5th Cir. 1979); In re Morrow, 502 F. 2d 520, 522 (5th Cir. 1974) (dictum). Excusable neglect may be shown where a timely mailed notice was late because of unanticipated and uncontrollable delays in the mail. Fallen v. United States, 378 U.S. 139, 84 S. Ct. 1689, 12 L. Ed. 2d 760 (1964). See generally, 20 W. Moore, Federal Practice § 304-13.

An excusable neglect motion must be filed within the 30 day extension period. The extension will be limited to that period, or to a period ending 10 days after the entry of an order granting the motion, whichever occurs later.

In criminal cases, the Court may suspend Rule 4 to permit out of time appeals. Post-conviction relief proceedings are governed by the rules controlling criminal appeals. See Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-25(1)(1994); Williams v. State, 456 So. 2d 1042, 1043 (Miss. 1984). No such suspension, however, is permitted in a civil case. See Rules 2(c); 26(b).

Rule 4(h) is patterned after Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(6), which was added to the Federal Rules in 1991. Rule 4(h) provides a limited opportunity for relief, independent of and in addition to that available under Rule 4(g), in circumstances where the notice of entry of a judgment or order, required to be mailed by the clerk of the trial court pursuant to Rule 77(d) of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, is either not received by a party or is received so late as to impair the opportunity to file a timely notice of appeal. Rule 4(h) allows a trial court to reopen for a brief period the time for appeal upon a finding that notice of entry of a judgment or order was not received from the clerk or a party within 21 days of its entry and that no party would be prejudiced. While the party seeking relief under Rule 4(h) bears the burden of persuading the trial court of lack of timely notice, a specific factual denial of receipt of notice rebuts and terminates the presumption that mailed notice was received. See Nunley v. City of Los Angeles, 52 F.3d 792, 798 (9th Cir. 1995). "Prejudice" means some adverse consequence other than the cost of having to oppose the appeal and encounter the risk of reversal, consequences that are present in every appeal. Prejudice might arise, for example, if the appellee had taken some action in reliance on the expiration of the normal time period for filing a notice of appeal.

While the trial court retains some discretion to refuse to reopen the time for appeal even when the requirements of Rule (4)(h) are met, the concept of excusable neglect embodied in Rule 4(g) simply has no place in the application of Rule 4(h). See Avolio v. Suffolk, 29 F.3d 50, 53 (2d Cir. 1994). "To hold otherwise would negate the addition of Rule 4[h], which provides an avenue of relief separate and apart from Rule 4[g]." Nunley v. City of Los Angeles, 52 F.3d 792, 797 (9th Cir. 1995). Thus, "where non-receipt has been proven and no other party would be prejudiced, the denial of relief cannot rest on [a lack of excusable neglect, such as] a party's failure to learn independently of the entry of judgment during the thirty-day period for filing notices of appeal." Id. at 798.

Reopening may be ordered only upon a motion filed within 180 days of the entry of a judgment or order or within 7 days of receipt of notice of such entry, whichever is earlier. This provision establishes an outer time limit of 180 days for a party who fails to receive timely notice of entry of a judgment or order to seek additional time to appeal and enables any winning party to shorten the 180-day period by sending (and establishing proof of receipt of) its own notice of entry of a judgment or order, as authorized by Miss. R. Civ. P. 77(d). Winning parties are encouraged to send their own notice in order to lessen the chance that a judge will accept a claim of non-receipt in the face of evidence that notices were sent by both the clerk and the winning party. Receipt of a winning party's notice will shorten only the time for reopening the time for appeal under this subdivision, leaving the normal time periods for appeal unaffected.

If the motion is granted, the trial court may reopen the time for filing a notice of appeal only for a period of 14 days from the date of entry of the order reopening the time for appeal.

The taxpayer who prosecutes an appeal under Rule 4(i) must comply with these rules and file a timely notice of appeal under 4(a), or 4(c), if applicable.

Applicability to administrative appeals.

Erroneous filing of a timely notice of appeal seeking review of a decision of the Mississippi Oil and Gas Board adopting a rule regarding disposal of waste from gas production sites containing radioactive material directly with the chancery court having jurisdiction over the action rather than with the Board did not deprive the chancery court of jurisdiction to consider the appeal; appellate court applied the analogous provisions of Miss. R. App. 4 to find that the filing was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the chancery court. Adams v. Miss. State Oil & Gas Bd., 854 So. 2d 7 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Cross-appeals.

Passenger did not file a cross-appeal against a bus owner, even though she could have done so pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(c) if she felt aggrieved by the trial court's failure to instruct the jury regarding the owner's heightened duty of care that it owed her Boyd Tunica, Inc. v. Premier Transp. Servs., 30 So. 3d 1242 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In a child support and visitation case, a mother's appeal was procedurally barred under Miss. R. App. P. 4 because it was filed more than 14 days after the date the notice of appeal was filed. Allen v. Allen, 953 So. 2d 279 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

An appellee should not be required to file a cross-appeal unless he or she is aggrieved by the trial court's judgment. Dunn v. Dunn, 853 So. 2d 1150 (Miss. 2003).

Where wife won a favorable judgment in the chancery court, her position on appeal was to have the appellate court affirm the judgment; she did not seek to alter or reverse the judgment below, and therefore, she was not required to raise any issues on cross-appeal, and could not raise an issue that had not ripened. Dunn v. Dunn, 853 So. 2d 1150 (Miss. 2003).

Dismissal proper.

Intervenor argued that Miss. R. App. P. 4(i) supported his right to intervene, post-judgment; however, the suit had been dismissed pursuant to an agreement in another suit, and the intervenor failed to realize that a fundamental element of the rule required an adverse judgment or order. Hayes v. Leflore County Bd. of Supervisors, 935 So. 2d 1015 (Miss. 2006).

Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) and 4(a), the appellate court will not consider an appeal that is not timely filed. The former employee filed her notice of appeal regarding the denial of unemployment benefits roughly 42 days after the entry of the final judgment by the circuit court, and her appeal was subject to dismissal for that reason alone. Westbrook v. Miss. Empl. Sec. Comm'n, 910 So. 2d 1135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion by denying defendant's out-of-time appeal where he failed to file his notice of appeal within the required 30-day period of Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) and had not shown excusable neglect or any other exception to justify allowing the untimely appeal. Monroe v. State, 843 So. 2d 83 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

The appellate court properly dismissed defendant's appeal for lack of jurisdiction where the record did not reflect that there was ever an order granting or denying defendant's motion to reopen time for appeal. Since the trial court had made no ruling on defendant's motion to reopen time for appeal, the appellate court did not have the jurisdiction necessary to hear the appeal. Forkner v. State, 852 So. 2d 604 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Rather than timely appealing to the appellate court the denial of his first motion for reconsideration, the husband chose to wait and file a second motion for reconsideration after the time had expired for filing a notice of appeal to the appellate court; such an appeal was untimely and the case was properly dismissed. Bresler v. Bresler, 824 So. 2d 641 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where the appellant failed to perfect her appeal within the required 30 days and she could not show that the failure to timely perfect her appeal was a result of excusable neglect, the court would refrain from addressing the issues raised by her appeal. Harlow v. Grandma's House, Inc., 730 So. 2d 73 (Miss. 1998).

Chancellor abused his discretion in allowing plaintiff's late appeal, where plaintiff made no showing of excusable neglect and gave no reason at all for delay in filing notice of appeal, and where she failed to provide defendants with notice of her motion for leave to appeal out of time. Guthrie v. Renfroe, 703 So. 2d 846 (Miss. 1997).

Where bank filed its appeal more than thirty days after denial of its motion for new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict, bank was compelled to suffer penalty of dismissal, and bank's filing of motion for relief from judgment was irrelevant since filing of such a motion did not toll running of thirty-day time limit for appeal. Bank of Edwards v. Cassity Auto Sales, Inc., 599 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1992).

Supreme court had no jurisdiction to hear appeal, where more than six months had passed since date of order which had actually resolved the issue in question. Pittman v. Commonwealth Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 562 So. 2d 73 (Miss. 1990).

Appellant's notice of appeal was dismissed as untimely; legal holiday corresponding to Washington's birthday was governed by statute, and when properly computed, time for perfecting appeal had passed. Moore v. Wax, 554 So. 2d 312 (Miss. 1989).

Extensions of time.

Where a husband filed a notice of appeal in a property distribution matter 49 days after the entry of the original judgment, but only 19 days after the chancery court's sua sponte order of clarification, the appellate court had no authority to remand the case for the chancery court to rule on whether the notice of appeal should have been treated as a motion for extension of time under Miss. R. App. P. 4(g). Penton v. Penton, — So. 3d —, 2010 Miss. App. LEXIS 186 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 13, 2010).

No order was entered extending the time for filing a notice of appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), and although the parties appeared to have agreed that the issue of timeliness of the appeal would not be raised, an appellate court was required to note its own lack of jurisdiction. Because the appeal was not timely filed, it was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Dawson v. Burt Steel, Inc., 986 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Because the circuit court granted appellant's motion for extension of time to file her notice of appeal at the request of the appellate court, appellant's notice of appeal was timely. Busby v. Anderson, 978 So. 2d 670 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by, appeal dismissed by 978 So. 2d 637, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 167 (Miss. 2008).

Although the employee argued that, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(g), the trial court never considered whether excusable neglect existed so as to allow her an extension of time in which to file an appeal, that issue, among others, was discussed at the hearing on the matter; the appellate court could not find that the trial judge had abused his discretion in failing to specifically delineate his reasons for denying the motion as the parties were aware of the issues the trial judge was ruling on as they had previously argued the issues before the trial judge. Odom v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 906 So. 2d 797 (Miss. Ct. App. — 2004).

Justice demanded that defendant's out-of-time criminal appeal be allowed because defendant did nothing to delay the perfection of his appeal; once appointed, new counsel was timely in all post-trial filings. McGruder v. State, 886 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 2003).

Circuit court erred in allowing defendant's out-of-time appeal where defendant did not file a notice of appeal within 180 days of the original entry of the order as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(h); furthermore, neither the circuit court nor the appellate court had the authority to suspend the time limit. King v. City of Richland, 856 So. 2d 667 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

Appellate court was required to dismiss appeal not only because defendant did not file a timely notice of appeal within 30 days of the trial court's denial of defendant's post-trial motions, but defendant did not file a motion to reopen the time for appeal which could have extended the time for defendant to appeal to 180 days from the date the final judgment was entered against him. Franklin v. State, 853 So. 2d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The appellant was not entitled to an extension of time to file a notice of appeal on the basis of lack of notice of the entry of judgment. Pinkston v. Mississippi DOT, 757 So. 2d 1071 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Infancy.

Defendant was an infant, under the age of 21, at the time his motion for post-conviction collateral relief was denied. Thus, he had two years in which to file a timely appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 4(f). Haynes v. State, 906 So. 2d 762 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for out of time appeal where, within time for giving notice of appeal, he asked his attorney to appeal and his attorney failed to perfect an appeal, through no fault of defendant; moreover, running of time for filing notice of appeal was tolled for a substantial period of time, following entry of final judgment, due to defendant's minority. Triplett v. State, 579 So. 2d 555 (Miss. 1991).

Infant's notice of appeal was filed within two years of order denying her motion for relief of judgment, and therefore it was effective to place appeal on docket of supreme court and perfect an appeal of and from the circuit court's order. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 535 So. 2d 589 (Miss. 1988).

Order to compel arbitration.

A trial court's order compelling arbitration which disposes of all the issues before the court or orders the entire controversy to be arbitrated is a final decision, and therefore, immediately appealable, and further, any final decision with respect to arbitration is appealable to the Supreme Court pursuant to Miss. R. App. 3 and 4 (overruling Banks v. City Finance Co., 825 So. 2d 642 (Miss. 2002)). Sawyers v. Herrin-Gear Chevrolet Co., 26 So. 3d 1026 (Miss. 2010).

Post-conviction relief.

State wholly failed to meet its burden of proving that an inmate failed to comply with Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) because the circuit court filed an order on December 19, 2008, dismissing the inmate's motion for post-conviction relief and then filed a second order to a slightly different effect on December 29, 2008; the inmate's appeal was taken from the second order and was filed on February 5, 2009. Catchings v. State, 35 So. 3d 552 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Dismissal of appellant's, an inmate's, motion for postconviction relief was appropriate because the motion was barred as a successive writ under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6). The inmate failed to appeal the dismissal of his first motion, on August 1, 2007, and the 30-day deadline for the inmate to appeal, which was calculated from the entry date of the August 1, 2007 judgment, had long since passed, Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Aguirre v. State, 25 So. 3d 1102 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

State wholly failed to meet its burden of proving that an inmate failed to comply with Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) because the circuit court filed an order on December 19, 2008, dismissing the inmate's motion for post-conviction relief and then filed a second order to a slightly different effect on December 29, 2008; the inmate's appeal was taken from the second order and was filed on February 5, 2009. Catchings v. State, 35 So. 3d 552 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Inmate's motion for postconviction relief was barred as a successive writ under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6), where the inmate failed to appeal the dismissal of his first motion within the 30-day deadline for the inmate to appeal. Aguirre v. State, 25 So. 3d 1102 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

From the petitioner's challenge to the denial of his request for post-conviction relief following his guilty plea to touching a child for lustful purposes, the State's claim that the petitioner's motion was time-barred failed because it neither included any evidence of when the petitioner deposited his petition with prison officials nor pointed to evidence supported its position. Because the petitioner's petition was stamped filed within a reasonable period of time after the expiration of the three-year limitation, and the State failed to overcome the presumption of timeliness, it' claim was without merit. Lewis v. State, 988 So. 2d 942 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the denial of a motion for post-conviction relief because defendant did not file a notice of appeal within 30 days, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a); it declined to suspend the requirement under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) because defendant did not try to reopen the time for appeal or seek an extension. Minchew v. State, 967 So. 2d 1244 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Even though an appeal from the denial of post-conviction relief was not timely filed, an appellate court was permitted to consider the merits to prevent manifest injustice under Miss. R. App. P. 4(g), Miss. R. App. P. 2(c), and Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-25(1). Heafner v. State, 947 So. 2d 354 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's motion for post-conviction relief but held that the notice of appeal was timely under the prison mailbox rules and Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) as the notice was received shortly after the 30-day time period and the state did not overcome the presumption of timeliness. Jewell v. State, 946 So. 2d 810 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 947 So. 2d 960, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 56 (Miss. 2007).

Court declined to dismiss the inmate's pro se appeal of the trial court's denial of his motion for post-conviction relief because the state had not established that the motion was filed outside of the 30-day time limitation when the mailbox rule applied to the inmate; there was no evidence to show that the inmate's motion was not presented for filing within the 30-day period. Melton v. State, 930 So. 2d 452 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's motion for post-conviction relief as the appeal of the denial of the motion was filed well beyond the 30-day time limit imposed by Miss. R. App. P. 4(h). Keyes v. State, 918 So. 2d 76 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where the circuit court denied appellant's petition for postconviction relief on July 2, 2003 and appellant filed his appeal on September 5, 2003, the appeal was untimely. Pearson v. State, 906 So. 2d 788 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Motion for post-conviction collateral relief was properly dismissed as untimely where defendant filed his notice of appeal well beyond the 30 days allowed for prosecuting appeals from a final judgment of the trial court. Mosby v. State, 830 So. 2d 661 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 830 So. 2d 1251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Post-trial motions in civil cases.

Chancellor property denied a lessee's motion to clarify a judgment declaring a farm lease void where the motion to clarify, filed approximately 18 months after the lessee's motion for reconsideration was denied, was untimely under Miss. R. Civ. P. 59(e); because the motion to clarify was untimely, the lessee's appeal was untimely under Miss. R. App. P. 4(d). Brand v. Barr, 980 So. 2d 962 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a divorce case, a notice of appeal was timely under Miss. R. App. P. 4(b) where a husband's notice of appeal was filed while motions were still pending before the trial court; the notice was suspended pending disposition of the wife's motions, and it was revived upon their disposition. Phelps v. Phelps, 937 So. 2d 974 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying defendants motion pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), as defendants presented two affidavits specifically denying receipt by their respective law firms of notice of the entry of the judgment and order. Thus, the presumption that notice was received was both rebutted and terminated. Pre-Paid Legal Servs. v. Anderson, 873 So. 2d 1008 (Miss. 2004).

When the appellant filed his notice of appeal prior to the court's disposition of the appellee's motion for new trial, the notice's effectiveness was postponed but not canceled, and it became effective again without further action on the appellant's part when the chancellor entered judgment on the last outstanding post-trial motion; thus, it was not necessary for the appellant to file a supplemental notice of appeal and, therefore, the judge's denial of the appellant's motion to supplement did not preclude appellate consideration of the appeal which was initiated prior to the trial court's final order addressing the matter that formed the basis of the appeal. Davis v. Davis, 761 So. 2d 936 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In order for a post-trial motion to effectively toll the time for taking an appeal, the motion must be timely filed in accordance with the time restrictions set out in M.R.C.P. 59(e). Byrd v. Biloxi Regional Medical Ctr., 722 So. 2d 166 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Wife's post-trial motion in divorce action was a motion under M.R.C.P. Rule 59 rather than Rule 60, and since it was filed within ten legal days after entry of judgment it operated to stay running of time for perfecting appeal, and therefore husband's previously-filed notice of appeal was premature and ineffective to perfect appeal. Bruce v. Bruce, 587 So. 2d 898 (Miss. 1991).

Post-trial motions in criminal cases.

Court of appeals had jurisdiction of the issue of whether the trial court had the authority to amend defendant's sentence because pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), defendant filed his notice of appeal within the thirty days of the denial of the motion for a reduction of sentence. Seal v. State, 38 So. 3d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's appeal was timely where he filed his motion for a new trial within the time prescribed by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 10.5, the trial judge waited more than three years to hear the motion, after which, a notice of appeal was timely filed pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4. Neither Rule 4(e) nor Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 10.5 required the motion for new trial to be timely presented by defendant to the trial court. Jay v. State, 25 So. 3d 257 (Miss. 2009).

Since the circuit court dismissed defendant's motion for post-conviction relief on January 2, 2008, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), defendant's notice of appeal should have been filed by February 1, 2008; however, since the notice was not filed until February 25, 2008, the appeal was untimely, unless it is saved by the prison mailbox rule. Because there was no evidence in the record to show when defendant delivered his notice of appeal to prison officials, the appellate court exercised its discretion under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) to suspend the 30-day filing requirement, as defendant's filing may have been timely under the prison mailbox rule. Walton v. State, 16 So. 3d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Because a petitioner's motion to alter or amend a trial court's judgment was missing from the record and it, thus, appeared that the petitioner, through no fault of his own, was not able to timely perfect his appeal, the issues were addressed on the merits pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4. Williams v. State, 4 So. 3d 388 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's appeal of an order denying a motion to clarify a rape sentence was dismissed for lack of appellate jurisdiction where the notice of appeal was not filed within 30 days, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a); hence, the appellate court was required to dismiss the appeal pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1). Rabalais v. State, 986 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Miss. R. App. P. 2(c) allowed the Court of Appeals of Mississippi, for good cause shown, to suspend the requirement of Miss. R. App. P. 4 that an appeal be filed within 30 days of the entry of judgment; however, the trial court judge committed no error in denying defendant's motion for out-of-time appeal, as the judge had no discretion to allow an out-of-time appeal outside of 180 days from the entry of judgment, and the appellate court concluded that it did not find that justice demanded granting defendant an out-of-time appeal 10 years after his conviction. Parker v. State, 921 So. 2d 397 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where the time to appeal from the initial sentencing order had expired because defendant's post-trial motions to correct "scrivener's errors" in the sentencing order had not tolled the running of the appeal period under Miss. R. App. P. 4(e) and (g), the appellate court treated the motions to correct the sentencing orders that were filed in the trial court as motions under the Mississippi Uniform Collateral Post-Conviction Relief Act. Norwood v. State, 846 So. 2d 1048 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict is available to defendants in criminal cases where there is a guilty verdict or failure to reach a verdict; a motion for such a judgment must be made within time allowed for motions for new trial. McGraw v. State, 688 So. 2d 764 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 830, 118 S. Ct. 95, 139 L. Ed. 2d 51 (1997).

Time for appeal.

As victims of chemical exposure filed their notice of appeal almost 90 days after the entry of a trial court order, requiring enforcement of a settlement of the victims' personal injury claims against a pecan company, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider the validity of that order pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a) and 4(a); the filing of a motion for relief from judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60(b) did not alter the 30-day jurisdictional filing requirement. Melton v. Smith's Pecans, 65 So. 3d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 65 So. 3d 310, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 342 (Miss. 2011).

In a personal injury action by guests against a casino, an appeal of the denial of the guests' motion to reconsider was time-barred where, following the denial of their reconsideration motion, the guests filed a recusal motion instead of filing a notice of appeal. The time for appeal commenced under Miss. R. App. P. 4(d) when the reconsideration motion was denied and the guests' failure to perfect a notice of appeal within 30 days subjected the appeal to dismissal. Doll v. BSL, Inc., 41 So. 3d 664 (Miss. 2010).

Where a husband filed a notice of appeal in a property distribution matter 49 days after the entry of the original judgment, but only 19 days after the chancery court's sua sponte order of clarification, the time period for filing the notice of appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) was not tolled because the order of clarification did not make any substantive changes to the original order. Penton v. Penton, — So. 3d —, 2010 Miss. App. LEXIS 186 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 13, 2010).

In a case in which defendant's appeal was clearly untimely under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(c), the appellate court suspended Rule 4(a) and heard defendant's appeal on the merits because defendant was represented by counsel, and there was a strong likelihood that any fault for the untimely appeal was not attributable to defendant. A dismissal for lack of jurisdiction by the appellate court would likely result in a subsequent claim by defendant of ineffective assistance of counsel. Williams v. State, 30 So. 3d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's motion to reopen the time for appeal, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), was granted because defendant had not received notice from the clerk within 21 days that a motion for new trial had been denied. Jones v. State, 20 So. 3d 57 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a case in which a circuit court dismissed a company's amended complaint against a city as being time-barred, the company was procedurally barred from challenging the dismissal of its complaint. The company lost its right to pursue an appeal of the merits of the court's dismissal of its amended complaint when it failed to file either a timely Miss. R. Civ. P. 59 motion or a notice of appeal within 30 days of the entry of the order of dismissal, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Finicky Pet Foods, Inc. v. City of Ocean Springs, 18 So. 3d 331 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Instead of filing a notice of appeal within the 30-day requirement, defendant's attorney filed additional post-trial motions; although the failure to timely file a notice of appeal would bar an appeal from review, under Miss. R. App. P. 2(c), the apepllate court could suspend the rules in the interest of expediting decision. Ross v. State, 16 So. 3d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant failed to show why 30-day requirement of Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) should be suspended; therefore, a dismissal of defendant's appeal from the denial of his post-conviction relief petition was warranted. Moore v. State, 8 So. 3d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Grandmother's appeal was timely where an immediate appeal of a denial of an application for leave to intervene under Miss. R. Civ. P. 24 was not required and the father did not file a brief in the current appeal, Miss. R. App. P. 31(d). S.G. v. D.C., 13 So. 3d 269 (Miss. 2009).

Circuit court abused its discretion in denying the Public Employees' Retirement System of Mississippi's out-of-time appeal, Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), because the record contained no credible evidence to support the inherent finding of prejudice; nothing showed that the employee took any action in detrimental reliance upon the circuit court's judgment. Miss. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Albert Lee, 23 So. 3d 528 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a will-contest action, even if the matter were properly before the appellate court, the girlfriend of the decedent's motion for sanctions and attorney fees was waived since she filed no notice of appeal for her "counter-appeal" as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Moreover, once the chancellor held the matter in abeyance, the record did not reflect that the girlfriend raised the motion for sanctions again until her appellate brief and she did not file her notice of appeal until 28 days after entry of the final judgment; at any time in the interim, the girlfriend could have requested a ruling on her motion for sanctions, but she failed to do so. Frazier v. Loew (In re Caspelich), 22 So. 3d 1199 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In a divorce case, a former husband's appeal was time-barred because it was not perfected within 10 days of a final judgment entered in January 2007; the husband's post-trial motions were untimely under Miss. R. Civ. P. 52 and Miss. R. Civ. P. 59, and a chancellor did not have the authority to extend the time for such. The January 2007 judgment was final because it attended to all of the issues before the chancellor, including the support of two minor children, the equitable distribution of marital assets and liabilities, whether to award a former wife alimony, and whether to award the former wife attorney's fees. Anderson v. Anderson, 8 So. 3d 264 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Buyer's appeal was dismissed where, had the buyer's motion for a new trial pursuant to Miss. R. Civ. P. 59 been timely filed, then under Miss. R. App. P. 4(d), his appeal would have been timely filed; however, since the buyer's Rule 59 motion was untimely, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction in the matter. Gober v. Lee, 8 So. 3d 912 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

A county court lacked jurisdiction to consider an inmate's motion for an out-of-time appeal because the inmate's claim was outside the 180-day limitation period set forth in Miss. R. App. P. 4; furthermore, the inmate failed to demonstrate any reason why the court should suspend the rules to consider his claim. Edmond v. State, 991 So. 2d 588 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 130 S. Ct. 230, 175 L. Ed. 2d 10, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 6976, 78 U.S.L.W. 3182 (U.S. 2009).

Where the appellate brief of defendant, a pro se prisoner, was filed outside of the 30-day window provided in Miss. R. App. R. 4(a) but where the brief was dated well within the 30-day window, the State's motion to dismiss the appeal for lack of jurisdiction was denied because the State failed to meet its burden of proof to establish that defendant's notice of appeal was untimely filed in failing to establish when defendant actually delivered his appellate documents to prison authorities for mailing. Carroll v. State, 3 So. 3d 767 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 97 (Miss. 2009).

Judgment of an appellate court, which overturned a verdict in favor of a driver in a negligence action, was reversed, the case was dismissed, and the judgment of the trial court was reinstated where a passenger's notice of appeal was not timely filed under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a); the passenger failed to seek a writ of mandamus following the trial court's delay in ruling on the passenger's post-judgment motions. Busby v. Anderson, 978 So. 2d 637 (Miss. 2008).

Appeal was untimely with regard to an order of contempt that a court had entered almost a year before the appeal was filed. Diaz v. Bounds, 989 So. 2d 953 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 993 So. 2d 832, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 416 (Miss. 2008).

In students' lawsuit centered around the prospect of "educational malpractice," a college's appeal of the denial of its motion to compel arbitration was timely and properly before the appellate court, because both of its notices of appeal were filed within 30 days of the circuit court's order denying its motion. Va. College, LLC v. Moore, 974 So. 2d 269 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Under Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), the trial court did not err in finding that the inmate's motion for an out-of-time appeal was untimely; the inmate had timely notice of the disposition of his post-conviction relief motions, his motion was mistitled and failed to mention a timely appeal, and at the time that motion was denied, he still had time to file a notice of appeal, but did not seek relief until one year later. Shelton v. State, 984 So. 2d 320 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 296 (Miss. 2008).

Father's post-trial motion was made 42 days after entry of a youth court's May 19, 2005, judgment terminating his parental rights, so Miss. R. App. P. 4(d) did not operate to toll the beginning of the 30-day time limitation prescribed by Rule 4(a), and his notice of appeal was filed approximately 113 days after the entry of judgment, well outside the 60-day window. Even if it was presumed that the father sought and obtained an extension of time pursuant to Rule 4(g), the notice of appeal was filed more than 10 days after the order entered nunc pro tunc on August 11, 2005, and even if the failure to learn of the entry of judgment constituted "excusable neglect," the notice of appeal was still untimely because it was filed beyond the maximum additional time allowed by Rule 4(g), and finally, the notice of appeal was filed more than 14 days after the August 11 entry of the relevant order allowing him additional time to file his notice of appeal making it untimely pursuant to Rule 4(h). In re A.M.A., 986 So. 2d 999 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 987 So. 2d 451, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 378 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 374 (Miss. July 31, 2008).

Appellate court had no jurisdiction to consider an appeal by parties who filed a motion to reopen the time for appeal approximately 14 days after receiving notice of the decree being appealed from, because under Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), the motion should have been filed within seven days of receiving the notice. Moore v. Wilson, 966 So. 2d 853 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Given that defendant's notice of appeal occurred more than 30 days after the date of entry of the judgment or order appealed from, Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), defendant's appeal was procedurally barred. Lett v. State, 965 So. 2d 1066 (Miss. 2007).

Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(1), defendant's appeal of the denial of post-conviction relief was dismissed for failure to timely file the appeal; the appeal was filed 67 days after the trial court denied the motion for post-conviction relief, well beyond the 30 days required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Craft v. State, 966 So. 2d 856 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order denying a motion to reconsider summary judgment because the order was not appealed within 30 days of its entry, notwithstanding that a circuit court clerk had failed to notify the parties of the order as required by Miss. R. Civ. P. 77(d). Payne v. Magnolia Healthcare, Inc., 984 So. 2d 290 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 291 (Miss. June 12, 2008).

Where an arrestee filed two actions against a bonding company, two agents, and a surety arising from the revocation of a bail bond, res judicata barred an attempt to revive the first action filed where the second action, which raised identical issues, had been dismissed, and no appeal was filed under the time in Miss. R. App. P. 4. Stringer v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 969 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 552 U.S. 1306, 128 S. Ct. 1925, 170 L. Ed. 2d 741, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 3407, 76 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2008).

Even though a notice of appeal was untimely in a case involving a motion for post-conviction relief, an appellate court chose to proceed with hearing the merits of such, due to the unique circumstances of the case. Jefferson v. State, 958 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Dismissal of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper because the appeal was untimely under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) since he had 30 days from the entry of the order in which to file his appeal and 30 days hadexpired with respect to both motions for postconviction relief well before the inmate filed his notice of appeal. Doss v. State, 956 So. 2d 1100 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where defendant's conviction of misdemeanor driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor was affirmed on January 16, 2003, his motion for reconsideration and/or out of time appeal filed on December, 3, 2003 was untimely. The interests of justice did not favor allowing for an out-of-time appeal; defendant failed to prove his claim that he did not receive notice that his conviction was upheld. Havard v. State, 911 So. 2d 991 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Pursuant to the time periods for filing an appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) and 26(a), a terminated department of corrections employee's appeal of the circuit court's upholding of his termination was filed late and, because the circuit court had not granted his motion for a late appeal, the Supreme Court of Mississippi was without jurisdiction over the instant appeal. Redmond v. Miss. Dep't of Corr., 910 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant did not file his notice of appeal within 30 days of the final judgment as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Tran v. State, 915 So. 2d 1129 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Circuit court's granting of the individuals' motion to reopen the time for appeal was improper pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), because the individuals filed their notice later than the required seven days. By failing to comply with the rule, the appellate court lacked the jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Penn v. State, 909 So. 2d 135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant attempted an appeal of an order denying his motion for post-conviction relief, as the appeal was filed more than 30 days after entry of the order, it was untimely under Miss. R. App. 4(a), and was properly dismissed under Miss. R. App. 2(a)(1). Penn v. State, 909 So. 2d 135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

After summary judgment was awarded to a home inspector in a homeowner's action for fraud and negligence, an appellate court lacked jurisdiction to address the issues raised in the appeal because the appeal was filed one day beyond the 30-day deadline in Miss. R. App. P. 4(a). Hodnett v. Anderson, 913 So. 2d 994 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Employee met the 30 day requirement of Miss. R. App. P. 4 where the trial court denied his motion for relief on November 5, 2003, and the employee filed his notice of appeal on December 4, 2003, exactly 29 days later. Hathcock v. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 912 So. 2d 844 (Miss. 2005).

Under Miss. R. App. P. 4, using the language "shall," required a party to file a notice of appeal within 30 days, while Miss. R. App. P. 48B, using the language "may," permitted a party to seek review within 14 days; therefore, the employee's appeal was timely because it was filed in accordance with Miss. R. App. P. 4. Hathcock v. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 912 So. 2d 844 (Miss. 2005).

Because defendants provided a specific factual denial of receipt of the notice of the circuit court's opinion and order or judgment by submitting affidavits of a legal secretary and a legal assistant that stated the notice had not been received, they rebutted and destroyed the presumption of notice; additionally, plaintiffs did not offer proof by means of affidavits or otherwise from the circuit court clerk's office showing that notice was in fact sent and/or received. Thus, the circuit court abused its discretion in denying the motion to reopen the time for appeal. Prepaid Legal Servs. v. Taylor, 904 So. 2d 1059 (Miss. 2004).

Court had jurisdiction, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(d), to hear a credit card company's appeal of the denial of its motion to alter or reconsider a default judgment and damages that was entered against it in plaintiffs' breach of contract action because the company filed its notice of appeal within 30 days of the denial of the motion to alter or reconsider. Capital One Servs. v. Rawls, 904 So. 2d 1010 (Miss. 2004).

Where defendant was not at fault for failing to file a formal notice of appeal from his conviction, and no in-court waiver of appeal had been made, the Supreme Court exercised its discretion, in the interests of justice, to allow defendant to file untimely appeal. DeLoach v. State, 890 So. 2d 852 (Miss. 2004).

Circuit court lost jurisdiction over an employee's action seeking judicial review of a decision by the Mississippi Workers' Compensation Commission that denied her claim for workers' compensation benefits when the employee failed to file a timely appeal from the same court's order, which affirmed the Commission's decision; the circuit court erred in vacating its own order and replacing it with a new and contrary order. Univ. of S. Miss. v. Gillis, 872 So. 2d 60 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 873 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2004).

Where an inmate did not file an appeal of judgment dismissing his motion for postconviction relief until 11 months after the judgment, under Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) his appeal from the judgment was untimely, and the appellate court has no jurisdiction to address the appeal. Torns v. State, 866 So. 2d 486 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Lack of notice of the entry by the clerk did not affect the time to appeal, nor relieve or authorize the court to relieve a party for failure to appeal within the time allowed. Smith v. Parkerson Lumber, Inc., 890 So. 2d 832 (Miss. 2003).

Appellate court held that as the mother filed her motion to reopen the time for appeal within seven days as specified in Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), and the father was not prejudiced by reopening the time for appeal, the trial court abused its discretion in denying the mother's motion. Horowitz v. Parker, 852 So. 2d 686 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Appellate court had to dismiss defendant's appeal of his conviction for burglary of a commercial building, as his failure to file a timely notice of appeal within 30 days of the date the trial court denied his post-trial motions meant the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear his appeal. Franklin v. State, 853 So. 2d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a workers' compensation case, the claimant was notified of the November entry of judgment seven weeks after such entry, which exceeded the 21 days as stated in Miss. R. App. P. 4(h), the claimant filed the motion to allow an out-of-time appeal the day after receiving the order, and neither party could show prejudice as a result of the out-of-time appeal; thus, the trial court properly granted the claimant's out-of-time appeal in allowing the claimant 14 days to file the claimant's notice of appeal, which the claimant timely did. Twine v. City of Gulfport, 833 So. 2d 596 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where defendant did not appeal the sentence imposed following his guilty plea within 30 days of the entry of the order and did not move within 180 days of the order to reopen the appeal, defendant's appeal was procedurally barred, and defendant's proper remedy was postconviction relief. Watson v. State, 841 So. 2d 218 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Upon denial or dismissal of post-conviction claims, the notice of appeal required by Miss. R. App. P. 3 must be filed within 30 days after the date of entry of the judgment or order appealed from pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 4(a) and Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-25; therefore in order to perfect an appeal from the denial of post-conviction relief, there must be a final judgment or order and the appeal must fall within 30 days after its entry. Scott v. State, 817 So. 2d 642 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Appellate court dismissed defendant's appeal of alleged denial of defendant's petition for post-conviction relief as no final order was ever entered by the trial court and, absent such an order, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Scott v. State, 817 So. 2d 642 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Patient's appeal in a medical malpractice case against one of two doctors was not time-barred where the trial court granted summary judgment to the doctor, the patient's appeal of the grant of summary judgment to the doctor was dismissed for failure to obtain certification under Miss. R. Civ. P. 54, and summary judgment was granted to the other doctor because the patient filed her motion for appeal against the doctor within 30 days of the entry of a final judgment by the trial court. Gilchrist v. Veach, 807 So. 2d 485 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The requirements of subsection (h) are obligatory rather than permissive; timely notice of appeal is jurisdictional, and the court lacks jurisdiction to address an appeal where the appellant has not given proper notice. Curry v. B.C. Rogers Poultry, Inc., 797 So. 2d 265 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

An appeal filed prior to the disposition of a motion under Miss. R. Civ. P. 59 is not a nullity and, therefore, in the absence of any prejudice to the appellees, the court refused to dismiss an appeal that was taken prematurely before the disposition of such a motion. Mallery v. Taylor, 792 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 2001).

The trial court erred in failing to grant the appellant's motion to reopen time for appeal where (1) the first notice that the appellant received that a final judgment had been entered occurred on or about October 1, 1999, when the appellee filed a motion to dismiss with the appellate court, (2) on October 6, 1999, the appellant timely filed his motion to reopen time for appeal, and (3) the appellee failed to argue that she was in any way prejudiced. Duncan v. Duncan, 774 So. 2d 418 (Miss. 2000).

Two requirements must be met before the time for appeal may be reopened: (1) that a party entitled to receive notice fails to receive such notice from the clerk or any party within 21 days of its entry; and (2) that no party would be prejudiced, with prejudice defined as some adverse consequence other than the cost of having to oppose the appeal and encounter the risk of reversal; once these are established, a motion must be filed within 180 days of entry of the judgment or within 7 days of receipt of such notice, whichever is earlier. Duncan v. Duncan, 774 So. 2d 418 (Miss. 2000).

The party seeking an out-of-time appeal carries the burden of persuasion regarding the lack of a timely notice; there must be a specific factual denial of receipt of notice to rebut and terminate the presumption that notice was mailed and received. Denton v. State, 762 So. 2d 814 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where a notice of appeal under this rule was filed within the deadline for filing a petition requesting an interlocutory appeal under Rule 5, suspending the rules did not constitute an improper extension of the time for taking an interlocutory appeal and, instead, only waived the intricate procedural obligations on the party seeking such an appeal. Hobgood v. Koch Pipeline Southeast, Inc., 769 So. 2d 838 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1073, 121 S. Ct. 766, 148 L. Ed. 2d 666 (2001).

Illustrative cases.

Whether a trial court erred in denying a defendant's motion to designate his motion for a reduction of sentence as a motion for post-conviction relief was not properly before the court of appeals because although defendant raised the issue in his brief, no notice of appeal was given on the issue. Seal v. State, 38 So. 3d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

While the agent argued that the circuit court's order was not a final judgment which expressly dismissed the claims with prejudice under Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b), the order clearly used words of finality and adjudication; the order concluded that the agent could not maintain the cause of action against the insurers and twice included the phrase "ordered and adjudged. Because the circuit court's opinion and order was final and appealable and agent's notice of appeal was untimely filed and she failed to file a motion for an extension of time under Miss. R. App. P. 4(g), ther appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Rigdon v. Miss. Farm Bureau Fed'n, 22 So. 3d 321 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where appellant failed to timely file her appeal of a child custody order with the clerk of the trial court within thirty days from the entry of judgment as required by Miss. R. App. P. 4(a), the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Dudley v. Harris, 979 So. 2d 692 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case where partial summary judgment was granted to a utility company on the issue of trespass damages, an appeal from the ruling was dismissed because the trial court improperly entered a Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b) final judgment since the litigation was not complex, and the appeal would have resulted in piecemeal litigation; moreover, the case was not an appropriate example of an interlocutory appeal either since it did not involve merely questions of law. Byrd v. Miss. Power Co., 943 So. 2d 108 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Suspension of Miss. R. App. 4(a) was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. App. P 2(c) because it was clearly not defendant's fault that his appeal was untimely; his counsel inadvertently failed to file defendant's motion for a new trial as well as the notice of appeal. McFarland v. State, 936 So. 2d 960 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Husband's appeal of a divorce was subject to dismissal for failure to file a proper and timely notice of appeal. Harvey v. Harvey, 918 So. 2d 837 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 23 (Miss. 2006).

Jurisdiction was appropriate in an action involving contempt and the modification of child support because Miss. R. App. P. 4(d) provides that while a notice of appeal filed before disposition of specified post-trial motions was ineffective pending disposition of said motions, the notice ripened into an effective appeal upon disposition of the post-trial motions. Howard v. Howard, 913 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), remanded by 968 So. 2d 961, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 760 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's appeal of his conviction of armed robbery was dismissed because defendant's notice of appeal was neither filed within the time limits set forth in

Miss. R. App. P. 4 or within the time allowed by the trial court to file an out-of-time appeal. DeLoach v. State, 856 So. 2d 388 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

A motion for reconsideration was in essence a motion to alter or amend a judgment under Miss. R. Civ. P. 59(e) and the time for filing notice of appeal in an action for property damage due to pollution was tolled until the plaintiff landowners had notice of the trial court's denial of their motion for reconsideration; the trial court therefore abused its discretion in denying the landowners' motion to reopen appeal filed four days after the landowners became aware of the denial of their motion for reconsideration of a grant of summary judment. Boyles v. Schlumberger Tech. Corp., 792 So. 2d 262 (Miss. 2001).

Where a motion for reconsideration was not filed until 11 days after the entry of the order at issue, the motion was untimely and did not suspend the running of the 30 days provided by the rule for the filing of a notice of appeal and, therefore, the notice of appeal filed after the denial of the motion for reconsideration was untimely. Hill ex rel. Heirs of McClaurin v. McLaurin, 769 So. 2d 257 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Appeal was timely, where appellant gave notice of appeal to both final order and previous interlocutory order, and his notice of appeal was perfected within thirty days from date of entry of final order. O'Neill v. O'Neill, 551 So. 2d 228 (Miss. 1989).

There was no entry of final judgment where there was no stamp, notation or other marking or anything else to indicate that judgment was ever delivered to clerk of court for filing, and appeal could not proceed until clerk corrected the clerical oversight. Sweet v. Luster, 492 So. 2d 983 (Miss. 1986).

Rule 5. Interlocutory appeal by permission.

(a) Petition for permission to appeal. An appeal from an interlocutory order may be sought if a substantial basis exists for a difference of opinion on a question of law as to which appellate resolution may:

(1) Materially advance the termination of the litigation and avoid exceptional expense to the parties; or

(2) Protect a party from substantial and irreparable injury; or

(3) Resolve an issue of general importance in the administration of justice.

Appeal from such an order may be sought by filing a petition for permission to appeal with the clerk of the Supreme Court within 21 days after the entry of such order in the trial court with proof of service on the trial judge and all other parties to the action in the trial court.

(b) Content of petition; answer. The petition shall contain: a statement of the facts necessary to an understanding of the question of law determined by the order of the trial court; a statement of the question itself; a statement of the current status of the case; and a statement as to why the petition for interlocutory appeal is timely. The petition shall further identify all other cases or petitions for interlocutory appeal pending before the appellate court and known to the petitioner which are related to the matter for which interlocutory review is sought. The petition shall include or have annexed a copy of the order from which appeal is sought and of any related findings of fact, conclusions of law or opinion. Within 14 days after service of the petition, the trial judge may file a statement informing the appellate court of any reasons why that judge believes that the petition should or should not be granted, and any adverse party may file an answer in opposition with the clerk of the Supreme Court, with proof of service on the trial judge and all other parties to the action in the trial court. The petition with any statement by the trial judge and answers of all parties responding shall be submitted without oral argument unless otherwise ordered.

(c) Form of papers; number of copies. Four (4) copies of the petition and answer, if any, shall be filed with the original, but the Court may require that additional copies be furnished. The provisions of Rule 27 concerning motions shall govern the filing and consideration of the petition and answer, except that no petition or answer, including its supporting brief, shall exceed 15 pages in length.

(d) Grant of permission; prepayment of costs; filing of record. If permission to appeal is granted by the Supreme Court, the appellant shall pay the docket fee as required by Rule 3(e) within 14 days after entry of the order granting permission to appeal, and the record on appeal shall be transmitted and filed and the appeal docketed in accordance with Rules 10, 11, and 13. The time fixed by those rules for transmitting the record and docketing the appeal shall run from the date of entry of the order granting permission to appeal. A notice of appeal need not be filed.

(e) Expedited proceedings. The Court may in its discretion expedite the appeal and give it preference over ordinary civil cases. If the Court determines that the issues presented can be fairly decided on the petition, response and exhibits presented, the Court may decide those issues simultaneously with the granting of the petition, without awaiting preparation of a record or further briefing.

(f) Effect on trial court proceedings. The petition for appeal shall not stay proceedings in the trial court unless the trial judge or the Supreme Court shall so order. (Amended effective July 29, 2004 to add paragraph (e) regarding expedited proceedings when the petition is granted. Effective December 9, 2004, as to trial court orders entered from and after March 1, 2005, paragraph (a) and (b) are amended to eliminate provision for seeking certification of the issue by the trial judge and provide the trial judge an opportunity to file a statement regarding the issue.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective April 15, 2004, the Comment was amended to note that Rule 5 does not alter the applicability of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-103 (Rev. 2000) regarding appeals by the government in criminal cases.

Effective December 28, 1995, Rule 28(m) and a new final paragraph to the Comment were added to encourage the filing of disk copies of briefs. 663-667 So.2d XXVII (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 5 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 5, 644-647 So.2d XXX-XXXIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 5 was amended to delete a reference to a repealed statute. 632-635 So.2d LI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

COMMENT

This rule is a composite of Fed. R. App. P. 5, 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) and American Bar Ass'n. Standards Relating to Appellate Courts § 3.12 (1977). See also, Ala. R. App. P. 5; Comment, 88 Harv. L. Rev. 607 (1975). It provides for interlocutory appeal from Circuit, Chancery and County Courts. See Sonford Products Corp. v. Freels, 495 So. 2d 468, 471 (Miss. 1986); Kilgore v. Barnes, 490 So. 2d 895, 896 (Miss. 1986); Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. v. Holland, 469 So. 2d 55, 62-64 (Miss. 1985) (Anderson, J., concurring). It applies to both civil and criminal cases. Cf. State v. Caldwell, 492 So. 2d 575, 576-577 (Miss. 1986) (remedial writ granted where constitutional rights violated prior to criminal trial).

Prior to March 1, 2005, Rule 5(a) required the petitioner to seek certification for an interlocutory appeal first from the trial court. Denial of certification did not limit the right of the petitioner to seek interlocutory review, but submitting the matter to the trial judge was a prerequisite to proceeding in the Supreme Court. This requirement has been eliminated by the amendment as to trial court orders entered from and after March 1, 2005. Under the rule prior to the amendment, the 14 day time limit ran from the time of entry of the judge's order ruling on a motion to amend the order which was the subject of the petition. With the elimination of the requirement of trial court certification or denial of certification as to orders entered after March 1, 2005, the petition must be filed within 21 days following the entry of the order which the petitioner submits for interlocutory review. While an interlocutory appeal may be sought at any time, the timeliness of the petition decreases as trial approaches. The practice of seeking belated reconsideration of the trial court's ruling for the purpose or renewing the time allowed for seeking interlocutory review is condemned. The rule is unlike federal practice in which both courts must agree before an interlocutory appeal will be heard under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

The March 1, 2005 amendment recognizes that the trial court's views as to whether interlocutory review should be granted are often helpful. The amendment requires that the petition be served on the trial judge and invites that judge's statement as to the reasons why the petition should or should not be granted.

The standards for granting interlocutory appeal are based on existing law. Appeal will not be permitted except to resolve a question of law, and this includes the application of law to fact. There must be a substantial basis for a difference of opinion with the trial court. See Fed. R. App. P. 5(b); 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). A question of law need not control the entire case, but must be sufficiently important to the litigation to merit interlocutory appeal. In this latter respect, the rule departs from the standards set forth in § 1292(b) and adopts the language followed by other state courts. See, e.g., Ill. Sup. Ct. R. 308. Rule 5 does not alter the applicability of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-103 (Rev. 2000) regarding appeals by the government in criminal cases. State v. Hicks, 806 So. 2d 261 (Miss. 2002).

Rule 5(a)(1) begins with the federal requirement that interlocutory review will be permitted when such review will "materially advance the termination of the litigation." See Fed. R. App. P. 5(b); 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). It adds the requirement of the now-repealed Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-7 (Supp. 1986) that the appellant must show that the appeal may avoid expense as well as delay.

Rule 5(a)(2) permits interlocutory appeal where review will protect a party from substantial and irreparable injury. This category would permit interlocutory review of rulings on injunctions and receivership matters allowed as of right under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1). It would continue present state practice of interlocutory review of chancery orders requiring money to be paid or the possession of property changed, but only if compliance with such an order threatened the opposite party with irreparable injury.

Rule 5(a)(3) provides the Court with flexible authority to grant interlocutory review in situations in which the pertinent interest is the administration of justice. The interest "is that of the proper administration of justice generally—for example, when an order involves a question of procedure that would likely become moot by the time final judgment was entered but should be authoritatively resolved for the purposes of future guidance of courts below." American Bar Ass'n, Standards Relating to Appellate Courts § 3.12, at 29. See also Wisc. Stat. Ann. § 809.50(c) (1986). By permitting review to resolve conflicts among trial courts in such cases, the rule promotes uniformity and fairness to litigants.

Rule 5(b) provides only for the petition and the answer. A reply to the answer is not permitted and will not be considered.

Rule 5(c) contemplates that the petition and answer will be treated as motions and so must be supported by a brief. In order to expedite judicial consideration, however, the total length of a petition and brief are limited to 15 pages, and a similar restriction applies to the answer and its supporting brief. This limitation does not include pages in exhibits required to be annexed to the petition.

Rule 5 review is separate from the interlocutory review available by certification under M.R.C.P. 54(b) when a final judgment is entered as to fewer than all parties or claims, and that available under Rule 9 governing release in criminal cases.

Rule 5(e) was added by amendment effective July 29, 2004, in recognition of the need for expedited disposition of interlocutory appeals. On occasions when the Court is presented in the petition with a pure question of law or otherwise has before it sufficient information to do so, the Court may in its discretion address and dispose of the issue presented simultaneously with the grant of permission to file the interlocutory appeal and without further record preparation or briefing.

Construction.

The rule does not, and legally cannot, grant a litigant the right to petition the Court of Appeals for an interlocutory appeal. McGriggs v. Montgomery, 710 So. 2d 886 (Ct. App. 1998).

The fact that court below has given certificate under subdivision (a) of this rule in no way precludes supreme court's de novo review of whether rule's criteria have been met, and whether application for interlocutory appeal should be granted. American Elec. v. Singarayar, 530 So. 2d 1319 (Miss. 1988).

Time for appeal.

In an interlocutory appeal from a decision denying a motorist's motion to dismiss a personal injury suit, the motorist's request for review was timely because it was filed exactly 14 days after the trial court denied certification. Bennett v. McCaffrey, 937 So. 2d 11 (Miss. 2006).

Interlocutory appeals were not an automatic right and permission must be granted by the supreme court. The appellate court was unable to say with certainty that counsel's alleged advice to the inmate was wrong but regardless, the inmate admitted that he was aware he could have appealed a decision in a final appeal and he failed to show why the timing of the appeal affected his desire to plead guilty. Jones v. State, 922 So. 2d 31 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where a notice of appeal under Rule 4 was filed within the deadline for filing a petition requesting an interlocutory appeal under this rule, suspending the rules did not constitute an improper extension of the time for taking an interlocutory appeal and, instead, only waived the intricate procedural obligations on the party seeking such an appeal. Hobgood v. Koch Pipeline Southeast, Inc., 769 So. 2d 838

(Miss. Ct. App. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1073, 121 S. Ct. 766, 148 L. Ed. 2d 666 (2001).

Illustrative cases.

Because a summary judgment was not certified as final under Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b), and because a tenant neither sought nor was afforded permission under Miss. R. App. P. 5 to proceed with an interlocutory appeal, the appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear the tenant's appeal. Anderson v. Britton & Koontz Bank, N.A., 55 So. 3d 1130 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 5, an inmate was required to obtain the permission of the Clerk of the Mississippi Supreme Court in order to file an appeal of a circuit court's order staying his case against the Mississippi Department of Corrections because the appeal was interlocutory in nature, but no such permission was requested or granted. Taylor v. Petrie, 41 So. 3d 724 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In a breach of contract case in which a Mississippi corporation filed an interlocutory appeal of a decision by the chancery court to transfer the case to the circuit court, the Mississippi Supreme Court was not prohibited from reversing that determination since no final judgment had been entered in the case. Derr Plantation, Inc. v. Swarek, 14 So. 3d 711 (Miss. 2009).

Appeal from a grant of summary judgment in favor of a painting subcontractor in a negligence action was properly dismissed because there was neither a Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification in the record with regard to the subcontractor, nor was there a petition for an interlocutory appeal under Miss. R. app. P. 5. Thus, the order was not appealable as a final judgment. Lloyd G. Oliphant & Sons Paint Co. v. Logan, 12 So. 3d 614 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Appeal from the denial of a motion for summary judgment in a lease dispute was moot because a lessor did not file an interlocutory appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 5, and judgment was entered against him after a trial on the merits. Britton v. Am. Legion Post 58, 19 So. 3d 83 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where the buyer of a vehicle filed a multi-count complaint against the seller, only the breach of warranty claim was covered by the arbitration agreement and the circuit court denied the seller's motion to compel arbitration as to the remaining claims; a three-justice panel of the Mississippi Supreme Court granted the seller's petition for an interlocutory appeal pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 5(a). Rogers-Dabbs Chevrolet-Hummer, Inc. v. Blakeney, 950 So. 2d 170 (Miss. 2007).

In a case where partial summary judgment was granted to a utility company on the issue of trespass damages, an appeal from the ruling was dismissed because the trial court improperly entered a Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b) final judgment since the litigation was not complex, and the appeal would have resulted in piecemeal litigation; moreover, the case was not an appropriate example of an interlocutory appeal either since it did not involve merely questions of law. Byrd v. Miss. Power Co., 943 So. 2d 108 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Personal representatives could not viably argue that the possibility that the law could change during the pendency of a petition by a convenience store for an interlocutory appeal would bar the use of an interlocutory appeal petition as a mechanism for seeking relief. Anderson v. R & D Foods, Inc., 913 So. 2d 394 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Employee's claims for actual damages, and for attorney's fees remained pending, the trial court never made a Miss. R. Civ. P. 54(b) certification, the trial court's order dismissing the punitive damages claim was interlocutory, and the question presented did not compel suspension of the procedural requirements of Miss. R. App. P. 5(a) to allow an interlocutory appeal, thus, the appeal was dismissed for lack of an appealable final judgment. Millsaps v. Stout, 860 So. 2d 852 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In an interlocutory appeal in a medical malpractice action, the court declined to address a contention by a hospital and three physicians that a trial court had erred in denying their motion to dismiss the action because the matter was not properly before the court, where the assignment of error was not included in the petition for interlocutory appeal. Wayne Gen. Hosp. v. Hayes, — So. 2d —, 2003

Miss. LEXIS 598 (Miss. Nov. 6, 2003), opinion withdrawn by 2004 Miss. LEXIS 298 (Miss. Mar. 25, 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 868 So. 2d 997, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 289 (Miss. 2004).

As the trial court failed to explain its basis for concluding why certain documents plaintiff sought in discovery were discoverable and others were not, the Supreme Court, which granted defendants' request for an interlocutory appeal of a discovery order, conducted a de novo review of the challenged items and found that they were protected by the attorney-client privilege and/or the work-product doctrine and that the crime-fraud exception was inapplicable. Hewes v. Langston, 848 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 2003).

In an appeal from what was in effect, a partial summary judgment, which resolved the ownership of the disputed life insurance policy as being owned by the decedent, the ultimate issue of who was the proper beneficiary, the decedent's former husband, or the decedent's child, was apparently reserved, there was no showing to justify a certification, and therefore, the appeal was an improper interlocutory appeal, and was dismissed. Evans v. Moore, 853 So. 2d 850 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

As a trial judge heard sufficient evidence that the defendant's confessions were voluntary, he did not abuse his discretion in failing to grant defendant an interlocutory appeal on this issue. Jones v. State, 841 So. 2d 115 (Miss. 2003).

In a divorce case, the chancellor cured any error that might have occurred in the denial of the husband's motion to compel when the chancellor allowed the husband leniency in questioning the wife at trial; therefore, the chancellor's denial of the husband's motion to compel did not warrant an interlocutory appeal. Boutwell v. Boutwell, 829 So. 2d 1216 (Miss. 2002).

Petition for interlocutory appeal of discovery order was denied, where order required insurer to produce an investigative file and supreme court did not know content of file or nature of insurer's investigation, and objections to discovery of file's contents could be lodged with trial court on an item by item basis. Haynes v. Anderson, 597 So. 2d 615 (Miss. 1992).

Rule 6. Counsel on appeal in criminal cases and proceedings in Forma Pauperis in criminal cases.

(a) Leave to proceed in forma pauperis from the trial court to the Supreme Court in criminal cases.

(1) Post-trial motion in trial court. A defendant in a criminal case in a trial court who desires to proceed on appeal Court in forma pauperis shall file in the trial court a motion for leave so to proceed, together with an affidavit showing the defendant's inability to pay fees and costs. If the motion is granted, the defendant may so proceed without further application to the Supreme Court and without prepayment of fees or costs in either court. If the motion is denied, the trial court shall state in writing the reasons for the denial.

(2) When in forma pauperis status previously granted by trial court. Notwithstanding the provisions of Rule 6(a)(1), a party who has been permitted to proceed in forma pauperis in the trial court may proceed on appeal in forma pauperis without further authorization unless, before or after the notice of appeal is filed, the trial court shall certify that the party is no longer indigent and is not otherwise entitled to proceed in forma pauperis. The court shall state in writing the reasons for such certification or finding. Where an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court in forma pauperis, the certification of compliance required by Rule 11(b)(1) shall indicate that the appeal is taken in forma pauperis.

(3) Motion in the Supreme Court. If a motion for leave to proceed on appeal in forma pauperis is denied by the trial court, the trial court clerk shall forthwith serve notice of such action. A motion for leave so to proceed may be filed in the Supreme Court within 30 days after service of notice of the action of the trial court. The motion shall be accompanied by a copy of the affidavit filed in the trial court, or by the affidavit prescribed by Rule 6(a)(1) if no affidavit has been filed in the trial court, and by a copy of the statement of reasons given by the trial court for its action.

(b) Appointment of counsel on appeal in criminal cases. Appointed trial counsel shall continue as defendant's counsel on appeal unless relieved by order of the trial court, or, if the appeal has been perfected, by order of the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals. Any motion for such relief filed with the Supreme Court shall be accompanied by a certified copy of a trial court order appointing substitute counsel pending action by the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals.

Appointed trial counsel may file a motion to substitute the Indigent Appeals Division of the Office of the State Public Defender, in accordance with Section 99-40-1 of the Mississippi Code. Trial counsel shall remain as the defendant's counsel until relieved by order of the Supreme Court and shall have a continuing duty to cooperate with appellate counsel after relieved by order of the Supreme Court.

(c) Waiver of counsel in criminal appeal.

(1) When appellant has no counsel. Where an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court, and the appellant is not represented by an attorney, and the existing record does not disclose whether appellant intelligently and competently waived the right to counsel in the State appellate courts, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals shall request the trial court to determine:

i. whether the appellant is indigent and unable to employ counsel;

ii. if indigent, whether the appellant desires counsel to be appointed; and

iii. if the appellant does not desire counsel, whether the appellant intelligently and competently waives the right to counsel on appeal.

A transcript shall be made by the court reporter of the hearing on these issues before the trial court, and such transcript and the order of the trial court shall be certified to the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals and shall be made a part of the record on appeal.

If the trial judge or the appellate court determines that appellant is indigent and is entitled to the appointment of counsel on appeal, and that the appellant has not intelligently and competently waived the same, the trial court shall, except for good cause shown, appoint the Indigent Appeals Division of the Office of the State Public Defender to represent the appellant on appeal in accordance with the provisions of Section 99-40-1 of the Mississippi Code.

If the trial judge or the appellate court determines that appellant is not indigent and that the appellant has not intelligently and competently waived the right to counsel on appeal, the appellate court shall stay the appeal for thirty (30) days so that appellant may hire counsel.

(2) When Appellant Moves to Dismiss Counsel and Proceed Pro Se on Appeal. When a criminal appellant moves to dismiss counsel on appeal and proceed pro se, the appellant shall serve a copy of the motion upon current counsel. The appellate court shall request the trial court to determine:

i. whether the appellant is indigent and unable to employ counsel;

ii. if indigent, whether the appellant desires counsel to be appointed; and

(iii) if the appellant does not desire counsel, whether the appellant intelligently and competently waives the right to counsel on appeal.

A transcript shall be made by the court reporter of the hearing on these issues before the trial court, and such transcript and the order of the trial court shall be certified to the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals and shall be made a part of the record on appeal.

If it is determined that appellant has not intelligently and competently waived the right to counsel on appeal, then the motion to dismiss counsel shall be denied. If it is determined that appellant has intelligently and competently waived the right to counsel on appeal, then the motion to dismiss counsel shall be granted. (Amended August 9, 2007, to provide for appointment of the Mississippi Office of Indigent Appeals; Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended effective August 2, 2012 to include procedural safeguards regarding the waiver of counsel in a criminal appeal.)

COMMENT

Rule 6(a) and (b) provides for appeals in forma pauperis in criminal appeals. The rule reflects the salient features of Fed. R. App. P. 24 and Ala. R. App. P. 24. See Form 4 for a suggested affidavit to accompany a motion for application to proceed in forma pauperis. Rule 6(b) provides that appointed counsel in a criminal case may not be relieved of the responsibility for an appeal absent leave of Court. Allison v. State, 436 So. 2d 792 (Miss. 1983).

An accused entitled to counsel at trial is also entitled to counsel in an appeal as of right to the Supreme Court. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 105 S. Ct. 830, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821 (1985); Neal v. State, 422 So. 2d 747, 748 (Miss. 1982). Under federal law, a defendant is entitled to counsel if a sentence of imprisonment is imposed. Scott v. Illinois, 440 U.S. 367, 99 S. Ct. 1158, 59 L. Ed. 2d 383 (1979). See also Miss. Const. of 1890, art. 3, § 26.

The county prepays costs when an indigent criminal defendant appeals in forma pauperis. Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-105 (Rev. 2000). The Clerk of the Supreme Court charges no fees or costs when a defendant incarcerated at the Mississippi State Penitentiary appeals on pauper's oath. Miss. Code Ann. § 25-7-3 (Rev. 2006).

Rule 6(b) provides for the appointment of the Indigent Appeals Division of the Office of the State Public Defender in accordance with Section 99-40-1 of the Mississippi Code. An indigent appellant shall be represented by the Indigent Appeals Division of the Office of the State Public Defender absent good cause shown.

Rule 6(c) is regarding the waiver of counsel on appeal in criminal cases. The subsection applies regardless of appellant's ability to pay for counsel. The waiver of counsel must be knowingly and intelligently made. The hearing in the trial court mirrors the hearing provided for in Rule 8.05 of the Uniform Rules of Circuit and County Court. If appellant's motion to dismiss counsel is denied, appellant may file a pro se supplemental brief pursuant to Rule 28(b).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Indigent defendants.

Court erred in denying defendant's motion for postconviction relief, which requested that he be allowed to file an out-of-time appeal after his appeal was dismissed for failure to pay costs, because his trial counsel had been appointed, indicating that he was indigent. The costs of his appeal should have been paid by the county pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 6(a)(2). Crump v. State, 913 So. 2d 385 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 7 was amended to delete material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice. 632-635 So.2d LI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 7 is omitted from these rules because provisions for costs on appeal are found in Rule 11. This is consistent with prior statutory practice.

Rule 8. Stay or injunction pending appeal.

(a) Stay by clerk's approval of supersedeas bond. The appellant shall be entitled to a stay of execution of a money judgment pending appeal if the appellant gives a supersedeas bond, payable to the opposite party, with two or more sufficient resident sureties, or one or more guaranty or surety companies authorized to do business in this state, in a penalty of 125 percent of the amount of the judgment appealed from, conditioned that the appellant will satisfy the judgment complained of and also such final judgment as may be made in the case. The clerk of the trial court shall approve any such bond and the approval of the supersedeas bond by the clerk shall constitute a stay of the judgment. In the event the clerk declines to approve the bond, or the clerk's approval is contested, or the appellant seeks a stay on any basis other than compliance with this subdivision, the requirements of Rule 8(b) apply.

(b) Other stays must ordinarily be sought in the first instance from the trial court.

(1) Application for a stay of the judgment or the order of a trial court pending appeal or for approval or disapproval of a contested supersedeas bond or for an order suspending, modifying, restoring, or granting an injunction during the pendency of an appeal must ordinarily be made in the first instance to the trial court. The court shall require the giving of security by the appellant in such form and in such sum as the court deems proper, and for good cause shown may set a supersedeas bond in an amount less than the 125 percent required in cases under Rule 8(a).

(2) However, a bond or equivalent security required on any money judgment entered in whole or in part on account of punitive damages shall, as to the punitive damages portion of the judgment only, be the lower of:

(a) 125 percent of the total amount of punitive damages, or

(b) ten percent of the net worth of the defendant seeking appeal as determined by applying generally accepted accounting principles to the defendant's financial status as of December 31, of the year prior to the entry of the judgment for punitive damages.

(c) Absent unusual circumstances, the total amount of the required bond or equivalent security for any case as to punitive damages shall not exceed $100,000,000.

(3) To qualify for reduction of bond or equivalent security under subpart (b)(2)(b), there must be a good and sufficient showing that the imposition of a supersedeas bond of 125% of the full judgment appealed from would place that appellant in a condition of insolvency or would otherwise substantially threaten its future financial viability.

(4) When the appellant is allowed the benefit of a reduction in bond or equivalent security under subpart (b)(2)(b) or (c), the court may require submission of such reports or evidence to the court and to opposing parties as will allow them to be properly informed of the financial condition of the appellant during the period of supersedeas. If at any time after notice and hearing, the court finds that an appellant who has posted a bond or equivalent security for less than 125 percent of the full amount of the judgment has taken actions that affect the financial ability of the appellant to respond to the judgment, or has taken other actions with the intent to avoid the judgment, the court shall increase the bond or equivalent security to the full 125 percent of the judgment. If the appellant does not post the additional bond required by the court, the stay shall be revoked.

(5) If a hearing is necessary for issues arising under subpart (b), the judgment shall be stayed during such hearing and for ten days following the trial court's ruling. The ruling of the trial court on motions filed under this subpart (b) shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals.

(c) Motion to stay or vacate stay in Supreme Court. A motion for such relief may be made to the Supreme Court (or to the Court of Appeals in cases assigned by the Supreme Court to the Court of Appeals) but the motion shall show that the application to the trial court for relief sought is not practicable, or that the trial court has denied an application or has failed to afford the relief which the applicant has requested, with the reasons given by the trial court for its action. The motion shall also show the reasons for the relief requested and the facts relied upon and, if the facts are subject to dispute, the motion shall be supported by affidavits or other sworn statements. The applicant shall file an original and four (4) copies of the motion for stay and, if the motion is opposed, shall attach legible copies of the documents listed below. If the applicant asserts that time does not permit the filing of a written motion, applicant shall deliver to the clerk five (5) legible copies of each of the listed documents as soon as possible. If any listed document cannot be attached or delivered, a statement of the reason for the omission shall be substituted. The documents required are:

(1) the application to the trial court for a stay;

(2) each brief or memorandum of authorities filed by a party to the application in the trial court;

(3) the opinion giving the reasons advanced by the trial court for denying relief;

(4) the trial court order or judgment denying relief.

Reasonable notice of the motion shall be given to all parties. The motion shall be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court and will be considered by a panel of the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals. In emergency cases the application may be considered by a single justice or judge of the appropriate appellate court, and the applicant shall file the motion with the clerk of the Supreme Court in writing as promptly as possible.

(d) Stay may be conditioned upon the giving of a bond; proceedings against sureties. Relief available in the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals under this rule may be conditioned upon the filing of a bond or other appropriate security in the trial court. If the security is given in the form of a bond or stipulation or undertaking with one or more sureties, each surety submits itself to the jurisdiction of the trial court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the trial court as its agent upon whom any papers affecting its liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. The surety's liability may be enforced on motion in the trial court without the necessity of an independent action. The motion and notice of the motion may be served upon the clerk of the trial court, who shall forthwith mail copies to the sureties if their addresses are known. (Amended April 26, 2001.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss. R. App. P. 8 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 8, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXXV-XXXVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 8(a) is based on Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-31 (Supp. 1994) and Ala. R. App. P. 8(a). It provides for a stay of a money judgment pending appeal upon approval of a supersedeas bond by the clerk of the trial court. In a case involvi0ng only a money judgment, the appellant can obtain a stay by posting a bond approved by the clerk. A form for a supersedeas bond is found in Form 5 in the Appendix of Forms.

All matters concerning stays are to be resolved in the first instance by the trial court, if possible.

If the trial court clerk declines to approve the bond, the appellant must apply to the trial court for approval under Rule 8(b). If the clerk approves the bond and the appellee contests it for any reason, the appellee must file a motion with the trial court for disapproval of the bond and to vacate the stay. If the appellant seeks a stay on any basis other than by posting a 125 percent bond to supersede a money judgment, the appellant must apply to the trial court for a stay. In determining whether to grant a stay, the trial court should endeavor to protect the prevailing party. The purpose of a supersedeas bond is to preserve the status quo while protecting the judgment creditor's rights pending appeal.

The trial court may grant or deny a stay upon such terms as to bond or otherwise as it considers proper for the security of the adverse party. It may approve security in the form of a cash or property bond. See M.R.C.P. 62.

While the trial court may not require a bond greater than 125 percent to supersede a money judgment, the court may, in appropriate cases, approve a supersedeas bond of less than 125 percent of the money judgment. See Henry v. First National Bank, 424 F. Supp. 633, 639 (N.D. Miss.), aff'd 595 F. 2d 291, 305 (5th Cir. 1979). If an appellant seeks relief from the full bond requirement, the trial court must, upon notice and hearing find that good cause justifies a departure from the usual bond requirements. At the hearing, the burden to provide a secure alternative to the required bond rests on the judgment debtor. Before the trial court can grant a reduced bond, there must be an objective demonstration that the appellant's financial strength and ability to respond will remain undiluted during the pendency of the appeal. A record sufficient to allow review should be made. The maximum bond in a contempt case is set by statute, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-11 (Supp. 1994). When the judgment is not a money judgment, the court may, but is not required to, follow the practice of statutes supplanted by this rule, e.g., now-repealed Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-35 (Supp. 1986) (double one year's rent to stay execution of a writ of possession in ejectment); § 11-51-39 (Supp. 1986) (double value of real estate to be surrendered); now-repealed § 11-51-41 (1972) (double value of real estate or charges on real estate).

Under Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-101 (Supp. 1994), certain parties, including the state, counties, municipalities, public officers, state educational or charitable institutions, and federally-owned corporations are entitled to an automatic stay without posting bond or any action by the clerk of the trial court under this rule. Similarly, no additional action by the clerk of the trial court is required when the appellant has already posted a sufficient bond prior to judgment under statutes governing appeals by executors, administrators, and guardians, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-99 (Supp. 1994), or appeals in estate tax cases, Miss Code Ann. § 27-9-47 (1994), or appeals from the State Tax Commission, Miss. Code Ann. § 27-35-163 (Supp. 1994).

Rule 8(c) and 8(d) are based on Fed. R. App. P. 8 and 5th Cir. R. 8.1.1. They set forth the procedure to be followed when an appellant or appellee contests the trial court's action on a stay.

[Amended, April 26, 2001.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Bond on money judgment.
Denial of automatic stay of execution.
Secure interests.

Bond on money judgment.

Miss. R. App. P. 8 does not require that a bond be posted in order to appeal a money judgment. St. Paul Travelers Ins. Co. v. Burt, 982 So. 2d 992 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Workers' compensation insurer was not required to post a supersedeas bond because Miss. R. App. P. 8 did not require that a bond be posted in order to appeal a money judgment, the insurer did not seek a stay of execution of the money judgment, and the insurer instead sought the reversal of a circuit court's order that determined how the funds were to be divided among the parties. St. Paul Travelers Ins. Co. v. Burt, 982 So. 2d 992 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not err in awarding each party 50 percent of marital assets where the husband maintained the farms and helped wife through medical school, which gave her a higher income, but the trial court erred in determining the amount of the supersede as bond because the bond on the money judgment awarded to the husband should have been set in accordance with Miss. R. App. P. 8, and the bond on the farm awarded to the husband should have been set according to Miss. Code Ann. § 11-51-39. Deal v. Wilson, 922 So. 2d 24 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 926 So. 2d 922, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 127 (Miss. 2006).

Denial of automatic stay of execution.

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the neighbors in their action against other neighbors to have fences removed was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 8 (b)(1) since a supersede as bond was still proper even where the relief appealed was nonmonetary, such as injunctive relief. Journeay v. Berry, 953 So. 2d 1145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Assuming that Miss. R. App. P. 8(b)(5) was applicable to the mother's case, the mother was entitled to no relief where, immediately after the trial court denied a stay of judgment, she petitioned the supreme court for relief, and a three-justice panel of the supreme court ultimately denied her request for a stay pending appeal; the trial court committed no error in denying the mother's request for an automatic stay of execution of the chancery court order. J.E.W. v. T.G.S., 935 So. 2d 954 (Miss. 2006).

Secure interests.

Agency had satisfied the purpose of posting a supersedeas bond and was entitled to an appeal. The subcontractor's interests were secure and it was more protected than it would have been if the agency had simply posted a bond of 125 percent because there was an actual money judgment in the court's registry. Tupelo Redevelopment Agency v. Gray Corp., 972 So. 2d 495 (Miss. 2007).

Rule 9. Release in criminal cases.

(a) Release prior to a judgment of conviction. A petition challenging an order refusing or imposing conditions of release shall be heard promptly by the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals if the case has been assigned to the Court of Appeals. Upon entry of an order refusing or imposing conditions of release, the trial court shall state in writing the reasons for the action taken. Where the petition challenges an order denying bail or setting bail which the challenging party contends is excessive, the challenging party shall file contemporaneously with the petition such papers, affidavits, and portions of the record as will show:

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;
(2) the weight of the evidence;
(3) family ties of the defendant;
(4) defendant's employment status;
(5) defendant's financial resources;

(6) defendant's character and mental condition;

(7) defendant's length of residence in the community;

(8) defendant's record of prior convictions;

(9) defendant's record of appearances or flight;

(10) a copy of the trial court's order regarding bail;

(11) where available, a transcript of the trial court proceedings regarding bail. If the party is unable to obtain such a transcript, the party shall state in an affidavit the reasons the party cannot obtain it;

(12) such other matters as may be deemed pertinent.

An original and four (4) copies of the petition and accompanying documents shall be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may require that additional copies be furnished.

(b) Release pending appeal from a judgment of conviction. Release after judgment of conviction of a felony and pending direct appeal shall be governed by statute and uniform rule. A party seeking release shall file with the party's motion for release the same papers, affidavits, and portions of the record as are required by Rule 9(a).

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 9 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 9, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXXVII-XXXVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 9(a) is substantially patterned after Fed. R. App. P. 9(a). Subdivision (b) continues Mississippi practice for release after judgment of conviction provided in Unif. Crim. R. Cir. Ct. Prac. 7.02, Miss. Code Ann. §§ 99-35-105, 99-35-107, 99-35-109 (1994), Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-115 (1994), Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-117 (1994). Both 9(a) and (b) require the party seeking release to provide the appellate court with certain information relevant to release. See former 5th Cir. R. 9.1, 9.2. Normally these facts will be part of the record in the trial court. Both petitions under 9(a) and motions under 9(b) will be handled by the appropriate appellate court as motions under Rule 27.

[Amended effective April 18, 2007.]

Rule 10. Content of the record on appeal.

(a) Content of the record. The parties shall designate the content of the record pursuant to this rule, and the record shall consist of designated papers and exhibits filed in the trial court, the transcript of proceedings, if any, and in all cases a certified copy of the docket entries prepared by the clerk of the trial court.

(b) Determining the content of the record.

(1) Designation of Record. Within seven (7) days after filing the notice of appeal, the appellant shall file with the clerk of the trial court and serve both on the court reporter or reporters and on the appellee a written designation describing those parts of the record necessary for the appeal.

(2) Inclusion of Relevant Evidence. In cases where the defendant has received the death sentence, the entire record shall be designated. In any other case, if the appellant intends to urge on appeal that a finding or conclusion is unsupported by the evidence or is contrary to the evidence, the appellant shall include in the record a transcript of all evidence relevant to such finding or conclusion.

(3) Matters Excluded Absent Designation. In any case other than a case where the defendant has received a death sentence, the record shall not include, unless specifically designated,

i. subpoenas or summonses for any witness or defendant when there is an appearance for such person:

ii. papers relating to discovery, including depositions, interrogatories, requests for admission, and all related notices, motions or orders;

iii. any motion and order of continuance or extension of time;

iv. documents concerning the organization of the grand jury or any list from which grand or petit jurors are selected;

v. pleadings subsequently replaced by amended pleadings;

vi. jury voir dire.

(4) Statement of Issues. Unless the entire record, except for those matters identified in (b)(3) of this Rule, is to be included, the appellant shall, within the seven (7) days time provided in (b)(1) of this Rule, file a statement of the issues the appellant intends to present on the appeal and shall serve on the appellee a copy of the designation and of the statement. Each issue in the statement shall be separately numbered. If the appellee deems inclusion of other parts of the proceedings to be necessary, the appellee shall, within 14 days after the service of the designation and the statement of the appellant, file with the clerk and serve on the appellant and the court reporter a designation of additional parts to be included. The clerk and reporter shall prepare the additional parts at the expense of the appellant unless the appellant obtains from the trial court an order requiring the appellee to pay the expense.

(5) Attorney's Examination and Proposed Corrections. For fourteen (14) days after service of the clerk's notice of completion under Rule 11(d)(2), the appellant shall have the use of the record for examination. On or before the expiration of that period, appellant shall return the record to the trial court clerk, and shall append to the record (i) a written statement of any proposed corrections to the record, (ii) a certificate that the appellant or the appellant's attorney has carefully examined the record and that with the proposed corrections, if any, it is correct and complete, and (iii) a certificate of service, indicating that the record has been returned to the clerk. For fourteen (14) days after receipt of the certificate of service from appellant shall have the use of the record for examination. On or before the expiration of that period, appellee, shall return the record to the trial court clerk, and shall append to the record (i) a written statement of any proposed corrections to the record, (ii) a certificate that the appellee or the appellee's attorney has carefully examined the record and that with the proposed corrections, if any, it is correct and complete, and (iii) a certificate of service, indicating that the record has been returned to the clerk. Corrections as to which all parties agree in writing shall be deemed made by stipulation. If the parties propose corrections to the record but do not agree on the corrections, the trial court clerk shall forthwith deliver the record with proposed corrections to the trial judge. The trial judge shall promptly determine which corrections, if any, are proper and enter and order under Rule 10(e). Within five days, the trial court clerk shall serve all parties and their attorneys with a copy of the order. If a party does not agree with the court's order, that party shall, within five days of service of the order, request a hearing. Such a request shall be assigned priority status on the trial judge's docket, and after a hearing, the trial judge shall promptly enter an order directing the court reporter and/or the trial court clerk to make the appropriate corrections(s), if any, and to finalize completion of the record for transmission to this Court. Once the order is entered, or if no hearing request is made, the record shall be returned to the court reporter and/or the trial court clerk who shall within seven days make corrections directed by the order. The trial court clerk shall verify that any approved changes have been made and that the required certifications are appended to the record before sending it to the Supreme Court.

(c) Statement of the evidence when no report, recital, or transcript is available. If no stenographic report or transcript of all or part of the evidence or proceedings is available, the appellant may prepare a statement of the evidence or proceedings from the best available means, including recollection. The statement should convey a fair, accurate, and complete account of what transpired with respect to those issues that are the bases of appeal. The statement, certified by the appellant or his counsel as an accurate account of the proceedings, shall be filed with the clerk of the trial court within 60 days after filing the notice of appeal. Upon filing the statement, the appellant shall simultaneously serve notice of the filing on the appellee, accompanied by a short and plain declaration of the issues the appellant intends to present on appeal. If the appellee objects to the statement as filed, the appellee shall file objections with the clerk of the trial court within 14 days after service of the notice of the filing of the statement. Any differences regarding the statement shall be settled as set forth in subdivision (e) of this Rule.

(d) Agreed statement as the record on appeal. In lieu of a record on appeal designated pursuant to subdivisions (b) or (c) of this Rule, the parties may prepare and sign a statement of the case showing how the issues presented by the appeal arose and were decided in the trial court and setting forth only so many of the facts averred and proved or sought to be proved as are essential to a decision of the issues presented. If the statement conforms to the truth, it, together with such additions as the court may consider necessary fully to present the issues raised by the appeal, shall be approved by the trial court and shall then be certified to the Supreme Court as the record on appeal.

(e) Correction or modification of the record. If any difference arises as to whether the record truly discloses what occurred in the trial court, the difference shall be submitted to and settled by that court and the record made to conform to the truth. If anything material to either party is omitted from the record by error or accident or is misstated in the record, the parties by stipulation, or the trial court, either before or after the record is transmitted to the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, or either appellate court on proper motion or of its own initiative, may order that the omission or misstatement be corrected, and, if necessary, that a supplemental record be filed. Such order shall state the date by which the correction or supplemental record must be filed and shall designate the party or parties who shall pay the cost thereof. Any document submitted to either appellate court for inclusion in the record must be certified by the clerk of the trial court. All other questions as to the form and content of the record shall be presented to the appropriate appellate court.

(f) Limit on authority to add to or subtract from the record. Nothing in this rule shall be construed as empowering the parties or any court to add to or subtract from the record except insofar as may be necessary to convey a fair, accurate, and complete account of what transpired in the trial court with respect to those issues that are the bases of appeal. (Amended effective January 1, 1999; amended July 1, 1999; amended effective July 1, 2011, to revise the procedure for attorney's examination and proposed corrections.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 10 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 10, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XXXVIII-XLI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 10 was amended to delete references to repealed statutes and material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice. 632-635 So.2d LI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 10 is based on Fed. R. App. P. 10, taking into account modifications suggested by the more recent Ala. R. App. P. 10 and Tenn. R. App. P. 24.

The purpose of the Rule is to permit and encourage parties to include in the record on appeal only those matters material to the issues on appeal. While subdivision (b) will govern most appeals, subdivisions (c) and (d) provide alternate methods of preparing the record, either when no transcript is available, or when the parties can agree on a "statement of the case" that will adequately present the issues on appeal.

Subdivision (b) eliminates the confusion that followed City of Mound Bayou v. Roy Collins Const. Co., 457 So. 2d 337 (Miss. 1984). That case directed court reporters to record everything transpiring at trial, including voir dire and bench and chambers conferences. It also, however, ended the jurisdictional requirement of designating the record pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 9-13-33(1) to (4) (Supp. 1986). In doing so, it inadvertently encouraged use of the entire record, a practice the Court then condemned in Byrd v. F-S Prestress, Inc., 464 So. 2d 63, 69 (Miss. 1985). This rule reinstates the express requirement that the appellant designate those parts of the record to be included on appeal. Form 2 in the Appendix of Forms is a form for designation of the record. This requirement is no longer jurisdictional, but a failure to comply with it could lead to dismissal pursuant to Rule 2(a)(2). This is consistent with federal practice.

Pursuant to subdivision (b)(3), a general designation will not be construed to include certain papers normally irrelevant to the issues on appeal. The rule thus encourages the omission of these nonessential matters. Because counsel customarily do not file trial court briefs with the clerk, briefs are not included in the (b)(3) list. Briefs do not normally belong in a record on appeal, unless necessary to show that an issue was presented to the trial court.

A designation of certain issues under subdivision (b)(4) does not preclude a party from stating other issues in its brief under Rule 28(a)(3). However, a party asserting other issues in its brief will bear responsibility for the cost of preparing any additional portions of the record subsequently designated by any other party in response to the statement of additional issues. As a result, accurate designation under (b)(4) is advisable.

Subdivision (f) clearly states that the flexible procedures of this rule are not intended to permit a party to augment the record with matters entered ex parte.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Incomplete record.

Motion to strike granted.
Request for designation of the record denied.
Statement of the case.
Supplementation of the record.

Voluminous record.

Incomplete record.

Record was insufficient to allow an appellate court to examine the issue of whether there was probable cause for a police officer to order a blood draw on defendant following a vehicle accident, because defendant failed to include a transcript of the evidence as required by Miss. R. App. P. 10. Scott v. State, 24 So. 3d 1039 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

In a case in which the trial court sentenced defendant as a habitual offender pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, defendant successfully argued on appeal that the State failed to prove that he had two prior felony offenses and had received a sentence of at least one year for each conviction. The State acknowledged that the exhibits submitted to the appellate court did not include a copy, certified or non-certified, of a 1992 felony conviction for defendant. Williams v. State, 32 So. 3d 1222 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Chancery court did not err in granting a divorce on the ground of desertion even though the proceedings were not heard in open court as required by Miss. Code Ann. § 93-5-17(1); there was nothing in the record to contradict the chancellor's finding regarding the wife's grounds for divorce, and the husband, who failed to answer or appear, failed to follow Miss. R. App. P. 10(c), which might have created a record on appeal. Luse v. Luse, 992 So. 2d 659 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Under the express language of Miss. R. App. P. 10(b)(3), any summonses issued in a case, and returns thereon, should have been included in the record, even absent designation, because the record was devoid of any appearance made by a father in youth court proceedings. In the Interest of N.W., 978 So. 2d 649 (Miss. 2008).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the doctor in a medical malpractice action was appropriate under Miss. R. App. P. 10(b)(3)(iii) because the appellate court was unable to consider the contents of depositions taken that were not attached as exhibits to motions since they were not specifically designated as part of the record for appeal. Hubbard v. Wansley, 954 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's conviction and sentence for possession of controlled dangerous substance, cocaine, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139 was affirmed when the state's introduction of a photograph, which included marijuana and violated a pretrial order that the state would not divulge evidence of marijuana to the jury, did not constitute a reversible error when defendant failed to timely object to the introduction of the photograph, failed to include his motion for a mistrial in the record, and failed to correct omissions in the record pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 10(c) to address his claim that the was denied a meaningful appeal. Hales v. State, 933 So. 2d 962 (Miss. 2006).

Court refused to address a patient's constitutional claims on appeal because they had not been raised first in the trial court. Southern v. Miss. State Hosp., 853 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 2003).

Absent a record basis to determine otherwise, the appellate court presumed the chancellor's order of contempt was based on adequate evidence; if the chancellor did refuse to admit the receipt book that the mother stated she had compiled and then offered, the appellate court would presume that the chancellor did at least hear evidence that no payments were made. Thompson v. Miss. Dep't of Human Servs., 856 So. 2d 739 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Appellants failed to preserve an assignment of error for appeal where the record was inadequate to permit review by the appellate court as the appellants could have presented their issue to the appellate court by describing the trial court's ruling pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 10(c). Palmer v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 905 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, remanded, 904 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. 2005).

While Rule 10(b)(2) does require an appellant to provide a proper designation to allow the reviewing court to resolve the issues, an appellee has the opportunity to supplement the appellant's designation if the appellee feels that it is deficient, and should not then be allowed to complain if he fails to do so. Norwood v. Extension of Boundaries, 788 So. 2d 747 (Miss. 2001).

The could not review the defendant's allegation of error, which pertained to an unreported bench conference and the excusal of a potential juror for cause, where he failed to prepare a statement of the evidence or proceedings from the best available means, including recollection. Edwards v. State, 723 So. 2d 1221 (Ct. App. 1998).

Where the defendant was represented by the same counsel on appeal as he was at his trial, the court may properly require counsel to articulate the prejudice that may have resulted from a failure to record a portion of the proceedings order to mandate reversal and remand for a new trial. Watts v. State, 717 So. 2d 314 (Miss. 1998).

Jury instruction.

Even though defendant's proffered jury instruction on misdemeanor receipt of stolen property should have been provided in the record, an appeal was not procedurally barred because there was a lengthy discussion of the particular instruction during a bench conference that appeared in the record. Lindsey v. State, 990 So. 2d 270 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Motion for free copy of record.

Denying defendant's motion for a free copy of an appellate record did not violate Miss. R. App. P. 10(b)(5) because defendant did not sufficiently plead why defendant needed the record, as defendant's use of a general, pre-populated list of allegations contained in a motion template did not sufficiently supply a required need or purpose for the documents. Clark v. State, 54 So. 3d 304 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Motion to strike granted.

Defendant correctly argued that under Miss. R. App. P. 10(f), the transcript pages attached to plaintiffs' brief were not part of the record in the chancery court, and therefore not considered by the chancellor when ruling on the summary judgment motions, and should not have been considered by the reviewing court. Consequently, the reviewing court granted defendant's motion to strike. KBL Props., LLC v. Bellin, 900 So. 2d 1160 (Miss. 2005).

Request for designation of the record denied.

Circuit court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's request for designation of the record under Miss. R. App. P. 10(b)(1) where, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5, his desire to pursue a civil action was not a ground for relief; the request failed to comply with Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-9. Willis v. State, 950 So. 2d 200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Statement of the case.

Where a mother appealed from orders signed in a custody case that might have resulted from a settlement, a dismissal was appropriate because the notice of appeal should have been construed as a motion for relief under Miss. R. Civ. P. 60; the mother was given some leeway as she was proceeding pro se. It could not be determined whether a first order signed by a chancellor was the result of a settlement where no transcript of events was available, the father's statement of the case contended there was such an agreement, and the mother's attorney signed "approved as to form only." Klein v. McIntyre, 966 So. 2d 1252 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Supplementation of the record.

Where a judge and the Mississippi Commission on Judicial Performance filed a Joint Motion for Approval of Recommendation, the judge's accompanying brief including factual allegations that disputed portions of the joint motion was an impermissible attempt to add to the record. Miss. Comm'n on Judicial Performance v. Dearman, 66 So. 3d 112 (Miss. 2011).

Appellate court had authority to request that the record be supplemented in order for the court to fully understand the procedures behind the administrative law judge's decision. Kitchens v. Jerry Vowell Logging, 874 So. 2d 456 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Appellate court chose not to grant an injured employee's request to supplement the record to include his doctor's testimony in collateral litigation that the employee had suffered permanent disability, when the doctor had testified in the employee's workers' compensation proceeding that the employee had not suffered permanent disability, because the appellate court did not find the new evidence to be an omission from the record. Kemper Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Coleman, 812 So. 2d 1119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Transfer of record.

The appellant has the duty to ensure that the records arrive at the appropriate court and cannot rely on one county circuit court to ensure that records are transferred to another county circuit court. Zurich Am. Ins. Co. of Ill. v. Beasley Contracting Co., 779 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Voluminous record.

Although the condominium owner argued that the association should have born the lion's share of the appeal costs because the extensive record on appeal was unnecessary and irrelevant, the appellate court found that while the final, designated record was voluminous, it contained all the necessary information to render a decision. Notwithstanding that the record was very copious, it was necessary and relevant to resolve each issue presented in accordance with Miss. R. App. P. 10. Robertson v. Chateau Legrand Prop. Owner's Ass'n, 39 So. 3d 931 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Rule 11. Completion and transmission of the record.

(a) Duty of appellant. After filing the notice of appeal the appellant or, in the event that more than one appeal is taken, each appellant shall comply with the provisions of Rule 10 and shall take any other action necessary to enable the clerk to assemble and transmit the record. A single record shall be transmitted.

(b) Estimation and payment of fees.

(1) Record preparation estimate and deposit. Within seven (7) days after filing the notice of appeal, the appellant shall estimate the cost of preparation of the record on appeal, including, but not limited to, the cost of the preparation of the transcript, and shall deposit that sum with the clerk of the court whose judgment or order has been appealed. The appellant shall simultaneously file with the clerk of the trial court a certificate setting forth the fact of compliance with this subparagraph and shall serve a copy of the certificate upon all other parties, upon the court reporter, and upon the Supreme Court Clerk. The estimate shall be calculated pursuant to estimates from the clerk(s) and court reporter(s). If the appellant is unable to obtain an estimate from a clerk within the seven (7) days, the appellant shall calculate the estimate at the statutory rate per page for the approximate number of pages of clerk's papers. If the appellant is unable to obtain an estimate from a court reporter within the seven (7) days, the appellant shall calculate the estimate at the rate of $300.00 per day of proceedings to be transcribed.

(2) Application to increase deposit. If dissatisfied with the amount tendered, either the clerk of the trial court or the court reporter may apply for an increase to the trial court which, after reasonable advance notice and opportunity to be heard having been afforded all parties, and for good cause shown, may order the amount of the deposit increased. The party taking the appeal shall comply with any such order within 14 days of the date of entry. The deposit and any such order shall be provisional, subject to adjustment after the transcript has been completed and its actual cost ascertained.

(c) Duty of court reporter to prepare and file transcript. Upon completion of the transcript the reporter shall certify the transcript as an accurate account of the proceedings and file the original and one copy of the transcript with the clerk of the trial court. The reporter shall simultaneously certify and serve notice of the filing on the parties and on the clerk of the Supreme Court. Additionally, the reporter shall prepare an electronically formatted medium (such as USB Flash Drive or CD-ROM) of the transcript filed and shall file the electronic medium with the trial court clerk for inclusion in the appellate record. All electronic media and electronic files stored thereon must be in an industrial standardized format with the electronic transcript stored in the Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF). All electronic media shall be labeled to include the following information:

(1) style of the case; and,

(2) number of CD-ROMs, i.e., 1 of 2, 2 of 2, etc.

After such filing and service of notice, the trial court clerk may disburse actual fees earned to the court reporter from estimated fees deposited pursuant to Rule 11(b).

(d) Duty of trial court clerk to prepare and transmit record.

(1) Clerk's preparation of record. Upon the appellant's compliance with subparagraph (b)(1) and service of the designation required by Rule 10(b)(1), the trial court clerk shall assemble the record as follows:

i. Clerk's Papers. A certified copy of the docket entries prepared by the clerk of the trial court shall be followed by a legible photocopy of any papers filed with the clerk and designated by the parties and a cost bill for the preparation of the record indicating costs for the trial court clerk and court reporter and the Supreme Court filing fee. Within 30 days, the clerk shall assemble the papers in the order of filing, number each page consecutively at the bottom, and transmit a list of the papers correspondingly numbered and identified with reasonable definiteness. All jury instructions shall be placed in the record with court instructions first, instructions given to plaintiff second, instructions refused plaintiff third, instructions given to defendant fourth, and instructions refused defendant fifth.

The trial court clerk shall separate the clerk's papers into volumes of no more than 150 pages for fastening. The clerk shall fasten the clerk's papers on the top and provide suitable covers for each volume. Each volume of clerk's papers shall be bound in a brown binder and the outside of each binder shall designate the page numbers of the pages contained in that volume.

ii. Transcript. The original transcript is prepared by the court reporter pursuant to Rule 11(c). The clerk of the trial court shall not renumber the pages of the original transcript, nor make copies of the original transcript, nor handle the original transcript in any way other than to include in the table of contents of the Clerk's Papers the number of volumes contained in the original transcript and include the original transcript as part of the record to be transmitted to the Supreme Court. The court reporter is responsible for preparing, certifying, and binding the transcript and is responsible for furnishing the transcript fully ready for transmission to the Supreme Court.

iii. Exhibits. Within 30 days, a copy of exhibits designated by the parties shall be assembled in a flat file envelope or a box. If an exhibit is a photograph, the original shall be included and a photocopy retained by the trial court clerk. Video and audio tapes shall be included and a duplicate shall be retained by the trial court clerk. The clerk shall include with the exhibits forwarded to the Supreme Court a list of all exhibits designated by the parties, indicating thereon those retained by the trial court clerk and those submitted to the Supreme Court. Documents of unusual bulk or weight and physical exhibits other than documents, shall not be transmitted by the trial court clerk unless the clerk is directed to do so by a party or by the clerk of the Supreme Court. A party must make advance arrangements with the clerks for the transportation and receipt of exhibits of unusual bulk or weight.

(2) Transmission of record. When the clerk's papers and exhibits are assembled and the transcript is received the clerk shall then execute a certificate of compliance with this Rule and serve notice of completion on the parties and on the clerk of the Supreme Court. At the end of the time prescribed by Rule 10(b)(5), the clerk shall immediately deliver the record to the Supreme Court.

(e) Retention of duplicate record in trial court for use in preparing appellate papers. The trial court shall retain, pending further order of the Supreme Court, its original docket entries, the original papers held with the clerk, a copy of the list of papers required by Rule 11(d)(1)(i), the original exhibits, other than photographs, a photocopy of photographic exhibits, a copy of video and audio tape exhibits, a duplicate of the reporter's transcript, and table of contents. Attorneys preparing appellate papers may use these retained documents. In cases where the circuit or chancery court has functioned as an appellate court for review of an on-the-record adjudication by an administrative agency or inferior tribunal and the circuit or chancery court clerk determines that a copy of the proceedings of such adjudication is retained in the administrative agency or inferior tribunal, the circuit or chancery court clerk need not copy the record of such proceedings, but must retain the original of the papers and documents attendant to the proceedings in that court while transmitting to the Supreme Court the original of the agency or inferior tribunal record (including transcript, papers, documents, and exhibits), along with a copy of the record of the circuit or chancery court proceedings.

(f) Record for preliminary hearing in the Supreme Court. If, prior to the time the record is transmitted, a party desires to make in the Supreme Court a motion for dismissal, for release, for a stay pending appeal, for additional security on the bond on appeal or on a supersedeas bond, or for any intermediate order, the clerk of the trial court at the request of any party shall transmit to the Supreme Court copies of such parts of the original record as any party shall designate, or shall certify them for transmission by the party.

[Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended effective May 23, 2002; amended effective June 27, 2002; amended effective March 23, 2006, to provide that the trial court clerk shall assemble the record at the same time as the court reporter prepares the transcript; amended effective July 1, 2009; amended effective July 1, 2011, to revise the time for preparation of the clerk's papers and exhibits.]

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 27, 2002, Rule 11(c) and the Comment were amended to delete requirements that the reporter prepare and serve an acknowledgment of receipt of the certificate of compliance. 819-821 So.2d XV (West Miss. Cases 2002).

Effective May 23, 2002, Rule 11(b)(1) and the Comment were amended to provide alternative methods for estimating costs. 813-815 So.2d XXVIII (West Miss. Cases 2002).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 11 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 11. 644-647 So.2d XLI-XLVI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 11(d)(2) and Appendix III, section II(1), were amended to provide further detail concerning the binding and labeling of the clerk's papers and the transcript. 632-635 So.2d XLVI-XLVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 11(b) provides the appellant shall estimate costs based on estimates received from the clerk(s) and court reporter(s) if available within 7 days after filing the notice of appeal. If either the clerk(s) or court reporters(s) do not provide estimates, Rule 11(b)(1) provides for alternative methods. Even though Rule 3(a) no longer makes prepayment of costs an absolute criterion for perfecting an appeal, the Supreme Court can respond under Rule 2(a)(2) to such failure with an appropriate sanction, including dismissal. Appellants who claim exemption from payment or prepayment of costs, see, e.g., Rule 6 (in forma pauperis appeals); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-53-13 (1972); City of Mound Bayou v. Roy Collins Const. Co., 457 So. 2d 337 (Miss. 1984) (exemption for state, county, city, town or village), should estimate the cost of preparation of the record but claim the exemption in the certificate of compliance required by Rule 11(b)(1). If the exemption is denied, the appellant should then prepay as required by the rule. Form 3 in the Appendix of Forms is a form for the certificate required by this rule.

Rule 11(c) gives to the Supreme Court the authority to rule on certain requests for extension. The Court may empower its clerk to rule on such requests and to grant extensions up to a specified time, e.g., 30 days. The rule prescribes the content of the reporter's request. The rule also provides that the transcript is to conform to the Guidelines for Court Reporters and exhibits are not to be physically incorporated in the transcript, thereby ensuring that all transcripts will be uniform and eliminating the awkward folding and separation of documentary exhibits by page.

Rule 11(c) also requires the court reporter to prepare and file with the original transcript a copy of the transcript in an electronically formatted medium. This procedure provides the Supreme Court a copy of the transcript via electronic format for future reference by the Court, if required.

The transcript table of contents required by Rule 11(c) should comply with Miss. Code Ann. § 9-13-25 (1972).

Rule 11(d) requires that the trial court clerk prepare the record on appeal. It eliminates the binding of records in book form and so avoids an unnecessary expense to the parties. Under Rule 11(d), the record as transmitted will consist of (1) the certified copy of docket entries, a photocopy of filed papers designated by the parties, and a cost bill; (2) the original transcript; and (3) an envelope or box containing a copy of designated exhibits accompanied by the list identifying which exhibits are retained by the clerk and which are submitted to the Supreme Court required by Rule 11(d)(1)(iii). The clerk may mark the certified copy of docket entries with the page numbers corresponding to each entry and so provide the list of documents required by Rule 11(d)(1)(i). Form 6 in the Appendix of Forms is a form for a list of clerk's papers. The form can be used if the docket sheet is illegible or for any other reason a satisfactory list cannot be produced by adding record page numbers to the docket sheet. The rule does not follow the federal practice of appeals entirely on the original record, but retains the requirement of copying original papers and exhibits for use by the Supreme Court. This requirement reduces the bulk of documents to be reviewed by the Court and provides for a duplicate copy of essential records.

The requirement that the clerk duplicate exhibits may, in some cases, impose an unnecessary expense on the parties. For this reason, Rule 11(d) provides that the clerk shall not duplicate documents of unusual bulk or weight and Rule 12 provides for the transmission of original items to the Supreme Court. The retention of designated records in the trial court would not preclude the parties from including parts of those records in their record excerpts submitted pursuant to Rule 30. Rules 11(d)(1)(iii) and 11(e) provide that the trial court clerk is to retain a photocopy of exhibits which are photographs and a copy of video and audio tapes, and is to send the original photographic exhibits and original audio or video tapes to the Supreme Court without a special request.

Rules 11(e) and (f) follow Fed.R.App.P. 11(c) and (g).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Court reporters.
Prepayment of fees.

Court reporters.

Suit against court reporter for failure to prepare transcript was properly dismissed, because, although the reporter was not entitled to quasi-judicial immunity, the court reporter's duty to prepare and file the transcript did not arise until the party had paid in full the estimated costs of appeal. Vinson v. Roth-Roffy, 829 So. 2d 1250 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where reason for delay in appeal was almost exclusively due to court reporter, defendant on remand would be allowed to raise issue that his ability to defend himself was prejudiced by denial of speedy appeal and that State deliberately engaged in oppressive conduct. Lanier v. State, 684 So. 2d 93 (Miss. 1996).

Prepayment of fees.

Guardian ad litem fee under M.R.C.P. Rule 17(d) was not a "cost of preparation of the record on appeal" under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule, and therefore prepayment of fee was not required for processing of appeal to supreme court. In re Newsom, 536 So. 2d 1 (Miss. 1988).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Unless the Supreme Court establishes applicable retention schedules in accordance with Section 25-59-17, before destroying a designated record the chancery clerk must seek and receive an order from the Supreme Court approving its destruction. Creekmore, Jan. 6, 2005, A.G. Op. 05-0624.

Rule 12. Transmission of original item from the trial court.

Any party to an appeal or any justice of the Supreme Court or judge of the Court of Appeals may request that an original of any writing, document or exhibit in the record on appeal be delivered to the appropriate appellate court. The request shall be made to the clerk of the Supreme Court. Upon receipt of such request, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall request the original from the trial court clerk. The clerk of the trial court shall photocopy the original and forward the original to the clerk of the Supreme Court, retaining the photocopy in the clerk's office. Following disposition in the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall return the original to the clerk of the trial court.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 12 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 12, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XLVI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 12 is based on Ala.R.App.P. 13 and former Mississippi practice. This Rule applies only to matters designated as a part of the record and is not a substitute for a motion to supplement the record pursuant to Rule 10(e).

Rule 13. Docketing the appeal and filing the record.

(a) Docketing the appeal. Upon receipt of the copy of the notice of appeal transmitted by the clerk of the trial court pursuant to Rule 3(d), the clerk of the Supreme Court shall enter the appeal upon the docket and assign it a docket number which includes the designation TS to serve as a tracking number. The docket number shall remain the same throughout the appellate process regardless of whether the case is assigned to the Court of Appeals or is retained by the Supreme Court. An appeal shall be docketed under the title "_____, Appellant(s) v. _____, Appellee(s)," identifying appellant(s) and appellee(s).

(b) Filing the record, partial record, or certificate. Upon receipt of the record transmitted pursuant to Rule 11(d), or the partial record transmitted pursuant to Rule 11(f), the clerk of the Supreme Court shall file it, replace the TS designation with a designation to indicate the kind of case it is (e.g., KA for criminal appeal, CA for civil appeal, etc.) and immediately give notice to all parties of the date on which it was filed.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 13 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 13, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 13 was further amended to effect technical changes concerning docketing and tracking appeals. 644-647 So.2d XLVI-XLVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 13 follows Fed.R.App.P. 12. Rule 45 sets forth other duties of the clerk. Docketing the appeal at the time the notice of appeal is filed gives the Supreme Court greater control over the appellate process. It also recognizes the principle that perfection of the appeal by filing the notice vests jurisdiction over the case in the Supreme Court, except as otherwise provided by statute or rule.

Rule 14. Findings of fact and calculations during the course of an appeal.

(a) Finding of fact by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court (and the Court of Appeals on those cases assigned to it by the Supreme Court) may try and determine all issues of fact which may arise out of any appeal before it and which are necessary to the disposition of the appeal, and, to this end, may, by order in each case, prescribe in what way evidence may be produced before it on the issue.

(b) Finding of fact by the trial court. In the event the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals so directs, the trial court may determine all issues of fact which may arise out of any appeal submitted to the trial court for a determination, and which may be necessary for the disposition of cases on appeal.

(c) Calculations. When a party relies on an error in the calculation of interest or damages as a reason for altering a judgment, a true calculation shall be presented to the appellate court, in writing and figures, with a certificate by a certified public accountant not interested in the cause, that the calculation is correct; and no such error will be noticed unless so presented to the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 14 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 14, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XLVII-XLVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 14(a) is a restatement of the authority to determine facts arising out of the appeal itself vested in the Court by Miss. Code Ann. § 9-3-37 (1972).

Subdivisions (b) and (c) carry forward procedures, previously followed by the Court, except that (c) now requires that a certified public accountant prepare the certificate.

Rule 15. Mandamus to require trial court decision.

(a) When a trial judge in a civil case takes under advisement a motion or request for relief which would be dispositive of any substantive issues and has held such motion or request under advisement for sixty (60) days, the plaintiffs and the defendants shall each within fourteen (14) days thereafter submit a proposed order or judgment to the trial judge and shall forward to the Administrative Office of Courts, the trial court clerk and the opposing parties true copies thereof with a statement setting forth the style and number of the case, the names and addresses of the judge and of all parties and the date on which such motion or request was taken under advisement. On receipt of such proposed orders and notices, the Administrative Office of Courts shall calendar them and notify the trial judge and the trial court clerk of the filing. At any time thereafter that an order or judgment is entered on the motion or request for relief, the plaintiffs and the defendants shall, in writing, promptly notify the Administrative Office of Courts and the opposing parties of the date of entry of the decision; copies of such notification shall be sent to the judge and the trial court clerk. If no written notice of a decision is received by the Administrative Office of Courts within six (6) months from the date the case was taken under advisement, the Administrative Office of Courts shall confirm with the trial court clerk that no order or judgment has been entered and notify the Supreme Court. The Administrative Office of Courts will forward copies of its notification to the trial judge and parties and shall advise the judge and counsel that they are to respond to the notice within a specified period. The Supreme Court shall treat such notification as the filing of an application for a writ of mandamus by all the parties to the action and shall proceed accordingly. The notice of the Administrative Office of Courts of the time within which to respond shall satisfy the requirements of M.R.A.P. 21(d).

(b) The trial judge, not later than thirty (30) days prior to the expiration of the six (6) months from the date the case was taken under advisement, for just cause shown, may apply in writing to the Supreme Court for additional time beyond said six (6) months in which to enter a decision. Concurrently, the judge shall provide a copy of such application to each of the parties. (Amended June 14, 1996; amended effective October 17, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 14, 1996, Rules 15(a) and (c) were amended to provide that failure to timely file an application for a writ of mandamus will not result in dismissal when the failure is caused by excusable neglect and dismissal will result in manifest injustice. 673-678 So.2d XXXV (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 15 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 15. 644-647 So.2d XLVIII-XLIX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended April 17, 1997; July 1, 1998; amended effective October 17, 2002.]

COMMENT

This rule recognizes the importance of prompt disposition of matters submitted to the courts for decision and is in accord with M.R.C.P. 1 in its dictate that the rules be construed to secure just, speedy and inexpensive determination of actions, and with Section 3A(5) of the Code of Judicial Conduct which requires that judges promptly dispose of the business of the courts.

In its former version, Rule 15 applied where a judge failed to render a decision "on a motion or request for relief which would be dispositive of all the claims or the rights and liabilities of all the parties." As revised, the rule is now applicable to instances wherein no decision has issued on motions or requests for relief "which would be dispositive of any substantive issues."

The rule requires the Administrative Office of Courts to invite the trial judge and parties to respond to its notification of a matter having been held under advisement and to set a specified time during which such responses shall be filed with the Supreme Court. This satisfies the requirement of M.R.A.P. 21(d) requiring an opportunity for the judge and parties to respond to a petition for writ of mandamus.

The notification to the Administrative Office of Courts of matters taken under advisement is mandatory and the parties are not at liberty to disregard the duty. This rule provides a mechanism to facilitate disposition of matters as promptly as fair consideration of the issues allows. The judge may and is expected to seek additional time where just cause is found for further deliberation.

[Amended effective October 17, 2002.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.

Husband did not file his notice of dismissal until after learning of the special chancellor's appointment, he never ceased to pay the child support ordered in the 1994 temporary decree and only ceased paying the entirety of the alimony in approximately March of 1999, the same month he received notice the Supreme Court had denied his motion to reconsider the special appointment; the husband never acted like an individual who thought the temporary decree had dissolved until he knew for a fact that it had not. Franklin v. Franklin, 864 So. 2d 970 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Failure to object at trial meant that the bank customers waived the right to raise the issue that the trial court had erred in allowing the bank to argue the case on a different set of facts. Whitefoot v. BancorpSouth Bank, 856 So. 2d 639 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 866 So. 2d 473 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 148, 160 L. Ed. 2d 52 (2004).

Rule 16. Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the court of appeals; assignment of cases to the Court of Appeals.

(a) Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court shall have such jurisdiction as is provided by Constitution and statute. All appeals from final orders of trial courts shall be filed in the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court shall assign cases, as appropriate, to the Court of Appeals.

(b) Jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. Pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 9-4-3 (Supp. 1994), the Court of Appeals shall have only such jurisdiction as is conferred upon it by assignment of appeals and other proceedings by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court may, by statute, assign any appeal to the Court of Appeals except appeals in cases involving:

(1) the imposition of the death penalty;

(2) utility rates;
(3) annexations;
(4) bond issues;
(5) election contests; or
(6) a trial court's holding a statute unconstitutional.

(c) Transfer of case or matter to Court of Appeals. In matters which could be properly handled in either court but which are originally retained by the Supreme Court, that Court may, at any time prior to the issuance of an opinion or ruling disposing of a case or matter before it, transfer the case to the Court of Appeals if the Court determines that expeditious disposition requires the case be decided by the Court of Appeals.

(d) Initial assignment to the Court of Appeals. The clerk of the Supreme Court, subject to the directions of the Court, will designate those cases retained by that Court for disposition and those assigned to the Court of Appeals.

Although any case, other than those which the Supreme Court is statutorily required to retain, may be assigned to the Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court will retain all cases involving attorney discipline, judicial performance, and certified questions from a federal court. The Court will also ordinarily retain cases involving:

(1) a major question of first impression;

(2) fundamental and urgent issues of broad public importance requiring prompt or ultimate determination by the Supreme Court;

(3) substantial constitutional questions as to the validity of a statute, ordinance, court rule, or administrative rule or regulation;

(4) issues upon which there is an inconsistency in the decisions of the Court of Appeals or of the Supreme Court or conflict between the decisions of the two courts.

In assigning matters to the Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court may take into account the relative workloads of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court may also, by order, provide that cases falling within identified categories, defined by subject matter or other general criteria, shall be designated for immediate transfer to the Court of Appeals or retention by the Supreme Court. Except for those cases which the Supreme Court is required by statute to retain, a party has no right to have his or her case heard by the Supreme Court.

(e) Assignment decision final and not subject to reconsideration on petition of party or Court of Appeals. After entry of an order assigning a case to the Court of Appeals, neither the Court of Appeals nor any party may file any pleading or certification seeking reassignment. Any reassignment may take place only on the motion of the Supreme Court. (Amended effective October 15, 1998.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.

Where a justice court judge acted to cause a complaining officer to not show up for trial so that drunk driving charges could be dismissed for failure to prosecute, the Mississippi Supreme Court held, under Miss. Const. Art. 6, § 177A, that the offense involved moral turpitude, and imposed a 30-day suspension upon the judge. Miss. Comm'n on Judicial Performance v. Sanford, 941 So. 2d 209 (Miss. 2006).

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, the Supreme Court promulgated Miss.R.App.P. 16, entitled "Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals; Assignment of Cases to the Court of Appeals." Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 16 had been designated reserved. 644-647 So.2d XLIX-XLI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

Effective September 25, 1995, Rule 17(b) was amended to make clear that the time for filing a petition for writ of certiorari begins to run with the entry of the judgment of the Court of Appeals on the required petition for rehearing, and to effect unrelated technical changes. 660-662 So.2d LXXXIII (West Miss. Cases 1995).

COMMENT

M.R.A.P. 16, dealing with the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, has no counterpart in the former Supreme Court Rules. The rule specifies the cases which must, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 9-4-3-(1) (Supp. 1994), be decided by the Supreme Court. The rule further provides that all matters involving bar discipline and judicial performance will be decided by the Supreme Court, as will certified questions from federal courts. The rule makes it clear that any other case may, in the discretion of the Supreme Court, be assigned to the Court of Appeals. The rule sets forth criteria for retention of other cases in the Supreme Court, but the rule suggests that the Supreme Court will not ordinarily exercise its discretion to retain a case unless it is apparent that the case presents an issue which is of such broad and fundamental public importance that the Supreme Court must ultimately be involved in its disposition or unless the issue presented is such that its resolution is highly likely to result in significant development of the law. The rule does not preclude the assignment of cases involving law development to the Court of Appeals but provides that such assignments will not be routinely made.

Section (d) provides that a party has no right to have his case heard by the Supreme Court, and section (a) provides that the Court will not entertain any pleading which seeks to have a case reassigned to the Supreme Court from the Court of Appeals.

Rule 17. Review in the supreme court following decision by the Court of Appeals.

(a) Decisions of Court of Appeals reviewable by writ of certiorari. A decision of the Court of Appeals is a final decision which is not reviewable by the Supreme Court except on writ of certiorari. Review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but a matter of judicial discretion. The Supreme Court may grant a petition for writ of certiorari on the affirmative vote of four of its members and may, by granting such writ, review any decision of the Court of Appeals. Successive review of a decision of the Court of Appeals by the Supreme Court will ordinarily be granted only for the purpose of resolving substantial questions of law of general significance. Review will ordinarily be limited to:

(1) cases in which it appears that the Court of Appeals has rendered a decision which is in conflict with a prior decision of the Court of Appeals or published Supreme Court decision;

(2) cases in which it appears that the Court of Appeals has not considered a controlling constitutional provision;

(3) cases which should have been decided by the Supreme Court because:

(i) the statute or these rules require decision by the Supreme Court, or

(ii) they involve fundamental issues of broad public importance requiring determination by the Supreme Court.

Notwithstanding the presence of one or more of these factors, the Supreme Court may decline to grant a petition for certiorari for review of the decision of the Court of Appeals. The Court may, in the absence of these factors, grant a writ of certiorari.

(b) Time for filing petition for writ of certiorari; content and length of petition. A party seeking review of a judgment of the Court of Appeals must first seek review of that court's decision by filing a motion for rehearing in the Court of Appeals. If a party seeks review in the Supreme Court, a petition for a writ of certiorari for review of the decision of the Court of Appeals must be filed in the Supreme Court and served on other parties within fourteen (14) days from the date of entry of judgment by the Court of Appeals on the motion for rehearing, unless extended upon motion filed within such time. An untimely petition may be summarily dismissed by a single justice of the Supreme Court. The petition for writ of certiorari may not exceed ten (10) pages in length and must briefly and succinctly state the precise basis on which the party seeks review by the Supreme Court, and may include citation of authority in support of that contention. No citation to authority or argument may be incorporated into the petition by reference to another document. The petitioner must file an original and ten (10) copies of the petition. The Petitioner must attach, as appendices to the petition, a copy of the opinion and judgment of the Court of Appeals, and a copy of the motion for rehearing filed in the Court of Appeals.

(c) Briefs and oral argument not permitted. Neither briefs nor oral argument shall be allowed in support of a petition for a writ of certiorari, unless requested by the Supreme Court.

(d) Response to petition for writ of certiorari. Within seven (7) days after the filing of a petition for a writ of certiorari, any other party to the case may, but need not, file and serve an original and 10 copies of a written response in opposition to the petition. The response may not exceed ten (10) pages in length. No citation to authority or argument may be incorporated into the response by reference to another document. The respondent may attach, as an appendix, his or her response to the motion for rehearing filed in the Court of Appeals.

(e) Decision by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court shall act upon a petition for a writ of certiorari within ninety (90) days of the filing of the response provided for in subsection (d) above, or, should no response be filed, the final date upon which such response could be filed. The failure of the Court to issue such a writ within that period shall constitute a rejection of the petition and the petition shall be deemed denied.

(f) Reconsideration not permitted. Neither an acceptance nor a rejection of a petition for certiorari shall be subject to further pleading by a party for rehearing or reconsideration. Prior to final disposition, the Supreme Court may, on its own motion, find that the petition for certiorari was improvidently granted and may dismiss the certiorari proceeding.

(g) Notification of grant of petition for certiorari. Upon the Supreme Court's disposition of a petition for a writ of certiorari, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall immediately notify the parties.

(h) Supplemental briefs; record on review. Upon notice of a grant of certiorari, any party may, whether requested by the Court or not, within 10 days, file an original and 10 copies of a supplemental brief not to exceed 10 pages. No additional time or pages shall be allowed for supplemental briefs. The Supreme Court may require supplemental briefs on the merits of all or some of the issues for review. The Supreme Court's review on the grant of certiorari shall be conducted on the record and briefs previously filed in the Court of Appeals and on any supplemental briefs filed. The Supreme Court may limit the question on review.

(i) Oral argument. Oral argument shall not be allowed, unless requested by the Supreme Court. The Court may require oral argument.

(j) Mandate. The timely filing of a petition for a writ of certiorari shall stay the issuance of the mandate of the Court of Appeals. Upon the issuance of an order of denial of a petition for a writ of certiorari or upon the expiration of the period allowed for the Supreme Court's consideration of such a petition, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall issue the mandate, pursuant to M.R.A.P. 41.

(k) Motions to dismiss or withdraw opinion filed after petition for writ of certiorari. Where motions to dismiss an appeal or motions to withdraw or alter an opinion of the Court of Appeals are filed after a petitions for writ of certiorari have been filed in the Supreme Court, the proceedings on the petitions for writ of certiorari will be suspended and the cases will be remanded to the Court of Appeals to address the motions. After the Court of Appeals has addressed the motions, the matter shall proceed in the Supreme Court, and, if the motion to dismiss the case has been granted, the petition may be dismissed as moot. (Amended February 10, 1995; amended effective September 28, 1995; amended June 21, 1996; amended October 15, 1998, effective from and after January 1, 1999; amended June 24, 1999; amended effective January 3, 2002; amended April 18, 2007.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 17 (e) was amended to enlarge the period for acting on certiorari petitions from sixty to ninety days. In addition, Rule 17(b) was amended to redesignate rehearing "petitions" as "motions," and Rule 17 (d) was amended to consistently designate certiorari "petitions" as "petitions" and effect another technical change. 673-678 So.2d XXXIX-XL (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective September 25, 1995, Rule 17(b) was amended to make clear that the time for filing a petition a writ of certiorari begins to run with the entry of the judgment of the Court of Appeals on the required petition for rehearing, and to effect unrelated technical changes. 660 So.2d LXXXIII-LXXXIV (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective February 10, 1995, Rule 17(j) was amended to state that the clerk shall issue the mandate in accordance with Miss.R.App.P. 41. 648 So.2d XXXII (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective January 1, 1995, the Supreme Court promulgated Miss.R.App.P. 17, entitled "Review in the Supreme Court Following Decision by the Court of Appeals." Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 17 had been designated reserved. 644-647 So.2d LI-LIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1997; July 1, 1998.]

COMMENT

Rule 17 provides a procedure by which parties may seek Supreme Court review of a judgment of the Court of Appeals. Section (a) follows Miss. Code Ann. § 9-4-3(2)(Supp. 1994) which provides that "[d]ecisions of the Court of Appeals are final and are not subject to review by the Supreme Court, except by [grant of] writ of certiorari . . . by the affirmative vote of four (4) of [the Supreme Court's] members."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Discretionary review.
Jurisdiction.
Motion for rehearing.
Res judicata.
Statement of issues.

Discretionary review.

Argument of petitioner, an inmate, that the supreme court erred by denying his petition for writ of certiorari as he was denied his procedural due-process rights under federal and state law was without merit. Miss. R. App. P. 17(a) stated that review on writ of certiorari was a matter of judicial discretion and there was simply no right to review on a writ of certiorari. Conway v. State, 48 So. 3d 588 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 49 So. 3d 1139, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 627 (Miss. 2010).

Jurisdiction.

Certiorari is not a matter of right, and is to be considered only after petitioner has sought review of Court of Appeals decision by way of a petition for rehearing in that court. Harris v. State, 704 So. 2d 1286 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 827, 118 S. Ct. 90, 139 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1997).

Motion for rehearing.

Subsection (b) of this rule does not require that a successive motion for rehearing be filed by the party aggrieved by a decision issued on rehearing. Carter v. State, 754 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. 2000).

Res judicata.

Defendant, who had previously appealed her murder conviction, was given a single opportunity to litigate before the Mississippi Supreme Court; defendant could not relitigate issues already raised. Wade v. State, 802 So. 2d 1023 (Miss. 2001).

Statement of issues.

Petition for writ of certiorari which presented no issues, but instead made general statements that petition involved issues of general interest to criminal defense bar and prosecutors, did not comply with this rule and was denied. Jones v. State, 701 So. 2d 805 (Miss. 1997).

Practice of filing pro forma petition which fails to raise issues for consideration and fails to state precise basis on which party seeks review is unprofessional and risks imposition of sanctions. Skinner v. State, 700 So. 2d 1183 (Miss. 1997).

Rule 18. [Omitted].

APPEALS FROM AGENCY RESPONSIBLE FOR UTILITY RATES

Rule 19. Appeals from the public service commission.

Appeals from an administrative agency charged by law with the responsibility for approval or disapproval of rates sought to be charged the public by any public utility are governed by statutes enacted pursuant to the Mississippi Constitution of 1890, art. 6, § 146.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 19 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 19. 644-647 So.2d LIII-LIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 19 was amended to delete references to repealed statutes and material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice, and to effect attendant technical changes. 632-635 So.2d LI-LII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Legislative authority to provide for direct appeals to the Supreme Court from certain decisions of the Mississippi Public Service Commission was established by amendment to § 146 of the Mississippi Constitution of 1890. That amendment was ratified by the electorate on November 8, 1983, and was inserted as a part of the Constitution on January 3, 1984. Pursuant to the authority granted by § 146, the legislature enacted Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-72 (1991) which establishes procedures for such direct appeals.

Under § 77-3-72, final orders in any utility rate proceeding involving a filing for a rate change are appealed by filing an "appeal" comparable to the Rule 3 notice of appeal. The "appeal," however, is filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, not with the Commission, and it must "state briefly the nature of the proceedings before the commission, and shall specify the order complained of." Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-72(1) (1991). The appeal is on the entire record unless the parties stipulate to the contrary. Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-72(2) (1991). The statutes do not require a cost estimate or prepayment of costs. The appealing party must, however, pay the fees required by the clerk of the Supreme Court under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-7-3 (1991). The statutes provide for collection of rates under bond in certain cases. Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-72(3), (4) (1991).

Where the statute is silent, these rules govern the appeal. Applicable rules in rate appeals include rules concerning dismissal for failure to prosecute and other sanctions, Rule 2; designation, correction, and preparation of the record, Rule 10 and Rule 11; writs of mandamus and other extraordinary writs, Rule 21(c); filing and service, Rule 25; computation and extension of time, Rule 26; motions, Rule 27; brief and record excerpts, Rules 28-32; and other rules generally applicable to civil cases, Rules 33-38, 40-47.

Appeals from Commission decisions in other cases are to the chancery court of the judicial district in which the principal place of business of the utility in the State of Mississippi is located, Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-67(1) (1991), or to the circuit court of the first judicial district of Hinds County, Miss. Code Ann. § 77-1-45 (1991). Appeals from the chancery court to the Supreme Court are governed by these rules and the bond provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 77-3-71 (1991). Appeals from the circuit court to the Supreme Court are governed by these rules and the bond provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 77-1-47 (1991).

CERTIFIED QUESTIONS FROM FEDERAL COURTS

Rule 20. Certified questions from federal courts.

(a) When certified. When it shall appear to the Supreme Court of the United States or to any United States Court of Appeals that there may be involved in any proceeding before it questions or propositions of law of this state which are determinative of all or part of that cause and there are no clear controlling precedents in the decisions of the Mississippi Supreme Court, the federal court may certify such questions or propositions of law of this state to the Mississippi Supreme Court for rendition of a written opinion concerning such questions or propositions of Mississippi law. The Supreme Court may, in its discretion, decline to answer the questions certified to it.

(b) Method of invoking rule. The provision of this rule may be invoked by the federal court upon its own motion or the suggestion or motion of any interested party when approved by the federal court.

(c) Contents of certificate. The certificate shall contain the style of the case, a statement of facts showing the nature of the cause and the circumstances out of which the questions or propositions of law arise, and the question of law to be answered.

(d) Preparation of certificate. The certificate shall be certified to the Supreme Court by the clerk of the federal court and under its official seal. The Supreme Court may, in its discretion, require the original or copies of all or any portion of the record before the federal court to be filed with said certificate where, in its opinion, such record may be necessary in the determination of the certified question.

(e) Costs. The costs of the proceedings shall be equally divided between the parties unless otherwise ordered by the Supreme Court.

(f) Briefs and argument. The appellant or petitioner in the federal court shall submit the initial brief on the question certified. All briefs, arguments, and other proceedings shall be conducted according to these Rules. For the purposes of Rule 28, additional briefing will be upon directive of the Supreme Court. (Adopted governing matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended effective June 27, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 20 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 20. 644-647 So.2d LIV-LV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 20 continues the practice of accepting certified questions from federal courts. Acceptance of a question so certified is discretionary with the Court. The Court reserves the right to rephrase certified questions, Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Brown, 446 So. 2d 1002, 1006 (Miss. 1984), and has said it will restrict its review under this rule "to the performance when properly requested of the function of declaring in general terms the controlling rules" of state law, and not the application of law to fact. Boardman v. United Services Auto Ass'n, 470 So. 2d 1024, 1031 (Miss. 1985). The practice of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in certifying questions is discussed in In Re McClintock, 558 F. 2d 732, 733 nn. 2-5 (5th Cir. 1977), and J. Brown, Certification — Federalism in Action, 7 Cumb. L. Rev. 455 (1977) (tracing development of certification doctrine).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.
Certification of questions relating to retaliatory discharge.

In general.

In an issue certified to the Mississippi Supreme Court pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 20(a), the court interpreted the application of the limitations period of Miss. Code Ann. § 15-1-36, to be tolled until plaintiff patient, through reasonable diligence, learned of the alleged negligence of her treating physician, and not just learned of her injury. Huss v. Gayden, 991 So. 2d 162 (Miss. 2008).

As the issue of whether an insurance policy containing an "other insurance" clause can be required to drop down and pay first-dollar coverage ahead of defendant has not been addressed by the Mississippi Supreme Court, the standard for certification under Miss. R. App. P. 20(a), has been met. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Miss. Ins. Guar. Ass'n, 507 F.3d 309 (5th Cir. 2007).

Certification of questions relating to retaliatory discharge.

Questions were certified to the Supreme Court of Mississippi under Miss. R. App. P. 20 as to whether state law permitted a retaliatory discharge claim against an employer and supervisor as an exception to the employment at will doctrine when discharge was for reporting a co-employee's illegal acts that related to the employer's business and whether a supervisor could be held liable when he ratified the discharge during the scope of his employment. DeCarlo v. Bonus Stores, Inc., 512 F.3d 173 (5th Cir. 2007), affirmed in part and vacated in part by, remanded by 289 Fed. Appx. 735, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 17375 (5th Cir. Miss. 2008).

Rule 21. Writs of mandamus and prohibition directed to a judge or judges and other extraordinary writs.

(a) Writs and process, supreme court. The Supreme Court shall issue all writs and process necessary for the exercise and enforcement of its appellate jurisdiction and may enforce its mandates by fine and other appropriate sanctions.

(b) Writs and process, court of appeals. The Court of Appeals shall issue writs and other process necessary for the exercise and enforcement of its jurisdiction, but a writ, order, or other process in any appeal not transferred to the Court of Appeals by the Supreme Court shall be of no effect.

(c) Mandamus or prohibition to a judge or judges; petition for writ; service and filing. Application for a writ of mandamus or of prohibition directed to a judge or judges shall be made by filing a petition with the clerk of the Supreme Court with proof of service on the judge or judges and on all parties to the action in the trial court.

A petition for writ of mandamus, writ of prohibition, or other extraordinary writ shall not bear the name of the judge or judges, but shall be entitled, In re: _____, Petitioner. To the extent that relief is requested of a particular judge, unless otherwise ordered, the judge shall be represented pro forma by counsel for the party opposing the relief, who shall appear in the name of the party and not that of the judge, except that where the petition relates to a criminal case, the judge shall not be represented by the District Attorney's office but shall either represent himself/herself or be represented by the office of the Attorney General and/or private counsel retained by the judge. The petition shall contain a statement of the facts necessary to an understanding of the issues presented by the application and why it was denied by the trial court; a statement of the issues presented and of the relief sought; a statement of the reasons why the writ should issue; and certified copies of any order or opinion or parts of the record which may be essential to an understanding of the matters set forth in the petition. Upon receipt of the prescribed docket fee, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall docket the petition and submit it to the appellate court to which the case has been assigned.

(d) Denial; notice directing answer. If the appellate court is of the opinion that the writ should not be granted, it will deny the petition without requesting an answer. Otherwise, the clerk of the Supreme Court will issue notice that an answer to the petition be filed by the respondents within the time fixed by the notice. The notice shall be served by the clerk on the judge or judges and on all other parties to the action in the trial court. All parties below, other than the petitioner, shall also be deemed respondents for all purposes. Two or more respondents may answer jointly. The clerk shall advise the parties of the dates on which briefs are to be filed, if briefs are required, and of the date of oral argument. The proceeding shall be given preference over ordinary civil cases. The Supreme Court also may, in its discretion, treat the petition as a petition for permission to appeal under Rule 5 and order such further proceedings as the Court deems appropriate.

(e) Other extraordinary writs. Application for extraordinary writs other than those provided for in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this rule shall be made by petition filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court with proof of service on the parties named as respondents. Proceedings on such application shall conform, so far as is practicable, to the procedure prescribed in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this rule.

(f) Form of papers; number of copies. All papers shall be typewritten or printed. Four (4) copies shall be filed with the original, but the court may direct that additional copies be furnished. (Amended effective January 1, 1999.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 21 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 21 and added new subsections (a) and (b), embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LV-LVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 21 applies to all requests for remedial writs under Miss. Code Ann. § 9-1-19 (Supp. 1994). The rule was originally modeled on Fed. R. App. P. 21 as modified by 5th Cir. R. 21. With the exception of the writ of mandamus required by Rule 15, a party must seek relief in the trial court before obtaining the extraordinary relief of a remedial writ from the Supreme Court. The rule preserves the Mississippi requirement that papers attached to a petition must be certified. It does not require, however, that the petition be under oath. Petitions will be considered by a panel of the appropriate court rather than by a single justice or judge. In emergency circumstances in which panel consideration would be impractical due to requirements of time, however, a single justice or judge may hear the petition and issue a temporary stay pursuant to Rule 8. A single justice's or judge's decision not to grant a stay may be reviewed by the appropriate court.

The Supreme Court, under Rule 21(b), retains the discretion to treat the petition as a petition for permission to appeal under Rule 5 and to instruct the parties to proceed under that rule. See In re Brown, 478 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. 1985) (application for writ treated as emergency appeal).

[Amended effective April 18, 2007.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Attorney general.
Mandamus relief improper.

Attorney general.

Use of extraordinary writ was not appropriate in Governor's petition to compel Attorney General of Mississippi to perform certain acts and to refrain from performing others, in connection with duties concerning Division of Medicaid. In re Fordice, 691 So. 2d 429 (Miss. 1997).

There was no sufficient legal reason for supreme court to intervene and accept jurisdiction of tobacco companies' request for extraordinary relief in connection with Attorney General's action to recover Medicaid expenditures from companies. In re Corr-Williams Tobacco Co., 691 So. 2d 424 (Miss. 1997).

Mandamus relief improper.

Circuit court erred in issuing the writ of mandamus under Miss. R. App. P. 21 because the justice court judge's decisions to deny any further continuance and to proceed to trial on the misdemeanor DUI charge in petitioner's absence pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-17-9 were discretionary and appeals from the justice court to the circuit court required a trial de novo, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-35-1 and Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 12.02; thus, the writ of mandamus was the improper procedural tool to remedy petitioner's grievances regarding the denial of a continuance and proceeding to trial in petitioner's absence and, therefore, the grant of the writ of mandamus was in error pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 11-41-1. In re Chisolm, 837 So. 2d 183 (Miss. 2003).

Rule 22. Applications for post-conviction collateral relief in criminal cases.

(a) Filing of Applications. Applications for post-conviction collateral relief in criminal cases may be governed by Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-1, et seq. (Suppl. 1994) as supplemented and modified by this Rule 22. If any application fails to comply substantially with the statute, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall give written notice of the default, appraising the party of the nature of the deficiency. If the deficiencies are not corrected within thirty days, the application may be dismissed. Successive applications for post-conviction relief which do not clearly demonstrate an exception to the successive writ bar of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-27(9) may subject the filer to sanctions.

(b) Post-conviction Issues Raised on Direct Appeal. Issues which may be raised in post-conviction proceedings may also be raised on direct appeal if such issues are based on facts fully apparent from the record. Where the appellant is represented by counsel who did not represent the appellant at trial, the failure to raise such issues on direct appeal shall constitute a waiver barring consideration of the issues in post-conviction proceedings.

(c) Post-conviction Proceedings Filed by Persons Under Sentence of Death. Proceedings on post-conviction applications and motions filed by persons under sentence of death shall be governed by this rule. This sub-part (c) shall apply only to such proceedings filed by persons under sentence of death.

(1) Representation by counsel.

(i) The petitioner shall be represented by qualified counsel unless the petitioner has elected to proceed pro se, and the convicting court finds, after a hearing on the record, that the petitioner's election is informed and voluntary.

(ii) Where a petitioner is sentenced to death the Supreme Court shall, immediately after the announcement of the decision on direct appeal, order that the convicting court determine whether the petitioner is indigent and, if so, whether the petitioner desires appointment of counsel for the purpose of post-conviction proceedings. Such order shall be forwarded to the convicting court and the Office of Capital Post-Conviction Counsel upon entry. The Office of Capital Post-Conviction Counsel shall advise the convicting court of the attorney selected to represent the petitioner pursuant to Section 99-39-23 and these rules.

(iii) Should it be determined upon hearing in the convicting court that the petitioner has retained qualified private counsel, the attorney selected by the Office of Capital Post-Conviction Counsel shall take no further action and shall be discharged. Should it be determined that the petitioner elects to proceed pro se, the attorney selected by the Office of Post Conviction Counsel shall continue to serve, but only as counselor and advisor to the petitioner.

(2) Proceedings pro se.

(i) The petitioner shall be allowed to proceed pro se only upon findings of the convicting court that the petitioner has made an informed and voluntary election to so proceed under the provisions of subpart (1)(i) above. Such an election shall be deemed informed and voluntary only when the petitioner has been advised of the complexity of post-conviction proceedings and the limitations upon issues which may be raised. The court shall advise the petitioner that:

the stringent filing and other deadlines attendant to post-conviction proceedings will not be relaxed for pro se litigants, ignorance of the law or procedures will not be accepted as an excuse for failure to proceed in accordance with law, grounds for post-conviction relief, including intervening decisions, are often technical and require knowledge of and skill in the law, investigation, including discovery and the gathering of evidence can be best pursued by counsel, and incarceration of the petitioner will not be accepted as an excuse for failure to conduct such investigation and gather such evidence, the court will not relax or disregard the rules of evidence, procedure, or courtroom protocol for the pro se petitioner, and without legal counsel the petitioner's ability to proceed effectively will be hampered, and a decision to proceed pro se in post-conviction matters usually increases the likelihood of an outcome unfavorable to the petitioner.

(ii) In the event that expenses for litigation are allowed a post-conviction petitioner, they shall be disbursed through the attorney serving as advisor and counselor.

(iii) When the petitioner is proceeding pro se, access to trial and appellate files, prosecution and law enforcement files and the delivery of discovery materials shall be upon such conditions and subject to such restrictions as the conviction court may deem necessary to preserve the integrity and security of the files and materials.

(iv) When the petitioner is proceeding pro se, and the application for leave to file a motion for post-conviction relief is denied, or if the application is granted, relief is denied in the convicting court and such denial is affirmed in the Supreme Court, the attorney appointed as advisor and counselor shall seek appointment of federal habeas corpus counsel in accordance with the provisions of subpart (9) below.

(3) Compensation of appointed counsel and expenses of litigation.

Compensation for attorneys appointed under this section and expenses of litigation shall be governed by Miss. Code Ann. § 99-15-18. Prior to the approval of expenses for litigation, the petitioner shall present to the convicting court, with notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity for the Attorney General to be heard, a request estimating the amount of such expenses as will be necessary and appropriate in the matter, and the court will determine and allow such expenses as are justified upon hearing of the request for expenses. In requesting such expenses, the petitioner shall make a preliminary showing that such expenses are necessary to the presentation of his case and that they relate to positions which may reasonably be expected to be beneficial. To the extent that the court may find that the disclosure of identity of experts or other factual matters may hinder a fair preparation of the petitioner's case, the disclosure thereof may be presented in camera without disclosure to the State. All orders initially allowing litigation expenses shall be subject to review and reconsideration from time to time as the court may find necessary, and payment under such order will be approved only upon the submission of specific detailed invoices and review by the court. Should the court find that such invoices contain information which if disclosed to the State would unfairly disclose information detrimental to the petitioner's fair presentation of his case, the court shall consider those portions in camera without disclosure to the State.

(4) Further matters preliminary to proceedings in the Supreme Court.

(i) An application for post-conviction relief shall not be filed until proceedings on rehearing of the affirmance of the conviction and sentence are final.

However, not later than sixty (60) days following the appointment of post-conviction counsel, or the determination that the petitioner is represented by qualified private counsel, or elects to proceed pro se, counsel or the pro se petitioner shall examine the record and preliminarily investigate the case and shall file with this Court a statement that having done so, counsel or the pro se petitioner either finds no issues with potential post-conviction merit or finds that there are issues which are believed to be meritorious. In the event that counsel or the pro se petitioner files a statement indicating that post-conviction review is deemed to be meritorious and that counsel or the pro se petitioner intends to file an application for post-conviction review, execution of the sentence shall be stayed until disposition of post-conviction proceedings.

(ii) Upon appointment of counsel, or the determination that the petitioner is represented by private counsel the petitioner's prior trial and appellate counsel shall make available to the petitioner's post-conviction counsel their complete files relating to the conviction and sentence. The State, to the extent allowed by law, shall make available to post-conviction counsel the complete files of all law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies involved in the investigation of the crimes committed and the prosecution of the petitioner. If the State has a reasonable belief that allowing inspection of any portion of the files by post-conviction counsel for the petitioner would not be in the interest of justice, the State may submit for inspection by the convicting court those portions of the files so identified. If upon examination of the files, the court finds that such portions of the files could not assist the capital petitioner in investigating, preparing, or presenting a motion for post-conviction relief, the court in its discretion may allow the State to withhold that portion of the files. Discovery and compulsory process may be allowed the petitioner from and after the appointment of post-conviction counsel or the determination that the petitioner is represented by private counselor or is proceeding pro se, but only upon motion indicating the purpose of such discovery and that such discovery is not frivolous and is likely to be helpful in the investigation, preparation or presentation of specific issues which the petitioner in good faith believes to be in question and proper for post-conviction relief, and order entered in the sound discretion of the court. Upon determination that the petitioner has elected to proceed pro se, such files and discovery shall be made available as provided in subsection (2)(iii) above.

(5) Proceedings in the Supreme Court on Application for Leave to Seek Relief in the Convicting Court.

(i) An application for leave to file a motion for post-conviction relief shall be filed in the Supreme Court not later than one hundred eighty (180) days after counsel is appointed or sixty (60) days following denial of rehearing on the direct appeal of the conviction and sentence, whichever is later. An application which is filed after such date is presumed untimely unless the petitioner establishes good cause by showing particularized justifying circumstances. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a petitioner may not establish good cause for untimely filing of an application filed later than ninety-one (91) days after the filing due date hereunder. The failure to file an application within the time allowed hereunder constitutes a waiver of all grounds for relief, excepting from such waiver only those matters which are excepting from res judicata or successive writ bar identified in Section 99-39-27(9).

(ii) The State shall file a response to the application for leave to file a motion for post-conviction relief not later than thirty (30) days following the date the State receives notice of filing of the application. The State may request additional time upon particularized justifying circumstances. The petitioner may file a rebuttal to the State's response within fifteen (15) days following the date the petitioner receives notice of filing of the response. The petitioner may request additional time for rebuttal upon particularized justifying circumstances.

(6) Proceedings in the Convicting Court.

In the event that the application is granted, the Supreme Court shall issue such scheduling orders as it deems appropriate and shall during proceedings in the convicting court monitor such proceedings in order to assure compliance with filing and decision periods established in this section or by order. Such scheduling orders shall require (1) the filing of the motion for post-conviction relief within thirty (30) days following the entry of the order, and, if an evidentiary hearing is to be granted, such hearing to be conducted not more than one hundred eighty (180) days following the filing of the motion for post-conviction relief. The scheduling order shall, in any event, require disposition of all proceedings in the convicting court within two hundred seventy (270) days following the filing of the motion for post-conviction relief. The preparation of the transcript and record of proceedings shall take precedence over all other duties of the court reporter assigned to the post-conviction proceedings in the convicting court, and in any event, such record shall be transcribed within thirty (30) days following the conclusion of such proceedings unless additional time shall be allowed by the Supreme Court.

(7) To the extent that the procedures set out in this rule may conflict with any other rule of procedure or practice, the procedures set out herein shall control in post-conviction proceedings on behalf of petitioners under a sentence of death.

(8) Appeals from the judgments entered under this rule shall proceed as in other appeals from post-conviction decisions of the convicting courts and in accordance with rules established by the Supreme Court.

(9) If after an application for leave to file a motion for post-conviction relief is filed, the petitioner is denied post-conviction relief in this Court, or is denied such relief in the convicting court after grant of an application for leave to file for post-conviction relief in the convicting court and the Supreme Court affirms such denial by the trial court, an attorney, whether appointed under this section or privately retained, shall not later than fifteen (15) days after such denial becomes final in the Supreme Court, move to be appointed as counsel in federal habeas review under 21 U.S.C. Section 848(q) or equivalent provision or, if necessary, move for the appointment of other counsel under 21 U.S.C. Section 848(q) or equivalent provision.

(d) Standards and Qualifications for Attorneys Appointed or Retained to Represent Those Under Sentence of Death in Post-conviction Proceedings.

Counsel representing those under a sentence of death seeking post-conviction relief shall,

(1) Be admitted to practice law in Mississippi, being a member in good standing of the Bar for at least five years immediately preceding the appointment, or admitted pro hac vice pursuant to order entered under M.R.A.P. 46 and being a member in good standing of that attorney's home jurisdiction for a like period immediately preceding the appointment,

(2) Be admitted to practice in the federal courts of Mississippi and before the Fifth Circuit, or, in the case of attorneys appearing pro hac vice, admitted to the federal district courts and the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction in their home areas,

(3) Have practiced in the area of state criminal appeals or post-conviction proceedings for three years immediately preceding appointment,

(4) Have not previously represented the capital petitioner in the case either in the trial court or in the direct appeal, unless the petitioner and counsel expressly request continued representation and waive all potential issues that are foreclosed by continued representation, and

(5) Have within five years immediately preceding the appointment been counsel in an appeal or post-conviction proceeding in a case in which a death sentence was imposed, and have prior experience as counsel in the appeal of at least three felony convictions and at least one post-conviction proceeding; or, in the alternative, have within such period been counsel in the appeal of at least six felony convictions, at least two of which were appeals from murder convictions, and counsel in at least two post-conviction proceedings.

_____ Provided, however, under exceptional circumstances, and with the consent of the Supreme Court, an attorney may be appointed who does not meet the stated qualifications upon a showing that the attorney's experience, stature and record enable the Court to conclude that the attorney's ability significantly exceeds the standards set forth in the rule.

(e) Education and Training of Attorneys Appointed or Retained to Represent Those Under Sentence of Death in Post-conviction Proceedings. Effective July 31, 2000, an attorney serving as post-conviction counsel in a case wherein the petitioner is under a sentence of death shall have within one year prior to his appointment or employment successfully completed twelve hours training or educational programs in the area of capital defense through a program accredited by the Mississippi Commission on Continuing Legal Education or by the American Bar Association. (Adopted August 21, 1996; amended June 24, 1999 by order entered that date; amended effective July 27, 2000; amended effective February 10, 2005 to specify that post-conviction issues are to be raised on direct appeal only when they are apparent on the record; amended effective May 31, 2007, to provide for sanctions.)

Editor's Note — By order dated September 17, 1999, the Supreme Court of Mississippi ordered that, until further order of the Court, the appointment and compensation of counsel in post-conviction proceedings for persons under sentence of death and the allowance of litigation expenses shall be provided in accordance with the following guidelines and considerations.

1. A single attorney can be expected to represent a party seeking post-conviction relief in death sentence cases. However, upon motion, the trial court may make a determination as to whether two attorneys are appropriate, due to unusual circumstances or the complexity of the proceeding, and, if so, order the appointment of two attorneys.

2. In determining compensation for counsel appointed in such matters the trial court shall, in the absence of other applicable statutory or rule provision, consider the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-15-17 providing for compensation of trial and appellate counsel in death penalty cases and guidance found in Wilson v. State, 574 So. 2d 1338 (Miss. 1990). The trial court may retain jurisdiction of such question in order to reconsider and adjust compensation of counsel in the light of statutory or rule provision for compensation of death penalty post-conviction counsel as may be enacted or adopted during the pendency of the proceeding.

3. Prior to the approval of expenses for litigation, the defendant shall present to the trial court, with notice to the State and an opportunity for the State to be heard, a request estimating the amount of such expenses as will be necessary and appropriate in the matter, and the court will determine and allow such expenses as are justified upon hearing of the request for expenses. In requesting such expenses, the defendant shall make a preliminary showing that such expenses are necessary to the presentation of his case and that they relate to positions which may reasonably be expected to be beneficial. To the extent that the court may find that the disclosure of identity of experts or other factual matters may hinder a fair preparation of the defendant's case, the disclosure thereof may be presented in camera without disclosure to the State. All orders initially allowing litigation expenses shall be subject to review and reconsideration from time to time as the court may find necessary, and payment under such orders will be approved only upon the submission of specific detailed invoices and review by the court. Should the court find that such invoices contain information which if disclosed to the State would unfairly disclose confidential information detrimental to the defendant's fair presentation of his case, the court shall consider those portions in camera without disclosure to the State.

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 22 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 22. 644-647 So.2d LVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

COMMENT

Rule 22 incorporates the comprehensive procedure reflected in the Mississippi Uniform Post-Conviction Collateral Relief Act, codified at Section 99-39-1, et seq. of the Mississippi Code. Passed in 1984, the Act requires that when a prisoner's conviction and sentence have been appealed to the Supreme Court, and the appeal is either affirmed or dismissed, the prisoner is to seek leave from that Court before filing a motion for post-conviction collateral relief in the trial court, Section 99-39-7. The motion for leave is governed by Section 99-39-27, and the provisions of these rules that are consistent with that statute. See, e.g., Rules 25, filing and service; 26, computation and extension of time; 27, motions; 28(h), length of briefs; 31(c), number of briefs.

Rule 22(b) allows the appellant to raise post-conviction issues on direct appeal where the issues are fully apparent from the record of the trial, and failure to raise such issues constitutes a waiver. Under this provision, issues such as claims of ineffective assistance of counsel for failure to object to evidence offered by the state or to argument by the state must be raised on direct appeal. Other post-conviction issues which cannot be raised at the time of appeal because they involve actions or inaction outside the record are not waived since they cannot practically be raised without further development or investigation.

If leave to proceed in the trial court is granted, and proceedings take place there pursuant to §§ 99-39-9 to 99-39-23, an appeal from the trial court's decision is governed by these rules except as otherwise stated in § 99-39-25, which makes specific provision for stays or bail pending such an appeal. Statutory provisions are subject to the requirements of Miss. Const. of 1890, art. 3, § 21.

Following the adoption of new legislation in 2000, the rule was further amended to adopt special procedures governing proceedings on applications for leave to file in the trial court and motions for post-conviction relief in the cases of parties under sentence of death. These amendments are designed to implement the legislation, adopted as H.B. 1228 [Laws, 2000, ch. 569] and signed by the Governor on May 22, 2000, effective on July 1, 2000.

[Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended effective January 1, 1999; June 24, 1999; amended effective July 27, 2000; amended effective February 10, 2005; amended effective August 2, 2012.]

Amendments to rule.

State was not entitled to avail itself of the opt-in structure provided in the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2261, thus reducing the one year limitations period to 180 days for a death row inmate, because it offered no evidence that it had complied with the opt-in structure statutory requirements; mere passage of the Mississippi Capital Post-Conviction Counsel Act, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-101 et seq., and promulgation of subsections (d) and (e) to Miss. R. App. P. 22 was not sufficient. Grayson v. Epps, 338 F. Supp. 2d 699 (S.D. Miss. 2004).

To the extent that the 2000 amendments to the rule were remedial, they applied to cases pending at the time of their adoption. Russell v. State, 819 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2001).

Construction.

Second sentence of Miss. R. App. P. 22(b) intentionally serves a dual purpose; under judicial-economy considerations, a reviewing court presumes that new eyes on appeal, having thoroughly reviewed the trial court proceedings, will know whether or not certain claims, such as those charging ineffective trial assistance, are meritorious. Thus, if an issue or claim is ripe and based on matters fully enveloped within the record, it should be brought during direct appeal pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 22(b) to avoid the risk of being deemed waived. Archer v. State, 986 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2008).

Individual's claim that Miss. R. App. P. 22(c) violated his federal and state constitutional rights lacked merit where his mental retardation and ineffective assistance of trial counsel claims were considered on direct appeal and the appellate court had allowed consideration of extraneous material over the state's objections. Branch v. State, 961 So. 2d 659 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 1150, 128 S. Ct. 1084, 169 L. Ed. 2d 824,

Having raised the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel with different counsel on direct appeal then he had during his trial, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 22, defendant preserved his right to raise the issue, supported by affidavits, in future post-conviction relief proceedings. Havard v. State, 928 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1119, 127 S. Ct. 931, 166 L. Ed. 2d 716, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 153, 75 U.S.L.W. 3350 (2007).

Although defendant's case was a direct appeal, he was represented by counsel who did not represent him in the trial court; thus, defendant had to raise his mental retardation and ineffective assistance of counsel issues in his direct appeal or be barred from doing so in subsequent appeals. Therefore, defendant was permitted to proceed with those issues. Branch v. State, 882 So. 2d 36 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1594, 161 L. Ed. 2d 282 (2005).

The rule did not cut off petitioner's ultimate right to file his post-conviction petition within the one-year limitation set by Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5(2). Puckett v. State, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 267 (Miss. Aug. 29, 2002), opinion withdrawn by 2002 Miss. LEXIS 429 (Miss. Dec. 12, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 834 So. 2d 676, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 389 (Miss. 2002).

Discovery.

Post-conviction relief was denied based on defendant's assertion that he was not allowed to depose certain witnesses; he did not show that it was not frivolous, and it was not likely to help his petition for post-conviction relief. Howard v. State, 945 So. 2d 326 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 829, 128 S. Ct. 49, 169 L. Ed. 2d 43, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 9278, 76 U.S.L.W. 3157 (2007).

The defendant was entitled to discovery from the state before filing his application for post-conviction relief since such an application must contain specific facts and be accompanied by supporting documentation in order to stand up to judicial review. Russell v. State, 819 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2001).

The excessive use of ex parte proceedings on discovery is improper as the state is entitled to resist unwarranted discovery as well as unnecessary awards of investigative expenses. Russell v. State, 819 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2001).

Ineffective assistance of counsel.

Miss. R. App. P. 22(b) provided the court the authority to address an ineffective assistance of counsel claim on direct appeal where the facts were apparent in the trial record; however, there were times in which there was not enough evidence in the trial record for the court to adequately address the issue, and under that circumstance, the appropriate procedure was to deny relief, preserving the defendant's right to argue the issue through a petition for post-conviction relief. In defendant's case there was not enough evidence in the trial record for the court to address defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and therefore, the appellate court denied relief without prejudice to defendant's right to raise that argument in a timely filed motion for post-conviction relief, if he so chose. Miller v. State, 18 So. 3d 898 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Because it was not clear what subsequent developments, if any, defendant's counsel might have relied upon in a motion for new trial, the facts relating to the issue were not fully apparent from the record; the appellate court therefore declined to address the issue of ineffective counsel on direct appeal. Pittman v. State, 42 So. 3d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 42 So. 3d 24, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 453 (Miss. 2010).

Appellate court noted that there could be several reasonable explanations for why defense counsel never revisited the intruder theory, including the fact that defendant did not take the stand; because this issue involved questions of inaction by trial counsel and would require information outside the record, it could not properly be addressed and appropriately would be raised in post-conviction-relief proceedings. Neal v. State, 15 So. 3d 388 (Miss. 2009).

Self-ineffectiveness claim is absolutely inappropriate and must not bepermitted under Miss. R. App. P. 22(b); in the event a reviewing court findsitself presented with a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel asserted bythe very counsel claimed to have been ineffective, it should not address andrule upon the matter during a direct appeal, no matter how clearly the recordindicates baselessness. The only means by which a reviewing court adequatelycan ensure that a criminal defendant represented on appeal by his or her trial counsel has the opportunity at least to fully raise an ineffectiveness claim isvia a post-conviction proceeding. Archer v. State, 986 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2008).

Where defendant's appellate counsel assisted defendant's lead counsel at trial, appellate counsel's participation in the defense at trial, regardlessof his role, by imputation ascribed any potential claim of deficient and prejudicial trial performance unto himself as well and consequently constituted an impermissible self-ineffectiveness claim. Archer v. State, 986 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 2008).

Right to counsel.

Where petitioner state death row inmate argued his due process rights were violated in that counsel was appointed to represent him at the state post-conviction collateral relief stage under Miss. Code Ann. §§ 99-39-103, 99-39-107, but the representation, owing to systemic and other flaws, was completely deficient under Miss. App. R. 22, that argument was rejected for purposes of habeas relief because even with 28 U.S.C.S. § 2261, there was no constitutional right to counsel beyond the direct appeal and ineffectiveness of post-conviction counsel could not be the grounds for habeas relief. Stevens v. Epps, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69564 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 15, 2008), affirmed by 618 F.3d 489, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 18696 (5th Cir. Miss. 2010).

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Rule 23. Call and order of docket.

(a) Civil cases. Except as may be provided by special order, all civil cases will be submitted in the order in which they stand on the docket.

(b) Criminal cases. Criminal cases may be set for call on any day when the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals is sitting, and in such numbers as it may designate.

(c) Oral argument. All cases, civil and criminal, where oral argument is not granted, will be submitted when they are reached on the docket, without the necessity of the cases being called and without notice to the lawyers or litigants.

(d) Decisions. The minutes of the Supreme Court shall be signed and announcement of decisions shall be made on each Thursday when the Court is sitting. The minutes of the Court of Appeals shall be signed and announcement of decisions shall be made monthly or more often as the Court of Appeals deems necessary.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 23 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 23, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LVII-LVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 23 follows the longstanding practices of the Supreme Court as to the order and call of the docket. A civil case may be expedited only by special order, while expedition in hearing a criminal case requires no such order. Normally, upon motion, the Supreme Court will enter an order expediting a case where preference is granted by statute. The statutes grant preference in certain civil cases, including quo warranto actions, actions of mandamus where the public interest is concerned, and cases involving taxes claimed by the state, county or municipality, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-3-3 (1972); in challenges to removal elections, Miss. Code Ann. § 25-5-35 (1991); and in appeals from Youth Court, Miss. Code Ann. § 43-21-651 (1972). Also by statute, cases in which the defendant has received a death sentence are preference cases. Miss. Code Ann. § 9-3-21 (1991). Rule 5(d) authorizes the Supreme Court to grant a preference in hearing interlocutory appeals and Rule 21 grants a preference in handling petitions for extraordinary writs. Rule 34 governs practice in granting and holding oral argument.

Rule 24. Court sitting in panels.

(a) Panel assignments: the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court will sit in panels of three justices. The Chief Justice shall preside over Panel A; the senior Presiding Justice shall preside over Panel B; and the junior Presiding Justice shall preside over Panel C. The two justices of each panel, other than the justices who preside, shall be rotated as often as administratively practical. Substitutions may be made as circumstances may require. Each panel and each justice shall, as far as practical, be assigned the same work load.

(b) Consideration by full court: the Supreme Court. In the event the justices composing any panel shall differ as to the judgment to be rendered in any cause, or in the event any justice of any panel shall certify that in his opinion any decision already made or about to be made by any panel of the Court is in conflict with any prior decision of the full Court, or of any panel, or that the cause is of such importance that it should be considered by the full Court, the cause shall then be considered and adjudged by the full Court.

(c) Consideration by panels or full court: Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals may sit en banc or may sit in panels of no fewer than three judges of the Court of Appeals.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 24 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 24, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LVIII-LIX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 24 continues the established framework as to the panels in which the Supreme Court sits and its practice in hearing cases en banc.

Rule 25. Filing and service.

(a) Filing. Papers required or permitted to be filed shall be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court and no motion, brief, motion for rehearing or other document, or any copy shall be sent by an attorney directly to any individual justice except as provided in Rule 8(c). Filing may be accomplished by mail addressed to the clerk, but filing shall not be timely unless the papers are received by the clerk within the time fixed for filing, except that briefs and record excerpts shall be deemed filed on the day of mailing by first class mail with postage prepaid, or any more expeditious form of delivery. For briefs and record excerpts to be deemed filed on the day of mailing, they must be accompanied by a certificate signed by the person who will actually mail the brief or record excerpt. The certificate shall specify the document filed, the number of copies filed, and the date the paper will be deposited in the United States mail addressed to the clerk. Papers received by the clerk of the Supreme Court without a certificate of filing shall be deemed filed when received by that clerk.

Filing of unopposed procedural and emergency relief motions may be accomplished by facsimile (fax) transmission. A document longer than five pages shall not be filed without prior leave of the clerk.

Each facsimile transmission shall be accompanied by a facsimile cover page which states the date of the transmission, the name and telephone number of the person transmitting the document, the name and facsimile telephone number of the person to whom the document is being transmitted, the docket number and style of the case in which the document is to be filed, the style of the document being filed, and the number of pages being transmitted, excluding the cover page.

A facsimile fee shall be required for filing a document by facsimile transmission.

Only one copy of the document shall be transmitted; the clerk will provide any additional copies required by these rules or an order of the appropriate appellate court, and the cost of copying shall be assessed against the filing party. Papers filed by facsimile transmission shall be deemed filed when the official date and time stamp of the clerk is affixed to the transmission. The facsimile signature shall be deemed an original signature. The filing party shall retain possession of the original executed document for submission to the Court if there is a dispute over authenticity.

A paper may be filed by facsimile transmission only if it can be served on opposing counsel by facsimile transmission. Service of a paper by facsimile transmission is complete when the person transmitting the paper receives confirmation of receipt of the transmission by the facsimile machine of the person served.

The proof of service for a paper served by facsimile transmission shall state the facsimile telephone number of the person to whom the paper was transmitted. A copy of the transmission report to opposing counsel shall be attached to the transmitted document. The person transmitting the document shall further certify that the facsimile fee and any required filing fee have been mailed to the clerk contemporaneously with the facsimile transmission.

Failure to comply with the facsimile requirements of this rule may result in the imposition of sanctions; the document transmitted may be stricken or deemed not filed, or other appropriate action may be taken.

Except as provided above, when these rules or an order of an appellate court requires multiple copies of a document to be filed, filing shall not be deemed complete until all required copies are filed. If a motion is filed with a single justice as permitted by Rule 8, the justice may permit the motion to be filed with that justice, in which event the justice shall note on the motion the date of filing and shall forward the motion to the clerk of the Supreme Court.

(b) Service of all papers required. Copies of all papers filed by any party and not required by these rules to be served by the clerk shall, at or before the time of filing, be served by a party or person acting for that party on all other parties to the appeal. Service on a party represented by counsel shall be made on counsel. In all cases a copy of any brief on the merits shall be served on the judge who presided at the trial and, in criminal cases, with the office of the District Attorney.

(c) Manner of service. Service may be personal or by mail or, in limited instances, by facsimile transmission. Personal service includes delivery of the copy to a clerk or other responsible person at the office of counsel. Service by mail is complete on mailing. A paper may be served by facsimile transmission only if it can be filed by facsimile transmission and only if the person to be served is an attorney who has consented to receive facsimile transmissions. An attorney may consent by including the attorney's facsimile telephone number in the letterhead or signature/address block of a paper the attorney files in the case. Consent may be rescinded by serving and filing notice to the other parties to the appeal or review and to the clerk of the Supreme Court. Service of a paper by facsimile transmission is complete when the person transmitting the paper receives confirmation of receipt of the transmission by the facsimile machine of the person served.

(d) Proof of service. Papers presented for filing shall contain an acknowledgment of service by the person served or proof of service in the form of a statement of the date and manner of service and of the names of the persons served, certified by the person who made service. Proof of service may appear on or be affixed to the papers filed. The clerk may permit papers to be filed without acknowledgment or proof of service but shall require such to be filed promptly. The proof of service for a paper served by facsimile transmission shall state the facsimile telephone number of the person to whom the paper was transmitted. (Amended June 21, 1996; amended effective June 27, 2002.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Notice of appeal.

Jurisdiction was appropriate in an action involving contempt and the modification of child support because the mother's notice of appeal was not filed on the date of mailing but upon the date it was actually received by the clerk of the trial court at which time the clerk had already received and stamped her motion for reconsideration. Howard v. Howard, 913 So. 2d 1030 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), remanded by 968 So. 2d 961, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 760 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 25(a) was amended to redesignate rehearing "petitions" as "motions." 673-678 So.2d XL (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 25 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 25, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 25 was further amended to provide for filing by facsimile transmission. 644-647 So.2d LIX-LXI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1998.]

COMMENT

Rule 25 is substantially patterned after Fed.R.App.P. 25. It enlarges upon former practice to provide that service by mail is complete on mailing. Filing of briefs and record excerpts is deemed to take place on the day of mailing if they are sent by first class mail with postage prepaid or any more expeditious form of delivery. Other papers are deemed filed when filed with the clerk.

Unlike the federal rule, this rule does not permit papers to be filed with a single justice as a matter of course. It restricts such filings to requests for emergency stay relief under Rule 8(c).

Rule 26. Computation and extension of time.

(a) Computation. In computing any period of time prescribed or allowed by these rules, by order of the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, or by any applicable statute, the day of the act, event, or default from which the designated period of time begins to run shall not be included. The last day of the period so computed shall be included, unless it is a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, as defined by statute, or any other day when the clerk's office is in fact closed, whether with or without legal authority, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not a Saturday, a Sunday, a legal holiday, or any other day when the clerk's office is closed. When the period of time prescribed or allowed is less than seven (7) days, intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays shall be excluded in the computation. In the event any legal holiday falls on a Sunday, the next following day shall be a legal holiday.

(b) Enlargement. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals for good cause shown may, upon motion, enlarge the time prescribed by the rules or by its order for doing any act, or may permit an act to be done after the expiration of such time, but the Supreme Court will not enlarge the time for filing notice of appeal or a petition for permission to appeal.

(c) Additional time after service by mail. Whenever a party is required or permitted to do an act within a prescribed period after service of a paper upon that party and the paper is served by mail, three (3) days shall be added to that prescribed period.

(d) Unaffected by expiration of term. The period of time provided for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding is not affected or limited by the continued existence or expiration of a term of court. The existence or expiration of a term of court in no way affects the power of either the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals to do any act consistent with these rules.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 26 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 26, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXI-LXII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 26 is patterned after Fed.R.App.P. 26 and M.R.C.P. 6. The purpose of this rule is to provide reasonably flexible, general guidelines for the measurement of time periods under these rules. Under Rule 26(b), the court is given wide discretion to enlarge the various time periods both before and after the actual termination of the allotted time, with the exception of enlarging the time for filing a notice of appeal under Rule 4, or a petition for permission to appeal under Rule 5.

Rule 26(a) incorporates legal holidays as defined by statute. See Miss. Code Ann. § 3-3-7 (1991).

Weekends.

Holidays.

Appellant's notice of appeal was dismissed as untimely; legal holiday corresponding to Washington's birthday was governed by statute, and when properly computed, time for perfecting appeal had passed. Moore v. Wax, 554 So. 2d 312 (Miss. 1989).

Late appeal.

Appellate court lacked jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order denying a motion to reconsider summary judgment because the order was not appealed within 30 days of its entry, notwithstanding that a circuit court clerk had failed to notify the parties of the order as required by Miss. R. Civ. P. 77(d). Payne v. Magnolia Healthcare, Inc., 984 So. 2d 290 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 291 (Miss. June 12, 2008).

Pursuant to the time periods for filing an appeal under Miss. R. App.P. 4(a) and 26(a), a terminated department of corrections employee's appeal of the circuit court's upholding of his termination was filed late and, because the circuit court had not granted his motion for a late appeal, the Supreme court of Mississippi was without jurisdiction over the instant appeal, and the supreme court could not extend the time for filing. Redmond v. Miss. Dep't of Corr., 910 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Weekends.

Court did not err when it did not strike a brief as being untimely filed because: (1) the brief was filed on October 17, 2006, and the party's motion for extension of time was filed on November 16, 2006; (2) on February 14, 2007, the court granted twenty more days to file the brief, and the party filed its brief on March 6, 2007; (3) the party filed its motion for an extension of time within the prescribed 30-day time limit; and (4) the court granted an extension through March 6, 2007, because March 5, 2007, was a Sunday. Franklin v. BSL, Inc., 987 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where the trial court entered a final judgment in a child custody case on September 8, 2006, appellant had thirty days to file her notice of appeal; since the thirtieth day was a Sunday, appellant had until Monday, October 9, to file her notice of appeal under Miss. R. App. P. 26. The notice of appeal filed on Tuesday, October 10, 2006 was untimely. Dudley v. Harris, 979 So. 2d 692 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Rule 27. Motions.

(a) Content of motions; response. Unless another form is elsewhere prescribed by these rules, an application for an order or other relief shall be made by filing a motion for such order or relief with proof of service on all other parties. The motion shall contain or be accompanied by any matter required by a specific provision of these rules governing such a motion, shall state with particularity the grounds on which it is based, and shall set forth the order or relief sought. If a motion is supported by briefs, affidavits, or other papers, they shall be served and filed with the motion. Any party may file a response in opposition to a motion other than one for a procedural order within seven (7) days after service of the motion, but motions authorized by Rules 8, 9, and 41 may be acted upon after reasonable notice, and the court may shorten or extend the time for responding to any motion.

(b) Determination of motions for procedural relief. Notwithstanding the provisions of Rule 27(a) as to motions generally, motions for procedural relief may be acted upon at any time without awaiting a response. When unopposed, motions for specified types of procedural orders may be disposed of by the clerk of the Supreme Court. The clerk may rule on motions:

(1) for enlargement of time permitted by these rules for periods not to exceed a total of 60 days,

(2) to make corrections in briefs or pleadings filed at the request of counsel filing the brief or pleading,

(3) to withdraw as counsel and/or substitute appearance of counsel, except in appeals from the imposition of a sentence of death,

(4) to voluntarily dismiss appeals where sought by the appellant or the cross-appellant, unless the case has been submitted to the Court for decision,

(5) to increase the page limit for briefs up to 75 pages, or up to 125 pages in appeals from the imposition of a sentence of death,

(6) to supplement the record where documents which were included in the designation of, yet omitted from, the record are certified according to Rule 11 and attached to the motion,

(7) to appear pro hac vice,

(8) to suspend record preparation or briefing, and

(9) such other motions as the Court may from time to time direct.

Any party adversely affected by such action may by motion to the appropriate appellate court request reconsideration, vacation or modification of such action by the clerk.

(c) Power of a single justice to entertain motions. In addition to the authority expressly conferred by these rules or by law, a single justice of the Supreme Court or a single judge of the Court of Appeals may entertain and may grant or deny any request for relief which, under these rules, may properly be sought by motion, except that when a motion is contested a single justice or judge may not dismiss or otherwise determine an appeal or other proceedings. A single justice or judge may rule on opposed motions otherwise subject to action by the clerk under Rule 27(b).

(d) Form of papers; number of copies. All papers relating to motions shall be typewritten or printed and all exhibits and other attachments shall be securely bound. An original and four (4) copies shall be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may require that additional copies be furnished.

(e) Oral argument not permitted. Unless otherwise ordered by the court to which the cases is assigned, no motion shall be orally argued. If the appropriate court requests oral argument, the matter will be heard at such time as the court may designate with reasonable notice to the parties.

(f) Motions Proposing Adoption, Repeal, or Amendment of Rules of Court and Rules Governing the Practice of Law. All applications concerning the adoption, repeal, or amendment of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules of Evidence, Rules of Appellate Procedure, Uniform Circuit and County Court Rules, Uniform Chancery Court Rules, Uniform Rules of Procedure for Justice Court, Code of Judicial Conduct, Rules of the Commission on Judicial Performance, Rules and Regulations for Mandatory Continuing Judicial Education, Rules of Professional Conduct, Rules of Discipline for the Mississippi Bar, Rules and Regulations for Mandatory Continuing Legal Education, Rules Governing Admission to the Mississippi Bar, and all other rules affecting the practice of law and the administration of the courts in Mississippi shall be filed in the Supreme Court. Such motions shall comply with all other requirements of the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure; specifically, four (4) copies shall be filed with the original, but the Supreme Court may require that additional copies be furnished. Such motions should include the text of the proposed new rule or of the rule to be amended with deletions indicated by strikeouts and additions shown underlined. The motions shall also be accompanied by a copy of the motion and of the proposed rule or rule amendment in an electronically formatted medium (such as USB Flash Drive or CD-ROM). No notice or response to such motion shall be required, except as may be required by the Court, but the Court may in its discretion submit any rules motion to the Supreme Court Rules Advisory Committee, or any other source, for review and comment. Upon receipt of requests or petitions for adoption or amendment of rules the Court may publish the proposal or request on the Supreme Court's Internet site, and invite comment thereon. No action shall be taken by the Supreme Court on such proposal or request for a period of thirty (30) days following the commencement of such publication, and all comments received shall be considered; however, the Court may dispense with such publication and comment in the event that the Court deems the urgency of the proposal or request prohibitive to the delay needed for publication and comment.

(g) Motions Regarding the Setting of Term and Assigning of Causes in the Trial Courts. Orders entered and other actions in the chancery and circuit courts setting terms of court and assigning causes and dockets under Miss.

Code Ann. § 9-5-3 and § 9-7-3 are subject to review by the Supreme Court on petition of any judge of the district wherein such orders have been entered or such action has been taken. The setting of terms and assigning of causes and dockets in the chancery and circuit courts shall be done fairly considering the relative work loads of the judges and the right of litigants within the district to fair and reasonable access to all of the judicial officers as well as reasonable accommodation of the requests and needs of all judges within the district. Further, the assignment of cases and dockets shall be done through a systematic plan recognizing the criteria set out herein.

(h) Reconsideration on motions. Motions for reconsideration, vacation or modification of rulings of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals on motions are generally not allowed. However motions for reconsideration of rulings on motions and petitions may be filed within 14 days after a decision is handed down on the motion to be reconsidered as to:

(1) non-voluntary dismissal of pending appeals under rule 2(a);

(2) procedural dispositions by the Clerk of the Court under Rule 27(b);

(3) petitions for interlocutory appeal under Rule 5;

(4) motions for stay and supersedeas under Rule 8;

(5) petitions for writ of mandamus, prohibition or extraordinary writs under Rule 21;

(6) motions to amend, correct or clarify orders, opinions, and mandates;

(7) motions for recusal of justices or judges or review of ruling of trial judges on recusal under M.R.A.P. 48B or 48C; and

(8) in extraordinary cases, by suspension of the rules for good cause shown under Rule 2(c). (Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended October 15, 1998, effective from and after January 1, 1999; amended July 1, 1999; amended effective August 26, 1999; amended effective November 2, 2000; amended effective May 29, 2003 to provide for reconsideration of certain specific types of motions and petitions, if filed within 14 days following the ruling for which reconsideration is sought; amended effective September 30, 2004 to recognize that the Court may from time to time allow the clerk to rule on specified motions; amended March 27, 2008, to expand the provision under which the Court may post proposals for public comment; amended effective July 1, 2010.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 27, 2002, Rule 27(b) was amended to delete motions 'to stay issuance of mandate pursuant to Rule 41' from the list of motions on which the clerk may rule. 819-821 So.2d XX (West Miss.Cases 2002).

Effective November 2, 2000, a new Rule 27(g) was adopted. 770-772 So.2d XVII (West Miss.Cases 2000).

Effective August 26, 1999, Rule 27(f) and the Comment were amended to provide for publication of proposals on the Supreme Court's Internet site and an attendant comment period. 736-737 So.2d XXI (West Miss.Cases 1999).

Effective June 24, 1999, Rules 27(b) and (g) were amended to effect editorial changes. 735 So.2d XIX (West Miss.Cases 1999).

Effective January 1, 1999, Rule 27(b) was amended to provide that the clerk may rule on motions to withdraw as counsel in non-capital cases, to voluntarily dismiss appeals, to obtain additional pages, to supplement the record, to appear pro hac vice, and to suspend the briefing schedule. 717-722 So.2d XXVII (West Miss.Cases 1998).

Effective January 1, 1999, Rule 27(g) was adopted and corresponding changes were made to Rule 27(c) and the Comment. 717-722 So.2d XXVII (West Miss.Cases 1998).

Effective June 21, 1996, following the redesignation of rehearing "petitions" as "motions," the Comment to Rule 27 was amended to provide that motions for rehearing cannot be considered by a single justice. 673-678 So.2d XLI (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 27 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 27, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 27 was further amended by adding subsection (f) concerning motions pertaining to Rules of Court. 644-647 So.2d LXII-LXIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1998.]

COMMENT

Rule 27 is based on Fed.R.App.P. 27 as modified by 5th Cir.R. 27.

Many motions seek relief of a sort which is ordinarily unopposed, or which is granted as of course. The provision of subdivision (a), which permits any party to file a response in opposition to a motion within seven days after its service, assumes that the motion is one of substance which ought not be acted upon without affording affected parties an opportunity to reply. A motion to dismiss or otherwise determine an appeal is clearly such a motion. Motions authorized by Rules 8, 9, and 41 are likewise motions of substance, but, in the nature of the relief sought, to afford an adversary an automatic delay of at least seven days is undesirable; thus, such motions may be acted upon after notice which is reasonable under the circumstances.

The term "motions for procedural orders" is used in subdivision (b) to describe motions which do not substantially affect the rights of the parties or the ultimate disposition of the appeal (other than motions for voluntary dismissal). To prevent delay in the disposition of such motions, subdivision (b) provides that they may be acted upon immediately without awaiting a response. The rule also gives the clerk authority to dispose of certain procedural motions: An enlargement of time for filing a notice of appeal is not permitted by these rules and may not be granted by the clerk.

Subdivision (c) empowers a single justice to act upon virtually all requests for intermediate relief which may be made during the course of an appeal or other proceeding. By its terms, the justice may entertain and act upon any motion, other than a contested motion to dismiss or a contested motion that will otherwise determine an appeal or other proceeding.

Examples of the power conferred on a single justice by Rule 27(c) are: to determine any matter which, if unopposed, may be decided by the clerk under subdivision (b); to grant enlargements of time for any period beyond the 60 days granted by the clerk, except that the time period for filing a notice of appeal may not be extended, see Rules 2(c), 26(b); to permit an appeal in forma pauperis and to appoint counsel under Rule 6; to consider release in criminal cases under Rule 9; to expedite or to consolidate appeals under Rule 23; to permit the filing of further reply or supplemental briefs under Rule 28(d) or briefs of extraordinary length under Rule 28(h); to grant leave to file an amicus brief under Rule 29; to postpone oral argument under Rule 34(a) or grant additional time for oral argument under Rule 34(b); or to substitute parties under Rule 43.

Under Rule 27(c), a single justice may not act upon requests for permission to appeal under Rule 5, or for mandamus or other extraordinary writs under Rule 21, other than for stays or injunctions pending appeal, authority to grant which is "expressly conferred by these rules" on a single justice under certain circumstances under Rule 8.

Subdivision (f) sets out procedures to be followed in the adoption and amendment of rules governing practice and procedures in the courts and those specific to the practice of law. The provision of the subdivision providing for publication on the Internet and comment supercedes Misc. Order 2056 which formerly required Bar related petitions to be published in the Mississippi Lawyer with a ninety day comment period. Order 2056 was vacated by the order adoption of this provision for subdivision (f).

Rule 27(h) motions for reconsideration of the court's ruling on motions or petitions are to be distinguished from Rule 40 motions for rehearing on opinions. Motions for clarification and correction of opinions and mandates which address issues other than specific errors of law or fact which would be determinative of the decision announced in the opinion should also be filed in accordance with the procedures set out in Rule 27, not those of Rule 40.

Rule 27(h) motions for reconsideration of the court's rulings on motions are governed by and subject to the procedures set out in Rule 27. Generally, motions are decided by orders of the appellate courts.

Motions for rehearing are filed under Rule 40 and are appropriate only where an opinion has issued which the movant believes to contain specific errors of law or fact.

Reconsideration of the court's ruling on a motion or petition is allowed only as to motions and petitions specified in Rule 27(h).

Rehearing on or reconsideration of decisions on motions or petitions is allowed only as to procedural motions granted or denied in the first instance by the clerk of the Supreme Court, or, in extraordinary circumstances, where the court suspends the rules under the provisions of Rule 2(c) or determines to reconsider or rehear on the court's own motion.

A brief may be filed in support of a motion and such a brief should be filed unless the motion seeks a routine procedural order. The rule does not, however, require the filing of a brief with every motion.

Rule 27(h) motions for reconsideration of the court's ruling on motions or petitions shall, whenever possible, state with particularity specific reasons, in the opinion of the movant, the court's action should be reconsidered. The motion for reconsideration is not intended to afford an opportunity for a mere repetition of the argument already considered by the court, but may contain such argument in support of the motion as movant desires to present. See M.R.A.P. 40(a).

[Amended June 21, 1996; October 15, 1998; amended effective January 1, 1999; amended effective August 26, 1999; amended effective May 29, 2003; amended May 18, 2006; amended effective August 2, 2012.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Application denied.
Fugitive dismissal rule.
Motion improperly dismissed.

Application denied.

After defendant's death penalty sentence was vacated and remanded for resentencing, a trial court properly determined that it did not have discretion to consider defendant's ex post facto claim because the execution of orders issued by the supreme court was a purely ministerial act, and lower courts had no authority to alter or amend them; instead, defendant's claim should have been raised in a response to a motion to the supreme court under Miss. R. App. P. 27(a), or in the alternative in a motion for reconsideration of a motion under Miss. R. App. P. 27(h) or in a motion for rehearing under Miss. R. App. P. 40. Foster v. State, 961 So. 2d 670 (Miss. 2007).

Inmate's applications for postconviction relief and for leave to file motion to vacate death sentence were denied as the inmate had already raised the argument of the "intervening decision" via the motion for rehearing and separate motion for appointment of counsel and for litigation expenses; the inmate was essentially seeking a rehearing of that motion under the guise of a postconviction claim by combining it with a "new" claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, which was prohibited by Miss. R. App. P. 27(h). Wiley v. State, 842 So. 2d 1280 (Miss. 2003).

Fugitive dismissal rule.

Upon reconsideration of the dismissal of a mother's challenge to a chancery court order awarding custody of her children to their father, the fugitive dismissal rule was properly applied because the mother fled the jurisdiction with her children and remained at large while her appeal was pending. D.C. v. D.C., 988 So. 2d 359 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1178, 129 S. Ct. 1320, 173 L. Ed. 2d 597, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1554, 77 U.S.L.W. 3468 (2009), remanded by 13 So. 3d 269, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 270 (Miss. 2009).

Motion improperly dismissed.

Lessor's motion for reconsideration of dismissal of his appeal was improperly dismissed as untimely because there was authority for a circuit court's ruling that filing a motion for reconsideration using a county court caption rendered the motion not filed. Adams v. A & C Entm't, 6 So. 3d 1082 (Miss. 2009).

Rule 28. Briefs.

(a) Brief of the appellant. The brief of the appellant shall contain under appropriate headings and in the order here indicated:

(1) Certificate of Interested Persons. This certificate shall list all persons, associations of persons, firms, partnerships, or corporations which have an interest in the outcome of the particular case.

If a large group of persons or firms can be specified by a generic description, individual listing is not necessary.

The certificate shall be in the following form: Number and Style of Case.

The undersigned counsel of record certifies that the following listed persons have an interest in the outcome of this case. These representations are made in order that the justices of the Supreme Court and/or the judges of the Court of Appeals may evaluate possible disqualification or recusal.

(Here list names of all such persons and identify their connection and interest.)

_____

Attorney of record for

_____

Governmental parties need not supply this certificate.

(2) Tables. There shall follow a table of contents, with page references, and a table of cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities cited, with references to the pages of the brief where they are cited.

(3) Statement of Issues. A statement shall identify the issues presented for review. No separate assignment of errors shall be filed. Each issue presented for review shall be separately numbered in the statement. No issue not distinctly identified shall be argued by counsel, except upon request of the court, but the court may, at its option, notice a plain error not identified or distinctly specified.

(4) Statement of the Case. This statement shall first indicate briefly the nature of the case, the course of the proceedings, and its disposition in the court below. There shall follow the statement of facts relevant to the issues presented for review, with appropriate references to the record.

(5) Summary of the Argument. The summary, suitably paragraphed, should be a succinct, but accurate and clear, condensation of the argument actually made in the body of the brief. It should not be a mere repetition of the headings under which the argument is arranged. It should seldom exceed two (2) and never five (5) pages.

(6) Argument. The argument shall contain the contentions of appellant with respect to the issues presented, and the reasons for those contentions, with citations to the authorities, statutes, and parts of the record relied on.

(7) Conclusion. There shall be a short conclusion stating the precise relief sought.

(b) Pro Se Supplemental Brief in Criminal Appeal. An appellant in a criminal appeal may file a pro se supplemental Brief of the Appellant. This pro se brief may address issues not raised by counsel, but such issues must be based on the record. This pro se brief shall conform to the requirements of Rule 28(a), (e), (f), (h) and (l).

(c) Brief of the appellee. The brief of the appellee shall conform to the requirements of Rule 28(a) except that a statement of the issues or of the case need not be made unless the appellee is dissatisfied with the statement of the appellant.

(d) Reply brief. The appellant may file a brief in reply to the brief of the appellee, and if the appellee has cross-appealed, the appellee may file a brief in reply to the response of the appellant to the issues presented by the cross-appeal. No further briefs may be filed except with leave of the Court. All reply briefs shall contain a table of contents, with page references, and a table of cases (alphabetically arranged), statutes, and other authorities cited, with references to the pages of the reply brief where they are cited.

(e) References in briefs to parties. Counsel will be expected in their briefs and oral arguments to keep to a minimum references to parties by such designations as "appellant" and "appellee." It promotes clarity to use the designations used in the lower court or in the agency proceedings, or the actual names of the parties, or descriptive terms such as "the employee," "the injured person," "the taxpayer," or "plaintiff."

(f) References in briefs to the record and citations. All briefs shall be keyed by reference to page numbers (1) to the record excerpts filed pursuant to Rule 30 of these Rules, and (2) to the record itself.

(1) The Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals shall assign paragraph numbers to the paragraphs in all published opinions. The paragraph numbers shall begin at the first paragraph of the text of the majority opinion and shall continue sequentially throughout the majority opinion and any concurring or dissenting opinions in the order that the opinions are arranged by the Court.

(2) All Mississippi cases shall be cited to either:

(i) the Southern Reporter and, in cases decided prior to 1967, the official Mississippi Reports (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 699 So. 2d 100 (Miss. 1997); Thompson v. Clark, 251 Miss. 555, 170 So. 2d 225 (1965)); or

(ii) for cases decided from and after July 1, 1997, the case numbers as assigned by the Clerk's Office (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 95-KA-01234-SCT (Miss. 1997)).

(3) Quotations from cases and authorities appearing in the text of the brief shall be cited in one of the following ways:

(i) preceded or followed by a reference to the book and page in the Southern Reporter and/or the Mississippi Reports where the quotation appears (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 699 So. 2d 100, 102 (Miss. 1997)); or

(ii) in cases decided from and after July 1, 1997, preceded or followed by a reference to the case number assigned by the Clerk's Office and paragraph number where the quotation appears (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 95-KA-01234-SCT (¶1) (Miss. 1997)); or

(iii) in cases decided from and after July 1, 1997, preceded or followed by a reference to the book and paragraph number in the Southern Reporter where the quotation appears (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 699 So.2d 100 (¶1) (Miss. 1997)); or

(iv) in cases decided prior to July 1, 1997, preceded or followed by a reference to the case number assigned by the Clerk's Office and paragraph number where the quotation appears when the case is added to the Court's Internet web site in the new format, i.e., with paragraph numbers (e.g., Smith v. Jones, 93-CA-05678-SCT (¶1) (Miss. 1995)); or

(v) preceded or followed by a parallel citation using both the book citation and the case number citation.

(g) Reproduction of statutes, rules, regulations, etc. If determination of the issues presented requires the study of statutes, rules, or regulations, etc., they shall be reproduced in the brief or in an addendum at the end and they may be supplied to the court in pamphlet form.

(h) Length of briefs. Except by permission of the court, principal briefs shall not exceed 50 pages, and reply briefs shall not exceed 25 pages, exclusive of pages containing the statement with respect to oral argument, any certificates of counsel, the table of contents, tables of citations, and any addendum containing statutes, rules, or regulations.

(i) Briefs in cases involving cross-appeals. If a cross-appeal is filed, the party first filing a notice of appeal shall be deemed the appellant for the purposes of this rule and Rules 30 and 31, unless the parties otherwise agree or the court otherwise orders. The brief for appellee shall contain the issues involved in the appellee's appeal as well as the answer to the brief for appellant.

(j) Briefs in cases involving multiple appellants or appellees. In cases involving more than one appellant or appellee, including cases consolidated for purposes of the appeal, any number of either may join in a single brief, and any appellant or appellee may adopt by reference any part of the brief of another. Parties may similarly join in reply briefs.

(k) Citation of supplemental authorities. When pertinent and significant authorities come to the attention of counsel after the party's brief has been filed, or after oral argument or decision, the party may promptly advise the clerk of the Supreme Court, by letter with a copy to all counsel, setting forth the citations. There shall be a reference either to the page of the brief or to a point argued orally to which the citations pertain, but the letter shall, without argument, state the reasons for the supplemental citations. Any response shall be made promptly and shall be similarly limited.

(l) Disrespectful language stricken. Any brief containing language showing disrespect or contempt for the trial court will be stricken from the files, and the appropriate appellate court will take such further action as it may deem proper.

(m) Other briefs. Any brief submitted other than those listed in Rule 28(a), (b), (c), and (d) shall conform to Rules 28 (e), (f), (h), and (l). Any brief filed prior to the filing of the brief of the appellant shall contain a certificate of interested persons as required by Rule 28(a)(1). Any brief exceeding 10 pages in length shall contain tables of contents and authorities in compliance with Rule 28(a)(2).

(n) Filing of briefs on electronic media. All parties filing a brief on the merits of any case with the Clerk of the Supreme Court shall file with that brief a copy thereof in an electronically formatted medium (such as USB Flash Drive or CD-ROM), and the Clerk shall receive and file such with the papers of that case. All electronic media and electronic files stored thereon must be in an industrial standardized format with the electronic brief stored in the Adobe Portable Document Format (PDF). All electronic media shall be labeled to include the following information:

(1) the style of the case,

(2) the number of CD-ROMs, i.e., "1 of 2, 2 of 2, etc." (Amended December 28, 1995; December 22, 1997; amended effective May 27, 2004, to make filing of briefs on electronic disks mandatory; amended effective August 18, 2007; amended effective July 1, 2009; amended effective August 2, 2012 to allow pro se supplemental briefs in criminal appeals.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective December 11, 1997, Rule 28 was amended to delete various requirements regarding the form of citations. 702-705 So. 2d XLI-XLIII (West. Miss. Cases 1997).

Effective December 11, 1997, Rule 28 was amended to delete various requirements regarding the form of citations. 702-705 So. 2d XLI-XLIII (West. Miss. Cases 1997).

Effective December 28, 1995, Rule 28(m) and a new final paragraph to the Comment were added to encourage the filing of disk copies of briefs. 663-667 So. 2d XXVII (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective January 1, 1995, M.R.A.P. 28 replaced Miss. Sup. Ct. R. 28, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So. 2d LXIV-LXVII (West Miss. Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss. Sup. Ct. R. 28 was amended to delete material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice. 632-635 So. 2d LII (West Miss. Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1997; amended March 31, 1999; amended August 2, 2012.]

COMMENT

Rule 28 is based upon Fed. R. App. P. 28 and 5th Cir. R. 28.2.1, 28.2.2. If a party states issues under Rule 28(a)(3) not included in a statement required by Rule 10(b)(4), that party will bear responsibility for the cost of preparing any additional portions of the record subsequently designated by any other party in response to the statement of additional issues.

Article 3, section 26 of the Mississippi Constitution states that "[i]n all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have a right to be heard by himself or counsel, or both. . . ." Accordingly, pro se supplemental briefs are permitted under Rule 28(b). See also Lindsey v. State, 939 So. 2d 743 (Miss. 2005).

In cross-appeals, the response of the appellant to the cross-appeal is to be combined with the appellant's reply. The combined brief is treated as a principal brief under Rule 28(h) which governs page lengths.

Rule 28(f) requires parallel citations prior to 1967 because the Southern Reporter is the official reporter only for decisions published since 1966. Any party filing a brief citing an unreported decision from another court should also file a copy of the decision with the clerk of the Supreme Court.

Rule 28(f) adopts a citation standard which is in the public domain. The new citation standard is both vendor neutral and media neutral. A vendor neutral citation is one which does not contain vendor-specific information, and a media neutral citation is one which is not tied to a particular format. The citation Smith v. Jones, 699 So. 2d 100 (Miss. 1997), for example, is neither vendor neutral nor media neutral. However, the citation Smith v. Jones, 95-KA-01234-SCT (Miss. 1997) is both vendor neutral and media neutral. The basis for the adoption of a new citation standard is to allow citation of cases which appear in electronic format in addition to citation of cases which appear in print.

An original Rule 28(k) letter should be submitted with three copies. Rule 28(m) governs briefs other than briefs on the merits controlled by Rules 28(a), (b), (c), and (d).

The provisions of Rule 28(n) apply only to briefs on the merits of an appeal and not to memoranda and briefs filed in support of or in opposition to motions and petitions seeking less than relief on the merits of appeals.

Argument.

Defendant's murder conviction and life sentence were appropriate because his appellate counsel filed a Lindsey brief and met the requirements of Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(1)-(4), (7) and defendant made no effort to file an appellate brief with the court. Having reviewed the record, the appellate court agreed with defendant's counsel that there were no arguable issues for appeal. McBride v. State, 44 So. 3d 368 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 502 (Miss. 2010).

In an eminent domain case, a property owner cited many instances in which she believed the trial court erred, but the owner never asked for any specific relief regarding the errors the trial court may have committed; since no specific argument was made stating what relief the owner sought, the owner's cross-appeal was procedurally barred. Gulf South Pipeline Co., LP v. Pitre, 35 So. 3d 519 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by, remanded by 35 So. 3d 494, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 199 (Miss. 2010).

In a rape case, the State's brief was inadequate under Miss. R. App. P. 28 because it was devoid of any arguments or case law, a significant portion of the State's brief merely contained block quotations from more than four pages of the trial transcript without any explanation to the relevance of such excerpts, there was no analysis connected with the block-quoted sections of the record, and the State ended its "discussion" of each issue with same sentence. Moreover, a section of the record excerpted by the State did not correlate to any argument raised within one issue set forth in defendant's brief. McGriggs v. State, 987 So. 2d 455 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 641 (Miss. 2008).

Appellate court declined to treat counsel's appellate brief as a Lindsey brief because although counsel stated that defendant was unlikely to prevail on appeal, he did present a legal issue on which to base the appeal and then proceeded with an argument on the merits. Boykin v. State, 941 So. 2d 892 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a divorce and child custody action, the father contended that the chancellor misapplied the Albright factors, and as a result, the mother was erroneously awarded custody of the parties' daughter given the dramatic change in the daughter's appearance, behavior, and friends, an absence of supervision and guidance by the mother, and the mother's flagrant adulterous relationship. The father, however, failed to cite any authority to support his argument and the issue was procedurally barred. Sandlin v. Sandlin, 906 So. 2d 39 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in his trial for tax evasion lacked merit; defendant failed to cite any authority supporting the claim that his counsel's failure to request a change of venue demands reversal. Defendant also failed to cite any authority to support his argument that defense counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to make a challenge during jury selection. King v. State, 897 So. 2d 981 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 896 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's argument that it was inadmissible hearsay for the trial court to have allowed several of the witnesses to give testimony concerning what the children said about who had caused the injuries to the boy was without merit because the issue was barred for defendant's failure to support the argument with citations to the authorities, statutes, and parts of the record relied upon, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6). Britt v. State, 844 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Court refused to address allegation of improper admission of hearsay statements where defendant neglected to state which hearsay statements were incorrectly admitted and failed to make an argument for his position as required by subsection (a)(6). Newell v. State, 754 So. 2d 1261 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Failure to cite authority.

Since a mother failed to comply with Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) by citing to legal authority supporting her claim that it was reversible error for a second chancellor to render judgment without consider testimony elicited before the first chancellor on the first day of the hearing prior to his recusal, she waived this issue on appeal. Kimbrough v. Kimbrough, 76 So. 3d 715 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 76 So. 3d 169, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 593 (Miss. 2011).

Supreme court suspended enforcement of Miss. R. App. P. 28(a) and considered the issues raised by a resident's attorney because although the resident was in violation of Rule 28(a)(6) since he cited no authority, his attorney's chancery-court brief complied with the rules, Green v. Cleary Water, Sewer & Fire Dist., 17 So. 3d 559 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 1691, 176 L. Ed. 2d 181, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 2154, 78 U.S.L.W. 3498 (U.S. 2010).

In a widow's bad-faith action against a workers' compensation insurance carrier, the carrier's argument that an instruction was erroneous was improper under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) because the carrier cited no authority for its argument that the jury instruction at issue was an incorrect statement of law or that the substantive portion of the instruction was somehow incorrect. AmFed Cos., LLC v. Jordan, 34 So. 3d 1177 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Legal entities, which sought an easement allowing them to use one of two private roads located on adjoining proprety owner's land, were procedurally barred under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) from claiming an express easement because the legal entities failed to cite any authority in support of such argument. Evanna Plantation, Inc. v. Thomas, 999 So. 2d 442 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Issue was neither discussed in a party's brief nor supported by any authority, and thus this issue was deemed abandoned and was not properly before the court on appeal. Kendrick v. Miss. Farm Bureau Ins., 996 So. 2d 132 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

On appeal from a judgment ordering defendants to vacate foreclosed property, defendants' claim that the circuit court erred in entering a judgment tantamount to a default judgment was procedurally barred under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) because defendants did not cite any authority for their arguments. Sorey v. Crosby, 989 So. 2d 485 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a manslaughter case, alleged errors relating to jury instructions were not reviewed based on a failure to cite to authorities in a brief; at any rate, after looking at the jury instructions as a whole, it was determined that they adequately stated the law and created no injustice or reversible error. Brown v. State, 970 So. 2d 1300 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Employer failed to cite any authority for its position on whether all medical treatment relating to and subsequent to September 9, 2002, was not related to the September 4, 2002, syncope episode and was therefore not compensable; failure to comply with Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) rendered an argument procedurally barred. Hinds County Bd. of Supervisors v. Johnson, 977 So. 2d 1193 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 1144, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 133 (Miss. 2008).

Where a corporation brought a successful action for a prescriptive easement, the landowner argued that the trial court should be reversed because the owner of the corporation was not joined in the action as an individual; the argument failed because the landowner cited no cases in support of the argument that misjoinder or nonjoinder warranted reversal. Graves v. Dudley Maples, L.P., 950 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. 2007).

Issue of prosecutorial misconduct regarding a statement he made in closing was procedurally barred under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) because defendant did not cite any authority for the alleged impropriety of the statement and did not suggest that the comment resulted in reversible error. Bailey v. State, — So. 2d —, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 508 (Miss. Ct. App. June 27, 2006), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, modified by 956 So. 2d 1016, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 112 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Failure to preserve error.

In an appeal of a dismissal of a pro se state inmate's petition for post-conviction review in which the inmate took issue with the trial court's refusal to grant him an evidentiary hearing, he had not complied with Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6) since he did not offer any proof of error by the trial court on this issue. Consequently, that issue was procedurally barred. Taylor v. State, 29 So. 3d 134 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Although defendant failed to preserve his sentencing claim, an appellate court properly considered it under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(3), finding that while the record was insufficient to sentence defendant, who was convicted of murder, as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83, since the record did not show that defendant had served two separate terms of at least one year in a state or federal penal institution, the error was harmless because there was sufficient evidence to sentence defendant as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, and the resulting sentence was the same under either provision. Reed v. State, 31 So. 3d 48 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2010).

When defendant's statements were offered into evidence, defendant joined an objection made by codefendant on the grounds of hearsay and the right to confrontation; defendant failed to object on the ground he raised on appeal — improper character evidence and waived any argument concerning character evidence when he failed to raise it in the trial court. Smith v. State, 986 So. 2d 290 (Miss. 2008).

Lower court's judgment affirming a life sentence on a felony shoplifting conviction was upheld where defendant had not raised his claims that he was improperly sentenced under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83 (Rev. 2007) or that his sentence was disproportionate under the Eighth Amendment to the lower court and thus, the procedural bar applied. Sumrell v. State, 972 So. 2d 572 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 952, 129 S. Ct. 414, 172 L. Ed. 2d 301, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 7462, 77 U.S.L.W. 3226 (2008), remanded by 607 F. Supp. 2d 748, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30798 (N.D. Miss. 2009).

Circuit court's overruling of defendant's request for an appeal bond was procedurally barred under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(3) because defendant did not advance his argument in his initial brief and the record did not indicate that defendant ever placed his theory regarding his argument before the circuit court. Larson v. State, 957 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 958 So. 2d 1232, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 318 (Miss. 2007).

Because the plaintiff offered no authority for his argument that a trial judge has no authority to raise the lack of proof of an essential element as justification for granting a motion for directed verdict, his argument was procedurally barred. Birrages v. Ill. Cent. R.R., 950 So. 2d 188 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a domestic relations action, the wife claimed the chancellor abused his discretion by granting the husband's motion for contempt, but she did not cite to the record or any relevant case law to demonstrate an instance when the chancellor abused his discretion. Likewise, the majority of the pleadings and motions referenced in her argument were absent from the record; although she was acting pro se, she was bound by the same rules of practice as an attorney, and her assertion was barred on appeal. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 918 So. 2d 795 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 596 (Miss. 2005).

No plain error existed as to defendant's arguments concerning jury instructions where the jury was instructed on all of the essential elements of the crime of child exploitation by three jury instructions tracking the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(2); although one instruction was erroneously given, no injustice occurred as the jury instructions, when read as a whole, fairly announced the law of the case and did not create an injustice. Blackwell v. State, 915 So. 2d 453 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 777 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's argument that since the victim was the actual procurer of the obscene photographs, his conviction under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-5-33(2) was improper, was procedurally barred, Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6), because defendant's only source of authority was an opinion supporting nothing more than his assertion that he was convicted under an anti-pornography law. Minor v. State, 904 So. 2d 1164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Reviewing court was not required to review any issues that were not properly supported by reasons and authority; the victim's brief failed to cite any authority or make any reference to the record that would have supported his position, such that his issue was procedurally barred, and the driver's failure to object in the trial court to the introduction of the newspaper articles was fatal for purposes of preserving any error for appeal. O'Hara v. Robinson, 904 So. 2d 1110 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In an action brought under the Mississippi Tort Claims Act, plaintiff cited no precedent or authority to prove that an ambulance driver was negligent as a matter of law in operating an ambulance during an emergency when she ran over plaintiff's foot and caused him to suffer damages. As such, the issue was procedurally barred and the court would not consider it on appeal. Albright v. Delta Reg'l Med. Ctr., 899 So. 2d 897 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 898 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 2005).

Where defendant failed to provide any legal support for his claim that the trial court had erred in failing to get the jury venire questions to defense counsel in a timely manner, the matter was waived. Gilmore v. State, 872 So. 2d 744 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Court refused to address a patient's constitutional claims on appeal because they had not been raised first in the trial court. Southern v. Miss. State Hosp., 853 So. 2d 1212 (Miss. 2003).

Indigent defendant.

Appellate counsel complied with the procedures set forth in Lindsey because he filed a brief stating that he examined the entire record, including: (a) the reason for defendant's arrest and the circumstances surrounding the arrest, (b) any possible violations of defendant's right to counsel, (c) the entire trial transcript and content of the record, (d) all rulings of the trial court, (e) possible prosecutorial misconduct, (f) all jury instructions, (g) all exhibits, whether admitted into evidence or not, (h) possible misapplication of the law in sentencing, (i) the indictment and all the pleadings in the record, and any possible ineffective assistance of counsel issues; appellate counsel informed defendant of his right to file a pro se brief and requested additional time to allow him to file such a brief if he chose to do so, and defendant then filed a brief on his own behalf, asserting several errors in the trial court. Chatman v. State, 29 So. 3d 118 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Mississippi Supreme Court overrules Turner v. State, 818 So.2d 1186 (Miss. 2001) in part, rectifying the Fourteenth Amendment problems with the procedure governing appeals by indigent criminal defendants by implementing a five part procedure that requires, inter alia, compliance with Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(1)-(4), (7); because a brief submitted by defense counsel merely stated that the appeal had no merit, rebriefing of a burglary case on appeal was required. Neal v. State, 5 So. 3d 1166 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Mississippi Supreme Court overrules Turner v. State, 818 So.2d 1186 (Miss. 2001) in part, rectifying the Fourteenth Amendment problems with the procedure governing appeals by indigent criminal defendants by implementing a five part procedure that requires, inter alia, compliance with Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(1)-(4), (7); because a brief submitted by defense counsel merely stated that the appeal had no merit, rebriefing of a burglary case on appeal was required. Lindsey v. State, 939 So. 2d 743 (Miss. 2005).

Insufficient record.

Finding in favor of a psychiatrist in a negligence action after the decedent killed herself was proper, in part because the personal representative had argued statements did not meet the trustworthiness requirements of Miss. R. Evid. 803(4). However, the representative failed to provide the supreme court with any directions as to the specific testimony at issue; without support from the record, the supreme court was not required to rule upon the merits of the representative's argument, Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6). Young v. Guild, 7 So. 3d 251 (Miss. 2009).

Plain error.

After a guardianship account was drained, two wards were awarded damages in a suit against the bank for breaching its duty by allowing the funds on deposit to be converted without a court order; upon plain error review pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(3), the appellate court noted that the chancery court erred in not abiding by the parties' stipulations of fact regarding the amount of money the wards would have received from the guardianship account if none of the funds had been misappropriated. The appellate court reduced the younger ward's damages to take into account the $25,000 he recovered and the $47,000 in guardianship funds used to buy him a house. Williams v. Duckett (In re Duckett), 991 So. 2d 1165 (Miss. 2008).

Although a husband, in the portion of his brief arguing that his wife failed to provide testimony of a corroborating witness and, therefore, should not have been granted a divorce on the ground of habitual cruel and inhuman treatment, failed specifically to identify the issue, as required by Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(3); the court addressed the claim because, such a claim, if meritorious, would have amounted to plain error. Shavers v. Shavers, 982 So. 2d 397 (Miss. 2008).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed based on an allegation of in effective assistance of counsel because defendant was correctly informed of the 10-year maximum penalty for uttering forgery; however, the case was remanded for resentencing because plain error was committed when a trial court improperly imposed a 15-year sentence. Jefferson v. State, 958 So. 2d 1276 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Appraiser's "plain error" argument that there was a conflict of interest with respect to the manner in which disciplinary proceedings were conducted failed because there was no evidence of bias or misconduct and no conflict between the investigation and adjudication process; no error, much less plain error under Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(3), was present in the administrative process. Miss. Real Estate Appraiser Licensing & Certification Bd. v. Schroeder, 980 So. 2d 275 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Concurrence attempted to raise an issue that was not addressed by either party; the appellate court did not address the issue because it was not plain error. Broady v. Miss. State Bd. of Architecture, 936 So. 2d 441 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

To convict for felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann. § 93-23-93 (6), (8), the State was required to prove as part of its case-in-chief and as an element of the charge, that defendant had twice previously been convicted of shoplifting within seven years. No such proof was offered, and while defendant testified on cross-examination that she had been convicted of shoplifting in 1999, there was no testimony or evidence that she had been convicted twice of shoplifting within seven years prior to the offense charged, nor was the jury instructed as to this; although defendant never moved for a directed verdict on the latter ground, nor did she raise it on appeal; reviewing the matter as plain error, the appellate court held that reversal on the felony shoplifting charge was warranted, but that entry of conviction for the second shoplifting offense was in order. Evans v. State, 919 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Statement of issues.

Although a party's brief listed two issues, he only briefed the court on the first issue, and the court's discussion was limited to that issue. Bourgeois v. Estate of Parker (In re Estate of Parker), 13 So. 3d 877 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Denial of a petition for post-conviction relief based on a guilty plea to the charge of manslaughter was not overturned on appeal due to defendant's insufficient brief, failure to cite authority, insufficient record, and lack of affidavits, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-9(1)(e) and Miss. R. App. P. 28(a)(6). Hill v. State, 940 So. 2d 972 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Appellate court invoked the plain error doctrine in order to correctly reflect that defendant's conviction under Count III was to be manslaughter instead of murder, as set out in the trial court's sentencing order and defendant's notice of criminal disposition to the Mississippi Department of Corrections. Bryant v. State, 844 So. 2d 1153 (Miss. 2003).

An appellate court reviewing the denial of a motion for postconviction relief is not required to engage in an in-depth analysis of the entire record based solely upon overly broad and uninformative conclusory allegations to attempt to discover some aspect of the proceeding in the court below that might arguably fit within the assertions of the defendant's brief. Pinter v. State, 795 So. 2d 587 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The court used its power to suspend the operation of the rules for good cause where the appellant failed to list an issue in the statement of issues in his brief, but the issue was listed in the table of contents as a separate issue and presented separately in the body of the brief. Starks v. State, 798 So. 2d 562 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Supplemental filings.

Appellate court would not consider defendant's claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel where the claim was raised in an unauthorized pro se brief. Crawford v. State, 839 So. 2d 594 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Appellate court refused to accept a supplemental pro se brief filed by defendant after defendant's counsel had briefed issues concerning defendant's conviction of armed robbery; case was considered on counsel's brief alone. Stevens v. State, 840 So. 2d 785 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Twenty-six page "supplemental brief," setting forth new legal argument and authorities in support thereof, was filed out-of-time and was not allowed. Mississippi Gaming Comm'n v. Board of Educ., 691 So. 2d 452 (Miss. 1997).

Cited in Rucker v. State, 909 So. 2d 137 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Rule 29. Brief of an amicus curiae.

(a) Grounds for filing. A brief of an amicus curiae may be filed only by leave of the appropriate appellate court, except that leave shall not be required when the brief is presented by the state and sponsored by the Attorney General or by a guardian ad litem who is not otherwise a party to the appeal. A motion for leave shall demonstrate that (1) amicus has an interest in some other case involving a similar question; or (2) counsel for a party is inadequate or the brief insufficient; or (3) there are matters of fact or law that may otherwise escape the court's attention; or (4) the amicus has substantial legitimate interests that will likely be affected by the outcome of the case and which interests will not be adequately protected by those already parties to the case.

(b) How and when filed. A motion for leave to file an amicus brief shall be filed no later than seven (7) days after filing of the initial brief of the party whose position the amicus brief will support. The motion must be accompanied by the proposed brief of amicus curiae which shall be a concise statement not to exceed 15 pages. The party filing the motion shall also file with the motion a brief stating why the motion satisfies the requirements of Rule 29(a).

(c) Response to motion. An opposing party who does not object to the motion for leave may respond to the amicus brief in the opposing party's response or reply brief pursuant to Rule 28(c) or 28(d). An opposing party who objects to the motion for leave shall file a response in opposition within seven (7) days pursuant to Rule 27 stating why the requirements of Rule 29(a) have not been met. For the purpose of Rule 31(a), the time for filing the next brief will run from the date the appropriate court enters an order on the motion for leave.

(d) Oral argument. A motion of amicus curiae to participate in oral argument will be granted only for extraordinary reasons. (Amended effective June 27, 2002; amended effective August 2, 2012.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 29 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 29, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXVII-LXIX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 29 was amended to effect technical changes. 632-635 So.2d LII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 29 is patterned on Fed.R.App.P. 29, 5th Cir.R. 31.2, Ala.R.App.P. 29, U.S.Sup.Ct.R. 36, and the former rules of the Mississippi Supreme Court.

Briefs of an amicus curiae are allowed under this rule consistent with the accepted view that such briefs, in appropriate cases, are of genuine assistance to the court and facilitate a more thorough understanding of the facts and law. Taylor v. Roberts, 475 So. 2d 150 (Miss. 1985). Under this rule, any person may move for leave to file an amicus brief. The appropriate court will consider motions filed under this rule pursuant to the considerations set out in subdivision (a). The State of Mississippi, through the Attorney General, however, need not obtain permission of the Court to appear as an amicus curiae. The court may also invite amicus briefs from persons the Court perceives may be affected by the outcome of the case. See Warren County v. Culkin, 497 So. 2d 433, 435-36 (Miss. 1986).

The rule follows federal practice by integrating amicus curiae briefs into the schedule for filing briefs on the merits. The motion with attached amicus brief need not be filed, however, until seven days after the initial brief of the party whose position the amicus brief will support. This delay permits the amicus to take advantage of Rule 28(j) and adopt by reference portions of the brief of that party. It also ensures the amicus will know what the party's brief contains. It is designed to discourage the filing of repetitive briefs that cannot satisfy Rule 29(a).

The opposing party may choose not to oppose the motion and may respond to the amicus brief in the party's next brief. If the opposing party files a response in opposition within seven days as required by Rule 27, the time for filing the next brief is rescheduled and does not begin to run until the date the court enters an order on the motion for leave. The response in opposition is to address only whether leave should be granted under Rule 29(a). The party opposing the motion will respond to the merits of the amicus brief in that party's next brief only if the motion for leave is granted. The former practice of a separate brief in response to the amicus brief is abolished. If the court grants leave to file, however, it may condition leave by extending the number of pages permitted under Rule 28(h) for the opposing party's next brief.

Under Rule 27, a motion for leave to file an amicus brief is decided by a single justice.

[Amended effective August 2, 2012.]

Rule 30. Record excerpts.

(a) Mandatory record excerpts. Appeals shall be on the record as designated pursuant to Rule 10. Also, at the time of filing appellant's brief, appellant shall file four (4) copies of the following portions of the trial court record, to be indexed and bound together, but not in the brief:

(1) a true copy of the trial court docket

(2) the judgment or interlocutory order appealed from;

(3) all other orders or rulings sought to be reviewed; and

(4) all supporting opinions, findings of fact or conclusions of law filed or delivered orally by the trial court.

(b) Optional record excerpts. Appellant may add to the mandatory record excerpts brief extracts from the pleadings, instructions, transcript, or exhibits if they are essential to an understanding of the issues raised.

At the time the appellee's brief is filed, the appellee may add other such extracts by filing four (4) copies of the same with an index and separately bound in a like manner, and labeled "Appellee's Record Excerpts."

(c) Exemption from requirements of rule for inmate appeals. The requirements of this rule are not applicable to appeals filed pro se by inmates of a facility of the Department of Corrections. (Amended effective June 27, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 30 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 30. 644-647 So.2d LXIX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 30 was amended to delete material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice. 632-635 So.2d LII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

The requirement for record excerpts with the provision for optional additions is modeled upon 5th Cir.R. 30.1.

All parties are cautioned that Rule 30(b) allows optional record excerpts that are essential to an understanding of the issues raised. If non-essential materials are included in the record excerpts, its usefulness to the court as a convenient adjunct to study of the briefs will be diminished. The fact that parts of the record are not included in the record excerpts shall not prevent the parties or the court from relying on such parts. The court will have before it the entire designated record when making its decision.

Rule 31. Filing and service of briefs.

(a) Notice of briefing schedule. Immediately upon filing of the record in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court, the clerk shall notify counsel of the filing of the record. However, failure of the clerk to give, or of a party to receive, notice of the filing of the record shall not excuse any delay in filing briefs.

(b) Time for filing and service of briefs. The appellant shall serve and file the appellant's brief within 40 days after the date on which the record is filed. The appellee shall serve and file the appellee's brief within 30 days after service of the brief of the appellant. The appellant may serve and file a reply brief within 14 days after service of the brief of the appellee. In cross-appeals, the appellant and cross-appellee may serve and file a combined responsive brief within 30 days after service of the combined brief of the appellee and cross-appellant. The cross-appellant's reply under Rule 28(d) may then be served within 14 days after service of the appellant's combined responsive brief.

(c) Number of copies to be filed. An original and three (3) copies of all briefs shall be filed with the clerk. In cases in which the appellant has been sentenced to suffer the death penalty, the party shall file the original and nine (9) copies of all briefs. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may require that additional copies be furnished.

(d) Consequences of failure to file briefs. If an appellant fails to file the appellant's brief within the time provided by this rule or within the time as extended, the appeal may be dismissed on motion of appellee or on the Supreme Court's own motion as provided in Rule 2. If an appellee fails to file the appellee's brief as required, such brief, if later filed, may be stricken from the record on motion of appellant or on the motion of the appropriate appellate court. An appellee who fails to file a brief will not be heard at oral argument except by permission of the court.

(e) Suspension of briefing. When ordered by the Supreme Court, the clerk shall suspend the briefing schedule. The clerk may suspend the briefing schedule in response to a filing or other action which affects the record or the briefing process, or when suspension is not opposed by any party. (Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended effective August 2, 2012.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 31 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 31, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 31(c) was further amended to enhance clarity. 644-647 So.2d LXX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the last sentence of the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 31 was deleted. 632-635 So.2d LIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective August 2, 2012.]

COMMENT

Rule 31 is based on Fed. R. App. P. 31, and the former rules of the Supreme Court. Under Rule 25(a), briefs and record excerpts are deemed filed on the day of mailing by first class mail with postage prepaid, or any more expeditious form of delivery. Under Rule 26(c), service by mail adds three days to the prescribed period.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Supplemental filings.
Timely filing.

Supplemental filings.

Twenty-six page "supplemental brief," setting forth new legal argument and authorities in support thereof, was filed out-of-time and was not allowed. Mississippi Gaming Comm'n v. Board of Educ., 691 So. 2d 452 (Miss. 1997).

Timely filing.

Grandmother's appeal was timely where an immediate appeal of a denial of an application for leave to intervene under Miss. R. Civ. P. 24 was not required and the father did not file a brief in the current appeal, Miss. R. App. P. 31(d). S.G. v. D.C., 13 So. 3d 269 (Miss. 2009).

Court did not err when it did not strike a brief as being untimely filed because: (1) the brief was filed on October 17, 2006, and the party's motion for extension of time was filed on November 16, 2006; (2) on February 14, 2007, the court granted twenty more days to file the brief, and the party filed its brief on March 6, 2007; (3) the party filed its motion for an extension of time within the prescribed 30-day time limit; and (4) the court granted an extension through March 6, 2007, because March 5, 2007, was a Sunday. Franklin v. BSL, Inc., 987 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In employee's personal-injury action, although his brief was filed after the deadline, the supreme court never gave him notice of the alleged default and his brief was filed only two days after the deadline, and according to Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2) well within the 14 days, and the supreme court permitted parties to correct a deficiency; therefore, the employee's appeal was not dismissed. Green v. Allendale Planting Co., 954 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the residents' appeal of the city's grant of a special use permit to the humane society as the residents did not file their brief by the time set forth Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.06, and Miss. R. App. P. 31(d) authorized the dismissal of appeals for failing to timely file a brief. Truax v. City of Gulfport, 931 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 334 (Miss. 2006).

The appellant acted at its own peril in failing to ensure that the record on appeal was properly transferred from one county circuit court to another and that its brief was timely filed and, therefore, the appeal was properly dismissed. Zurich Am. Ins. Co. of Ill. v. Beasley Contracting Co., 779 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

An appeal was properly dismissed where the appellant filed his brief 54 days after filing the record with the circuit court, offered no reasons why his brief should be considered after the deadline for filing, and did not respond to the appellees' motion to dismiss for exceeding the filing deadline. Russell v. Mitchell-Putnam Signs, 754 So. 2d 1256 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Appellate court's issuance of a decision prior to the expiration of the 40 day period for the appellants to file a brief resulted in harmless error; the role of the appellate court is merely to review the record to determine whether substantial evidence supported the lower court's decision, and a failure to read both parties' briefs did not interfere with the appellate court's duties. Bailey v. Bryant, 734 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Rule 32. Form of briefs, record excerpts and other papers.

(a) Form of briefs and record excerpts. Briefs and record excerpts may be produced by standard commercial printing or by any duplicating or copying process which produces a clear black image on white paper. The text in the body of briefs shall appear in at least 12 point type; the text of footnotes must appear in at least 11 point type.

Briefs and record excerpts shall be bound in volumes and shall be typed on one side of the page only and shall be in black non-copying ink on white paper without the name of any person or advertising matters on the paper. Pages of briefs shall not exceed 8 ½ by 11 inches with margins of 1 ½ inches on the left, 1 inch on the top, ¾ of an inch on the bottom, and ½ inch on the right, with double spacing between each line of text, excluding quotations and footnotes. All pages shall be numbered.

It is preferred that briefs and record excerpts be bound so as to permit them to lie flat when opened, and they must be so bound if the cover is plastic or any material not easily folded.

The cover of the brief of the appellant shall be blue; that of the appellee, red; that of an intervenor or amicus curiae, green; that of any reply brief, gray. In cross-appeals, the reply brief of appellant shall be combined with the brief of cross-appellee, and the combined brief shall be red. The reply brief of cross-appellant shall be gray. The cover of the record excerpts shall be white. The front covers of the briefs and of record shall contain: (1) the caption, name of the court and the number of the case; (2) the style (title) of the case [see Rule 13(a)]; (3) the nature of the proceeding (e.g., Appeal; Interlocutory Appeal; Petition for Writ of Prohibition) and the name of the court or commission below; (4) the title of the document (e.g., Brief for Appellant, Record Excerpts); (5) the names, bar numbers, addresses and business telephone numbers of counsel representing the party on whose behalf the document is filed, and (6) a statement on the cover of a brief filed by each party that oral argument is or is not requested. See M.R.A.P. 34(b).

(b) Form of other papers. Motions for rehearing shall be produced in a manner prescribed by Rule 32(a) and Rule 28(m), and motions and other papers may be produced in like manner, or they may be typewritten upon opaque, unglazed paper, 8 ½ by 11 inches in size. Lines of typewritten text shall be double spaced except for quotations and footnotes. Consecutive sheets shall be attached at the top left corner.

A motion or other paper addressed to either the Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court shall contain a caption setting forth the name of the court, the style (title) of the case, the tracking or docket number, and a brief descriptive title indicating the purpose of the paper. Prior to notification by the clerk that the case has been assigned to the Court of Appeals, all pleadings shall be captioned in the name of the Supreme Court. A motion filed after notice of assignment to the Court of Appeals shall be captioned with the name of that court. (Amended effective May 27, 2004 to revise the size of fonts in the text of briefs; amended effective April 19, 2007; amended effective August 2, 2012.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective September 18, 1997, Rule 32(b) was amended to effect technical changes. 699-701 So. 2d XXIX (West Miss. Cases 1997). (Amended effective April 19, 2007.)

Effective February 10, 1995, the Comment to Rule 32 was amended to provide that appellant's reply, not principal, brief must state whether oral argument is requested. 648 So.2d XXXII-XXXIII (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 32 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 32, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Rule 32(b) and the Comment were further amended to provide that the cover of a brief filed by each party must state whether oral argument is requested. 644-647 So.2d LXXI-LXXII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended March 31, 1999.]

COMMENT

Rule 32 is based on Fed. R. App. P. 32, 5th Cir. R. 32, and the former rules of the Supreme Court. The Rule changes former Supreme Court practice in that it requires the appellant and the appellee to designate on the cover of the reply brief of the appellant and the principal brief of the appellee whether or not oral argument is requested. See M.R.A.P. 34(b).

[Amended February 10, 1995.]

Rule 33. Prehearing conference.

At any time after the filing of a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may direct the attorneys for the parties to appear before the court, a justice of the Supreme Court or a judge of the Court of Appeals, or a person designated by the appropriate court for a prehearing conference to consider the simplification of the issues and such other matters as may aid in the disposition of the proceeding by the court, including settlement. The court, justice, judge, or person designated shall make an order which recites the action taken at the conference and the agreements made by the parties as to any of the matters considered and which limits the issues to those not disposed of by admissions or agreements of counsel. Such order, when entered, controls the subsequent course of the proceeding, unless modified to prevent manifest injustice.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 33 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 33, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 33 is similar to Fed. R. App. P. 33. The prehearing conference can be a valuable tool in simplifying complex appeals or in promoting settlement in a manner similar to the pretrial conference used at the trial level.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Criminal cases.

This rule was not intended to facilitate post-trial settlement or "plea bargains" in criminal cases by the appellate courts. Jenkins v. State, 733 So. 2d 833 (Miss. 1999).

Rule 34. Oral argument.

(a) When allowed. Oral argument will be had in all death penalty cases. In all other cases, oral argument will be allowed unless the court, or the panel to which the case is assigned, unanimously agrees that:

(1) the appeal is frivolous; or

(2) the dispositive issue or set of issues has been recently authoritatively decided; or

(3) the facts and legal arguments are adequately presented in the briefs and record and the decisional process would not be significantly aided by oral argument.

(b) When requested. Any party desiring to be heard orally shall so state on the cover of his brief (e.g., ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED). Parties not seeking oral argument must also so note: ORAL ARGUMENT NOT REQUESTED. The appellee shall make this notation on his principal brief; the appellant shall make this notation on his reply brief or, if no reply brief is filed, by letter within the time allowed for filing of the reply brief. The party requesting oral argument shall, in his or her brief or letter, include a concise statement of the reasons that oral argument will be helpful to the court. Unless a party desiring oral argument complies with this requirement, he shall not be heard orally except by special permission or order of the appropriate appellate court. By agreement of the parties, a case may be submitted for decision on the briefs, but the appropriate appellate court may direct that the case be argued.

(c) Notice of argument; postponement. At least 14 days before the date set for argument, the clerk shall serve on counsel of record notice of the time and place for argument, and the time to be allowed each side. A request for postponement of the argument or for allowance of additional time must be made by motion filed reasonably in advance of the date fixed for hearing.

(d) Time allowed for argument. Each side shall be allowed 30 minutes for argument, unless otherwise ordered by the court. A party is not obliged to use all of the time allowed, and the court may terminate the argument whenever in its judgment further argument is unnecessary.

(e) Order and content of argument. The appellant is entitled to open and to conclude the argument. The opening argument shall include a fair statement of the case. Counsel will not be permitted to read at length from briefs, records, or authorities. The court may, in its discretion, advise the parties of the points upon which the court would like to hear argument.

(f) Cross and separate appeals. A cross or separate appeal shall be argued with the initial appeal at a single argument, unless the appellate court otherwise directs. If a case involves a cross-appeal, the party first filing a notice of appeal shall be deemed the appellant for the purpose of this rule unless the parties otherwise agree or the court otherwise directs. If separate appellants support the same argument, care shall be taken to avoid duplication of argument.

(g) Non-appearance of parties. If the appellee fails to appear to present argument, the court may hear argument on behalf of the appellant, if present. If the appellant fails to appear, the court may hear argument on behalf of the appellee. If neither party appears, the case will be decided on the briefs unless the court shall otherwise order. If a party or attorney who requested the oral argument fails to appear or present argument, the court may assess a penalty in the amount of the reasonable cost for appearance incurred by the party or the attorney for the party who does appear for argument. In its discretion, the court may include a reasonable attorney's fee as a part of such costs, and assess such other sanctions as may be appropriate.

(h) Use of physical exhibits at argument; removal. If physical exhibits other than documents are to be used at the argument, counsel shall arrange to have them placed in the courtroom before the court convenes on the date of the argument. After the argument, counsel shall cause the exhibits to be removed from the courtroom unless the court otherwise directs.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 34 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 34, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. In addition, a new subsection (b) was added, altering the procedure by which a party may request oral argument; the Comment was also amended to reflect this change. 644-647 So.2d LXXII-LXIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 34 is based on Fed. R. App. P. 34, Ala. R. App. P. 34, and the former rules of the Supreme Court. If counsel has a conflicting prior trial setting at the time counsel receives a notice of oral argument under Rule 34(b), counsel should immediately notify the clerk of the Supreme Court of the conflict. See Leonard v. Leonard, 486 So. 2d 1240, 1241-1242 (Miss. 1986).

Rule 35-A. Written opinions and entry of judgment in the Supreme Court.

(a) Written opinions. The Supreme Court may write opinions on all cases heard by that Court and shall publish all such written opinions. In cases where the judgment of the trial court is affirmed, an opinion will be written in all cases where the Supreme Court assesses damages for a frivolous appeal and in other cases if a majority of the justices deciding the case determine that a written opinion will add to the value of the jurisprudence of this state or be useful to the parties or to the trial court.

(b) Citation of unpublished opinions. Opinions in cases decided prior to the effective date of this rule which have not been designated for publication shall not be cited, quoted or referred to by any court or in any argument, brief or other materials presented to any court except in continuing or related litigation upon an issue such as res judicata, collateral estoppel or law of the case.

(c) Per curiam affirmance. The Court, with the concurrence of all justices participating in the case, may affirm the action of the trial court without rendering a formal opinion when an opinion would have no precedential value and one or more of the following circumstances exist and are dispositive of the appeal:

(1) the Court concurs in the facts as found or as found by necessary implication by the trial court;

(2) there is material evidence to support the verdict of the jury;

(3) no reversible error of law appears.

(d) Entry of judgment. The notation of a judgment in the minute book of the Supreme Court constitutes entry of the judgment. The clerk of the Supreme Court shall enter the judgment following receipt of the opinion and judgment of the Court. If a judgment is rendered without an opinion, the clerk shall enter the judgment following instruction from the appropriate court. (Amended July 25, 1996; amended effective November 1, 1998.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective July 25, 1996, Rule 35-A(c) was deleted and Rules 35-A(d) and (e) were renumbered accordingly. 673-678 So.2d XLIV (West Miss. Cases 1996). [Amended effective July 1, 1998.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Exception.

Exception allowing citation of unpublished opinions applies when res judicata, collateral estoppel, or law of the case is invoked in subsequent litigation by or against one of the parties to the case for which the unpublished opinion was written. Boyd v. State, 801 So. 2d 691 (Miss. 2001).

Rule 35-B. Written opinions and entry of judgment in the Court of Appeals.

(a) Written opinions in the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals may write opinions on all cases heard by that court and shall publish all such written opinions. In cases where the judgment of the trial court is affirmed, an opinion will be written in all cases where the Court of Appeals assesses damages for a frivolous appeal and in other cases if a majority of the judges deciding the case determine that a written opinion will add to the value of the jurisprudence of this state or be useful to the parties or to the trial court.

(b) Citation of unpublished opinions. Opinions in cases which have not been designated for publication shall not be cited, quoted or referred to by any court or in any argument, brief or other materials presented to any court except in continuing or related litigation upon an issue such as res judicata, collateral estoppel or law of the case.

(c) Publication of Court of Appeals' opinions. An opinion may be published only after it is final. An opinion of the Court of Appeals is final where: (i) no motion for rehearing is filed pursuant to Rule 40 or,(ii) where a motion for rehearing is timely filed and the motion for rehearing is denied. The filing of a petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court shall not, for the purpose of this subsection, prevent or delay finality of the Court of Appeals opinion for publication.

(d) Per curiam affirmance. The Court of Appeals, with the concurrence of all judges participating in the case, may affirm the action of the trial court without rendering a formal opinion when an opinion would have no precedential value and one or more of the following circumstances exist and are dispositive of the appeal:

(1) the Court concurs in the facts as found or as found by necessary implication by the trial court;

(2) there is material evidence to support the verdict of the jury;

(3) no reversible error of law appears.

(e) Entry of judgment. The notation of a judgment in the minute book of the Court of Appeals constitutes entry of the judgment. The clerk of the Supreme Court shall enter the judgment following receipt of the opinion and judgment of the court. If a judgment is rendered without an opinion, the clerk shall enter the judgment following instructions from the court. (Amended effective September 1, 1996; amended effective November 1, 1998; amended effective March 7, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective September 1, 1996, new Rules 35-B(b) and (c) were added. In addition, Rule 35-B(a) was amended to reflect the new Rules, and former Rules 35-B(b) and (c) were renumbered Rules 35-B(d) and (e). 673-678 So.2d XLV (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 35-A replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 35. In addition, the Supreme Court promulgated new Rule 35-B, entitled "Written Opinions and Entry of Judgment in the Court of Appeals." The Comment to Rule 35 was further amended to delete the third sentence. 644-647 So.2d LXXIV-LXXVI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 35 was amended to delete a reference to a repealed statute. 632-635 So.2d LIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1998.]

COMMENT

Comment to Rules 35-A and 35-B. The portions of Rule 35 dealing with written opinions are based upon former rules of the Supreme Court. The appellate courts' practice is to write opinions when it reverses or remands a trial court or administrative agency, and Rule 35-A(c) and Rule 35-B(d) therefore address those circumstances in which judgment is affirmed and no opinion is written. Rule 45(c) governs furnishing of copies of the courts' opinions and judgments by the clerk.

While it is the policy of the appellate courts to publish all opinions, there are opinions which have been issued prior to, November 1, 1998, the date of the adoption of that policy which have been designated "Not for Publication." Rules 35-A(b) and 35-B(b) restrict the citation of those unpublished opinions. Prior to March 7, 2002, by further amendment to Rule 35-B(c), opinions of the Court of Appeals were not defined as final opinions where they were subject to petitions for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court until the Supreme Court had denied certiorari or had granted certiorari but later dismissed as improvidently granted. On that date, Rule 35-B(c) was amended to allow publication of Court of Appeals opinions when no motion for rehearing is filed, or where rehearing is denied, even though review on petition for writ of certiorari is sought in the Supreme Court. There remain opinions which were issued prior to each of these amendments which remain designated "Not for Publication," and are not to be cited due to the prohibition of Rule 35-B(b). Although the filing of a petition for writ of certiorari does not delay publication of a Court of Appeals opinion, the filing of such a petition does defer the mandate in the case as provided for in Rule 41(b).

Rule 36. Costs.

(a) To whom allowed. Except as otherwise provided by law, if an appeal is dismissed, costs shall be taxed against the appellant unless otherwise agreed by the parties or ordered by the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals. If a judgment is affirmed, costs shall be taxed against the appellant unless otherwise ordered. If a judgment is reversed, costs shall be taxed against the appellee unless otherwise ordered. If a judgment is affirmed or reversed in part, or is vacated, costs shall be allowed only as ordered by the court which decided the case.

(b) Costs for and against the State of Mississippi. Costs may be awarded for or against the State of Mississippi or any of its agencies, or officers, or political subdivisions unless otherwise provided by law.

(c) Costs on appeal taxable in court below. Costs incurred in the preparation and transmission of the record, the costs of the reporter's transcript, if necessary for the determination of the appeal, the premiums paid for cost of supersedeas bonds or other bonds to preserve rights pending appeal, and the fee for filing the appeal shall be taxed in the trial court as costs of the appeal in favor of the party entitled to costs under this rule.

(d) Rehearing and retaxing costs. If the allowance or disallowance of costs or other matter affecting the judgment has been incorporated in the opinion, a party seeking relief may file a motion for rehearing under Rule 40. All motions to retax costs in the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals must be filed within 14 days after issuance of the mandate or any addition to the mandate. A party who is not aggrieved by the opinion or mandate but who seeks relief as to any other matter involving costs shall seek relief in the trial court. (Amended June 21, 1996.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Bonds to preserve rights pending appeal.

Prevailing party.
Illustrative cases.

Bonds to preserve rights pending appeal.

Subsection (c) of this rule does not authorize the taxing as part of the costs in a criminal appeal the premium paid by a convicted defendant for a bail bond to secure his release on bail pending appeal. Jones v. State, 746 So. 2d 297 (Miss. 1999).

Costs allowed.

Although the prosecutor's statements were improper and made repeatedly even though the prosecutor was warned by the trial court not to repeat them, a new trial was not necessary; however, in dealing with the prosecutor's conduct in defendant's case pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 36, the appellate court personally assessed the costs of the appeal against the prosecutor. Brown v. State, 986 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), reversed by, remanded by 986 So. 2d 270, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 340 (Miss. 2008).

The court ordered the appellant to pay the costs of appeal where the court affirmed the chancellor's decision and found no special circumstances to warrant a different ruling. Goodin v. Department of Human Servs., 772 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. 2000).

Trial court erred in taxing one-half of bank's lost investment income as a cost of appeal; trial court was correct, however, in taxing bank for one-half of direct court costs. United Southern Bank v. Bank of Mantee, 680 So. 2d 220 (Miss. 1996).

Party to the litigation.

Because the prosecutor, in his individual capacity, was not a party to the litigation, Miss. R. App. P. 35 provided no authority for taxation of costs against him, personally; an appellate court's power to assess the costs of appeal pursuant to Rule 36 did not extend beyond the parties to the litigation. Brown v. State, 986 So. 2d 270 (Miss. 2008).

Prevailing party.

Mississippi's procedural rules clearly create a presumption favoring the award of costs to the prevailing party; it is therefore incumbent upon unsuccessful party to overcome this presumption by showing some special circumstances. Northern Elec. Co. v. Phillips, 673 So. 2d 1384 (Miss. 1996).

Illustrative cases.

Pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 36(d), a trial court was within its discretion in allowing the a patient's estate to proceed to trial on remand for a new trial without prepayment of appeal costs in a medical malpractice action due to the estate's indigency. Blake v. Estate of Clein, 37 So. 3d 622 (Miss. 2010).

Unsuccessful appellee was relieved of automatic taxation of costs with respect to supersedeas bond premium in excess of $30,000, and matter was remanded to trial court for evidentiary hearing on appellee's inability to pay. Northern Elec.

Co. v. Phillips, 673 So. 2d 1384 (Miss. 1996).

Where inequities were indistinguishable as between parties to divorce action, all taxable court costs incident to consolidated appeals were ordered to be aggregated and then divided equally between the parties. Cumberland v. Cumberland, 564 So. 2d 839 (Miss. 1990).

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 36(d) and the Comment were amended to redesignate rehearing "petitions" as "motions." 673-678 So.2d XLI (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 36 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 36, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXVI-LXXVII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective January 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 36 was amended to delete unnecessary statutory references and delete a reference to a repealed statute. 632-635 So.2d LIII-LIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 36 follows Fed.R.App.P. 39 and, in some respects, prior law. Subdivision (a) gives the both appellate courts discretion in taxation of costs. The Supreme Court has traditionally taxed costs as it thought "proper." See Miss. Code Ann. §§ 11-3-37, 11-3-39 (1991).

Subdivision (b) departs from Fed.R.App.P. 39(b) and reflects the general state rule that the state and its agencies are liable for costs unless a statute provides otherwise. Without such liability, court officials would have no source from which to collect costs. See State Board of Registration v. Rogers, 121 So. 2d 720, 721 (Miss. 1960); Miss. Code Ann. §§ 25-7-7, 99-35-105 (Supp. 1986). The state, its subdivisions, and their officers, by statute, are not generally liable, however, for prepayment of costs. Miss. Code Ann. § 11-53-13 (1972); City of Mound Bayou v. Roy Collins Construction Co., 457 So. 2d 337, 340 (Miss. 1984).

Subdivision (c), for the convenience of the parties, makes all costs taxable in the trial court. Judgment may be rendered against an obligor on a supersedeas bond. See Rule 8(d); Miss. Code Ann. § 11-3-27 (1991). A party suing to enforce a judgment for costs is entitled to recover attorneys' fees. Miss. Code Ann. § 11-3-41 (1991). While execution should ordinarily be sought in the trial court, the appellate court retains the power to issue execution for costs.

Subdivision (d) provides that if the allowance or disallowance of costs or other matter affecting the judgment has been incorporated in the opinion, the proper procedure for seeking relief is a motion for rehearing under Rule 40. Normally, however, each court will tax costs in its judgment, and not in its opinions. The court does not send the parties a copy of the judgment until the mandate issues. See Rule 41. For this reason, subdivision (d) provides a 14 day period after issuance of the mandate for the filing of a motion to retax costs. Other parties may not be aggrieved by the mandate and yet may wish to challenge some aspect of the taxation of costs. For example, the mandate usually does not fix the amount of costs to be taxed. A party may admit liability yet wish to challenge the amount taxed. Subdivision (d) provides that relief in such cases is to be sought in the trial court.

The clerk of the Supreme Court continues to have the discretion to deny costs to a trial court clerk if the record is not properly prepared.

[Amended June 21, 1996.]

Rule 37. Interest on judgments.

Unless otherwise provided by law, if a judgment for money in a civil case is affirmed, whatever interest is allowed by law shall be payable from the date judgment was entered in the court or commission below. If a judgment is modified or reversed with direction that a judgment for money be entered in the court below, the mandate shall contain instructions with respect to the allowance of interest.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 37 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 37. 644-647 So.2d LXXVII-LXXVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the second paragraph of the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 37 was rewritten to enhance clarity. 632-635 So.2d LIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

In determining the date interest is payable, this rule basically follows former Mississippi practice and case law. Porter v. Ainsworth, 288 So. 2d 709, 710 (Miss. 1974); United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Stafford, 253 So. 2d 388, 393 (Miss. 1971).

Unless otherwise provided by law, if a judgment for money in a civil case is affirmed, interest will be payable from the date judgment was entered in the court or commission below. However, if the judgment affirmed provides for payments on a future date, the judgment is deemed, for the purpose of this rule only, to have been entered on that date. Cf. Brand v. Brand, 482 So. 2d 236, 237-38 (Miss. 1974) (interest on past due child support payable from the date each past due payment became due).

The final sentence of Rule 37 is a departure from prior law. See Grice v. General Electric Power Ass'n, 230 Miss. 437, 456-458, 96 So. 2d 909, 911 (1957); Stubblefield v. Jesco, Inc., 464 So. 2d 47, 60-63 (Miss. 1985). Those cases established the rule that when the Supreme Court reverses a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and renders a judgment for money, the prevailing party can only collect pre-mandate interest on the amount of the verdict if a judgment was entered on that verdict before the trial court set it aside. Federal practice rejects this technical distinction. Following federal practice, this rule grants the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals authority to use its mandate to control awards of interest when a judgment is modified or reversed with directions that a judgment for money be entered in the court below. In cases where interest is simply overlooked in the mandate, a party who claims entitlement to interest from a date other than the date of entry of judgment in accordance with the mandate should be entitled to seek recall of the mandate for determination of the question.

Construction.

The specific language of Rule 37 shifts the burden to the State and its political subdivisions to provide explicit statutory exceptions to the new general rule that the state and its political subdivisions must pay the same costs and interest as individual or corporate appellants who lose their appeals. City of Jackson v. Williamson, 740 So. 2d 818 (Miss. 1999).

Motion for interest denied.

Chancellor did not err in denying the Texas relatives' motion for interest in the chancery court because the issue of his denial of the Georgia relatives' motion was still outstanding on appeal in the appellate court. Ray v. Ray, 963 So. 2d 20 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Rule 38. Damages for frivolous appeal.

In a civil case if the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals shall determine that an appeal is frivolous, it shall award just damages and single or double costs to the appellee. (Amended effective April 18, 2007.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 38 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 38, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXVIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Unlike Fed.R.App.P. 38, this rule applies only to civil appeals, and does not apply to criminal cases. The rule applies when an appeal is frivolous. There is no requirement that the appeal have resulted in delay.

The damages to be awarded may include attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred by an appellee. Interest is treated separately and is governed by Rule 37.

Damages improper.

In an employment termination case in which a school district moved for sanctions pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 38, while the former teacher's aide's arguments were without merit, they were not frivolous. Davis v. Biloxi Pub. Sch. Dist., 43 So. 3d 1135 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 49 So. 3d 106, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 487 (Miss. 2010).

Given the mother's 17-year delay in seeking to enforce the provisions of the judgment of divorce, her failure to cite any authority in support of her meager request for attorney fees on appeal, and the appellate court's finding that the father's appeal was not frivolous, pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 38, the appellate court declined to award the mother any additional attorney fees for her appeal. Durr v. Durr, 912 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Considering the patient's complaint, the appellate court could not say that she had no chance of success; the doctors were granted summary judgment because the patient did not establish the applicable standard of care by expert testimony, not because they did not have a potentially viable claim, as such, the appellate court did not find the appeal to be frivolous, and it would not award damages according to Miss. R. App. P. 38. Hodges v. Lucas, 904 So. 2d 1098 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where in the defendants' answer to a complaint to evict they initially asserted that they had an agreement to purchase the property in question, protested that they were subject to eviction and, additionally, presented testimony in circuit court regarding a letter from the plaintffs' counsel in an attempt to support their argument, their appeal with regard to the issue was not so frivolous as to support an award of damages and attorney fees. Vice v. Hinton, 811 So. 2d 335 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Appellants were not entitled to damages under M.R.A.P. 38 or § 11-3-23 as they were the parties that initiated the appeal and judgment was being entered against them. Estate of Hudkleston v.

Horn, 755 So. 2d 435 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Damages proper.

In a case in which a circuit court denied a husband's and wife's motion to vacate a default judgment and their counterclaim for wrongful garnishment against a collection agency, and the collection agency asked for damages against the husband and wife pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 38 for filing a frivolous appeal, the appeal was frivolous since the husband and wife failed to timely contest their liability or the garnishment of the wife's paycheck. Both the justice court and the circuit court rejected the husband's and wife's arguments in proficient, written opinions. Laffitte v. Southern Fin. Sys., 30 So. 3d 1236 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 29 So. 3d 774, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 153 (Miss. 2010).

In a wrongful death action filed by the parents of two passengers who were killed during a police pursuit of the driver of a stolen vehicle, the parents were ordered to pay the county's attorney fees that were incurred in defending the action on appeal because the appeal was frivolous, as they had no hope of success against the county; the parents were only able to construct a one-sentence argument against the county and the undisputed facts showed that the passengers were involved in criminal activity at the time of the death, namely fleeing from the police in a stolen vehicle. McCoy v. City of Florence, 949 So. 2d 69 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 949 So. 2d 37, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 113 (Miss. 2007).

Where a mother's appeal was frivolous and was filed merely to harass her ex-husband while not furthering the interests of their child, double costs were assessed as an appropriate sanction against her. Foster v. Foster, 788 So. 2d 779 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Prisoners.

Inmate and his legal assistant, who filed petition for writ of replevin seeking possession of items seized by officers from inmate's home, were subject to sanctions where appeal was found to be frivolous and designed to harass the individual officers. Ivy v. Merchant, 666 So. 2d 445 (Miss. 1995).

Illustrative cases.

In a case where a mother sought to hold a father in contempt for failing to pay child support allegedly owed under a temporary order entered in 1988, sanctions were not awarded to the father after it was determined that the mother was precluded from relitigating this issue because her appeal was not frivolous. Forrest v. McCoy, 996 So. 2d 158 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case arising from the revocation of a bail bond, a surety was awarded costs, but no additional monetary sanctions for a frivolous appeal. Stringer v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 969 So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 552 U.S. 1306, 128 S. Ct. 1925, 170 L. Ed. 2d 741, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 3407, 76 U.S.L.W. 3556 (2008).

While the chancellor found that the conduct of the tenants in defacing leased property justified punitive damages, the appellate court stated that it found nothing frivolous in the tenant's appeal; thus, the landlord's request for attorney fees for the appeal of the case was denied. Check Cashers Express, Inc. v. Crowell, 950 So. 2d 1035 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

The court awarded further sanctions to the defendant in an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on an allegation that the plaintiff's former wife set out on a course of conduct calculated to lead to the total destruction of the parent-child/grandparent-child relationship between the parties' child and her father's side of the family where the trial court found that the plaintiffs had no hope of sucess in the case and there was no justiciable issue on appeal. Little v. Collier, 759 So. 2d 454 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 39. Execution of judgment in criminal cases.

(a) Execution of judgment after appeal in cases where the appellant is at liberty on appearance bond. After the submission of a felony case in which the appellant is at liberty on an appearance bond, the appropriate appellate court will determine a date for rendition of its judgment and will so notify appellant. On the day so fixed, appellant shall surrender at 12:30 p.m. to the sheriff of the county in which he was convicted, and the sheriff shall notify the clerk of the Supreme Court no later than 1:00 p.m. whether the appellant has surrendered. On failure of the appellant to surrender to the sheriff as required, the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals will forfeit the bail bond. Bail shall not be allowed after affirmance in the appellate court, except as provided in Rule 41.

(b) Procedure following issuance of mandate in criminal cases. In all criminal cases in which a judgment is to be executed, except those in which a sentence of death has been imposed, the circuit clerk of the county of conviction shall, within 30 days after receipt of the mandate, notify the clerk of the Supreme Court in writing of the status of execution of the judgment. In any case where the judgment has not been executed, the clerk of the Supreme Court shall promptly notify in writing both the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals and the Attorney General.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 39 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 39, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXVIII-LXXIX (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 39 continues the practice under former rules.

Rule 40. Motion for rehearing.

(a) Time for filing; content; answer; action by court if granted. A motion for rehearing may be filed within 14 days after a decision is handed down on the merits of a case by the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals. The motion shall state with particularity the points of law or fact which, in the opinion of the movant, the court has overlooked or misapprehended and shall contain such argument in support of the motion as movant desires to present. The motion for rehearing should be used to call attention to specific errors of law or fact which the opinion is thought to contain; the motion for rehearing is not intended to afford an opportunity for a mere repetition of the argument already considered by the court. Oral argument in support of the motion will not be permitted.

A motion for rehearing in the Court of Appeals shall be heard by the panel which rendered the judgment in the matter unless the Court of Appeals shall vote to consider the matter en banc.

Within seven days after the filing of a motion for rehearing, any other party may, but need not, file and serve a written response in opposition to the motion. Failure to file a response within this time period waives the right to respond but does not confess the arguments made in the motion. If a motion for rehearing is granted, the appropriate court may make a final disposition of the cause without reargument or may restore it to the calendar for reargument or resubmission or may make such other orders as are deemed appropriate under the circumstances in a particular case.

After a motion for rehearing has been denied, no further motion for rehearing shall be filed by any party. After a motion for rehearing has been granted, a party has the option of filing a second motion for rehearing within 14 days after the judgment on rehearing.

(b) Form of motion; length. The motion shall be in a form prescribed by Rule 32 and in cases decided by the Supreme Court an original and ten (10) copies shall be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, and in cases decided by the Court of Appeals an original and eleven (11) copies shall be filed. The Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals may require that additional copies be furnished. The motion shall be served as prescribed by Rule 31 for the service and filing of briefs. Except by permission of the appropriate court a motion for rehearing shall not exceed twenty-five (25) pages. If responses are filed, they shall be filed with like numbers of copies.

(c) Disrespectful language stricken. Any motion for rehearing containing language showing disrespect or contempt for either appellate court will be stricken, and the appropriate court will take such further action as it may deem proper. (Adopted to govern matters filed on or after January 1, 1995; amended June 21, 1996; amended July 15, 1996; amended effective October 15, 1998; amended effective January 1, 1999; amended effective April 13, 2000; amended April 4, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective April 13, 2000, Rule 40(a) and the Comment were amended to allow a second motion for rehearing after a first motion for rehearing has been granted. So. 2d (West Miss. Cases 2000).

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 40 and the Comment were amended to redesignate rehearing "petitions" as "motions." In addition, the Comment was further amended to provide that "Motions for rehearing are limited to cases on the merits and motions which have been decided by panels of the Court or by the court sitting en banc. Motions for rehearing are not entertained upon motions decided by a single justice." 673-678 So.2d XLI-XLII and LXXXVIII (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss. R. App. P. 40 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 40, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. Subsection (a) was further amended to provide that any response to a petition for rehearing must be filed within 7, not 14, days of the filing of the petition. 644-647 So.2d LXXIX-LXXX (West Miss. Cases 1994).

COMMENT

Rule 40 is modeled on Fed.R.App.P. 40 and the former rules of the Supreme Court. Following federal practice, the rule provides that the motion is to be written in the form of a brief, and no separate brief is required. The rule also provides an automatic time period in which to respond to a motion for rehearing if desired; however, the appropriate court may call for additional response on specific issues. A motion for rehearing should be distinguished from a motion for clarification or correction of opinion. Such a motion, filed in the manner and form prescribed by Rule 27, does not seek to alter the judgment of the court, and will not stay the mandate. Motions for rehearing are limited to cases on the merits and to motions as expressly allowed under Rule 27(g).

[Amended June 21, 1996; amended effective April 13, 2000.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Non-meritorious motions.
Scope of rehearing.

Non-meritorious motions.

Two out of three of appellant's propositions were mere repetitions of his original argument, and where both issues had been thoroughly considered and determined to be without merit, they did not need to be readdressed by the court. Brandau v. State, 662 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. 1995).

Scope of rehearing.

After defendant's death penalty sentence was vacated and remanded for resentencing, a trial court properly determined that it did not have discretion to consider defendant's ex post facto claim because the execution of orders issued by the supreme court was a purely ministerial act, and lower courts had no authority to alter or amend them; instead, defendant's claim should have been raised in a response to a motion to the supreme court under Miss. R. App. P. 27(a), or in the alternative in a motion for reconsideration of a motion under Miss. R. App. P. 27(h) or in a motion for rehearing under Miss. R. App. P. 40. Foster v. State, 961 So. 2d 670 (Miss. 2007).

Wife could not have raised the issue of restitution before the appellate court in a motion for rehearing because there was absolutely no evidence in that record concerning any actions by the parties in response to that part of the judgment which ordered the wife to pay the mortgage. Because the wife's payment to the bank in accordance with the chancery court's order was not in the record, the issue of restitution was not a proper basis for a motion for rehearing. Therefore, res judicata does not apply to the issue of restitution. Dunn v. Dunn, 853 So. 2d 1150 (Miss. 2003).

The purpose of a motion for rehearing is to provide the court an opportunity to correct any errors on issues already presented and decided; however, a rehearing does not encompass a new set of arguments and, therefore, it is improper for a party to raise a new legal or factual argument in a motion for rehearing. White v. State, 761 So. 2d 221 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 41. Issuance of mandates; stay of mandate.

(a) Date of issuance: Supreme Court. The mandate of the Supreme Court shall issue 21 days after the entry of judgment unless the time is shortened or enlarged by order. The mandate shall consist of both a certified copy of the judgment of the Supreme Court with any direction as to costs, and a copy of the Court's written opinion, if any. The timely filing of a motion for rehearing will stay the mandate until disposition of the motion, unless otherwise ordered by the Court. If the motion is denied, the mandate will issue seven (7) days after entry of the order denying the motion unless the time is shortened or enlarged by order.

(b) Date of issuance: Court of Appeals. Unless otherwise ordered, the mandate of the Court of Appeals shall issue 21 days after the latest of: the entry of judgment; the disposition of a timely motion for rehearing; or the denial or dismissal of a petition for certiorari review in the Supreme Court. If the Mississippi Supreme Court grants certiorari review, the mandate shall issue in accordance with Rule 41(a).

(c) Stay of mandate pending application for certiorari. A stay of the mandate pending application to the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari may be granted upon motion, reasonable notice of which shall be given to all parties. The stay shall not exceed 90 days unless the period is extended for cause shown. If during the period of the stay there is filed with the clerk of Supreme Court a notice from the clerk of the United States Supreme Court that the party who has obtained the stay has filed a petition for the writ in that Court, the stay shall continue until final disposition by that Court. Upon the filing of a copy of an order of the United States Supreme Court denying the petition for writ of certiorari, the mandate shall issue immediately. A bond or other security may be required as a condition to the grant or continuance of a stay of the mandate.

(d) Stay of mandate and release in criminal cases. Stay of the mandate in criminal cases shall be governed by Rule 41(c), but, in addition, the petitioner must set forth good cause for the stay and clearly demonstrate that a substantial federal question previously presented on appeal is to be presented to the United States Supreme Court. In order to obtain release, the petitioner must also post a fully executed and approved appearance bond in a penal sum equal to double the amount of the bond upon which the petitioner was released from custody after conviction.

(e) Motion to amend or correct mandate; time for filing. Any motion to amend or correct the mandate may be filed within fourteen (14) days after the court has issued the mandate or any addition to the mandate. (Amended February 10, 1995; amended June 21, 1996; amended effective September 30, 2004 to allow the stay of a mandate under Rule 41(c) for 90 days.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective September 18, 1997, Rule 41(d) was amended to effect a technical change. 669-701 So. 2d XXX (West Miss. Cases 1997).

Effective June 21, 1996, Rule 41 was amended to redesignate rehearing "petitions" as "motions." 673-678 So.2d XLIII (West Miss. Cases 1996).

Effective February 10, 1995, Rule 41(b) was entirely rewritten. 648 So.2d XXXII-XXXIII (West Miss.Cases 1995).

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 41 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 41, adding a new subsection (b) to govern the issuance of mandates by the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXX-LXXXI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996; amended effective July 1, 1998; amended March 31, 1999.]

COMMENT

Rule 41 is based upon Fed.R.App.P. 41. Under Rule 41(a) and (b) the appropriate appellate court issues a formal mandate which includes a certified copy of the judgment with any direction as to costs and a copy of the written opinion, if any. The mandate must correctly and adequately reflect the decision and judgment of the Court. Deposit Guaranty National Bank v. E.Q. Smith Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 396 So. 2d 6 (Miss. 1981).

Subsection (c) is based upon Fed.R.App.P. 41(b).

Under subsection (d), a motion for a stay of the issuance of the mandate in a criminal case will not be granted unless the petition sets forth good cause for the stay and clearly demonstrates that a substantial question previously presented on appeal is to be presented to the United States Supreme Court. A motion for a stay of the issuance of the mandate in such a criminal appeal shall not be granted simply upon request. A party is no longer required to file a copy of the party's certiorari petition prior to obtaining release. However, the motion for stay must demonstrate that a substantial federal question exists, and the party must obtain a notice that the certiorari petition has been filed in order to obtain an extension of the stay and release beyond 90 days.

Rule 42. Voluntary dismissal.

(a) Dismissal in the lower court. If an appeal has been perfected in accordance with these rules but has not been docketed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, the appeal may be dismissed by the lower court upon the filing in either the trial court or the appellate court of a stipulation for dismissal signed by all parties or their attorneys.

(b) Dismissal in the appellate court. After the appeal has been docketed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, an appeal may be dismissed on motion of the appellant upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties or fixed by the Supreme Court or, if the case has been assigned to the Court of Appeals, by the Court of Appeals. If the parties to an appeal or other proceeding or their attorneys agree that the proceeding be dismissed, they may file a joint motion to dismiss specifying the terms as to the payment of costs and that all fees have been paid.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 42 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 42, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXXI-LXXXII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Subdivision (a) of Rule 42 is modeled on Fed.R.App.P. 42(a). It departs from previous practice and procedure in that the lower court may dismiss an appeal which has been perfected in the lower court, but not yet docketed with the Supreme Court, where all parties or their attorneys sign a stipulation of dismissal. However, because an appeal is docketed when the notice of appeal is filed with the Supreme Court clerk, see Rule 13(a), the circumstances in which such a dismissal can take place should be rare.

Section (b) is a restatement of existing case law in Mississippi regarding voluntary dismissal of an appeal. It reiterates the long recognized rule that while a voluntary dismissal of an appeal will usually be granted, the appellate court may have special reasons to refuse to grant the motion for a voluntary dismissal filed by the appellant, and further recognizes that an appellant's right to dismiss an appeal is not absolute, but subject to the discretion of the court. See Wolf v. Miss. Valley Trust & Co., 130 Miss. 144, 93 So. 581 (1922). Once an appeal is voluntarily dismissed, no further appeal may be brought. Miss. Code Ann. § 11-3-15 (1991).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Res judicata effect.

Where a father entered into a stipulation to dismiss a driver from a negligence case with prejudice, his minor son was unable to assert the same cause of action against the driver when he reached the age of majority, pursuant to the doctrine of res judicata. Taylor v. Taylor, 835 So. 2d 60 (Miss. 2003).

Rule 43. Substitution of parties.

(a) Death of a party. If a party dies after a notice of appeal is filed or while a proceeding is otherwise pending, the personal representative of the deceased party may be substituted as a party on motion filed by the representative or by any party with the clerk of the Supreme Court. The motion of a party shall be served upon the representative in accordance with the provisions of Rule 25. If the deceased party has no representative, any party may suggest the death on the record and proceedings shall then be had as the appropriate appellate court may direct. If a party against whom an appeal may be taken dies after entry of a judgment or order in the lower court but before a notice of appeal is filed, an appellant may proceed as if death had not occurred. After the notice of appeal is filed, substitution shall be effected in the appellate court in accordance with this Rule 43(a). If a party entitled to appeal shall die before filing a notice of appeal, the notice of appeal may be filed by that party's personal representative, or, if there is no personal representative, by that party's attorney of record within the time prescribed by these rules. After the notice of appeal is filed, substitution shall be effected in the appellate court in accordance with this Rule 43(a).

(b) Substitution for other causes. If substitution for a party in either appellate court is necessary for any reason other than death, substitution shall be effected in accordance with the procedure prescribed in Rule 43(a).

(c) Public officers: death or separation from office.

(1) Substitution. When a public officer is a party in an official capacity to an appeal or other proceeding in either appellate court and, during its pendency, the officer dies, resigns, or otherwise ceases to hold office, the action does not abate and the public officer's successor is automatically substituted as a party. Proceedings following the substitution shall be in the name of the substituted party, but any misnomer not affecting the substantial rights of the parties shall be disregarded. An order of substitution may be entered at any time, but failure to enter such an order shall not affect the substitution.

(2) Use of title. When a public officer is a party to an appeal or other proceeding in an official capacity, that public officer may be described as a party by the public officer's official title rather than by name, but the court may require the public officer's name be added.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 43 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 43, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXXII-LXXXIII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective July 1, 1994, the Comment to Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 43 was amended to delete references to repealed statutes and material concerning the transition from statutory procedures to Rule practice, and to effect attendant technical changes. 632-635 So.2d LIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 43 is patterned after Fed.R.App.P. 43. It applies to civil cases only, and not to criminal cases. Cf. Berryhill v. State, 492 So. 2d 288 (Miss. 1986) (dismissing criminal appeal on death of defendant).

When the party against whom an appeal is taken dies after judgment in the lower court but before the appeal has been perfected, the appellant may proceed as if death had not occurred and substitute under Rule 43 after the appeal has been perfected.

Likewise, the personal representative of a deceased party who dies before perfecting the appeal may file the notice of appeal. If there is no representative, the attorney of record may perfect the appeal and substitute a representative after perfection. However, the perfection still must be timely in accordance with Rule 4 or 5.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Death of a party.

In a medical negligence action, substitution of the parties was granted under Miss. R. App. P. 43(a) where the patient died during the pendency of the action in the trial court, the patient's husband incorporated a substitution motion in an amended complaint, but the trial court never ruled on the motion, and then the husband died during the pendency of the appeal. Meadows v. Blake, 36 So. 3d 1225 (Miss. 2010).

Rule 44. Questions concerning validity of statutes and orders.

(a) Service. If the validity of any statute, executive order or regulation, municipal ordinance, franchise or written directive of any governmental officer, agent, or body is raised in the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, and the state, municipal corporation, or governmental body which enacted or promulgated it is not a party to the proceeding, the party raising such question shall serve a copy of its brief, which shall clearly set out the question raised, on the Attorney General, the city attorney, or other chief legal officer of the governmental body involved.

(b) Right to respond. The state, municipal corporation, or governmental body shall, within the time allowed for the filing of a response to the brief, be entitled to file a response and may subsequently be heard orally in the discretion of the court.

(c) Necessity. Except by special order of the court to which the case is assigned, in the absence of such notice neither the Supreme Court nor the Court of Appeals will decide the question until the notice and right to respond contemplated by this rule has been given to the appropriate governmental body.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 44 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 44, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXXIII-LXXXIV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 44 is based on Fed.R.App.P. 44 and Ala.R.App.P. 44. Failure to give notice is an omission which may be cured. Subsection (c) permits action to proceed in the case without notice by special order if the court determines that urgent action is necessary or that the challenged statute, order, or directive is so patently invalid that no response need be required from the affected body. Also, the governmental body may waive its right to respond.

The appearance of the governmental body will ordinarily be in accord with the provisions of Rule 29 concerning an amicus curiae. Pursuant to Rule 25, the certificate of service of the party raising the question of validity should reflect compliance with this rule.

The term "validity" is intended to be broad enough to encompass the method of enactment as well as the constitutionality and authority for any statute, ordinance or regulation. It does not include mere questions of construction and interpretation. This rule applies not only to appeals, but also to any extraordinary proceeding before the court. A provision for notice to the Attorney General in trial proceedings is found in M.R.C.P. 24(d).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Procedure.

Preservation for review.

Unemployment compensation claimant's constitutional argument on appeal was procedurally barred because his argument was unsupported by citation to authority and he did not provide notice to the attorney general under Miss. R. Civ. P. 24(d) and Miss. R. App. P. 44(a) that the constitutionality of a statute was being challenged; therefore, he was procedurally barred from advancing his constitutional argument on appeal. Grehan v. Miss. Empl. Sec. Comm'n, 918 So. 2d 774 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Appellant's failure to challenge the constitutionality of Miss. Code Ann. § 11-46-13(1) with the trial court or to give notice to the attorney general precluded the Supreme Court from considering the issue on appeal. Donaldson v. Covington County, 846 So. 2d 219 (Miss. 2003).

Procedure.

Supposed "notice" to a special assistant attorney general is notsufficient under Miss. R. Civ. P. 24(d) or Miss. R. App. P. 44; therefore, ahospital was procedurally barred from bringing constitutional challenges toMiss. Code Ann. § 41-7-191(16) under Miss. Const. art. 4, § 87, Miss.Const. art. 3, § 14, and the Fourteenth Amendment where there was no notice to the Mississippi Attorney General. Oktibbeha County Hosp. v. Miss. State Dep't of Health, 956 So. 2d 207 (Miss. 2007).

Because the father failed to raise his constitutionality challenge to Miss. Code Ann. § 91-1-15(3)(c) by providing notice to the attorney general in the trial court, the appellate court declined to address the issue on appeal. Tew v. Estate of Doe, 859 So. 2d 347 (Miss. 2003).

Estate administrator failed to comply with the rule and the constitutionality issue of the statute was barred, because it was not raised in the trial court and because the attorney general's office was not properly notified. Corey v. Skelton, 834 So. 2d 681 (Miss. 2003).

Rule 45. Duties of the clerk.

(a) General provisions. The clerk of the Supreme Court shall take the oath and give the bond required by law, and shall serve as clerk for the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals shall be deemed always open for the purpose of filing any proper paper, of issuing and returning process, and of making motions and orders. The office of the clerk shall be open during business hours on all days except Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays specified in Rule 26.

(b) The docket; other records required. The clerk shall keep a book or record known as the docket and shall enter each case in it. Cases shall be assigned consecutive file numbers. All papers filed with the clerk and all process, orders, and judgments shall be entered chronologically in the docket assigned to the case. Entries shall be brief but shall show the nature of each paper filed or judgment or order entered. The entry of an order or judgment shall show the date the entry is made. The clerk shall keep a suitable index of cases contained in the docket.

The clerk shall prepare, under the direction of the court, a list of cases awaiting argument or submission.

The clerk shall keep such other books and records as may be required by the Supreme Court.

(c) Notice of orders or judgment. Immediately upon the entry of an order or judgment, the clerk shall serve a notice of entry by mail upon each party to the proceeding, and shall make a note in the docket of the mailing. Service on a party represented by counsel shall be made on counsel.

(d) Custody of records and papers. The clerk shall have custody of the records and papers of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Appeals. The clerk shall not permit any original record or paper to be taken from the clerk's custody during the pendency of the appeal except by or on behalf of a party. After the completion of the time for briefing prescribed by Rule 31 and before decision, no party will be permitted to withdraw the record except upon motion accompanied by an affidavit stating that the trial court record retained under Rule 11(e) is not available. After a mandate has been issued, any member of the bar in good standing may withdraw from the clerk's office any record after paying in advance a fee of $15.00. Incarcerated pro se litigants may withdraw from the clerk's office the appellate record in their cause after paying in advance a fee of $15.00. A reasonable mailing and handling fee of $10.00 will be assessed in the event the record requires mailing to the requesting party. Records containing more than 10 volumes will be assessed actual mailing cost. No record shall be held out of the clerk's office more than 90 days. If the record is held out past the 90 day period, a record delinquency fee will be assessed in the amount of $50.00. The clerk shall maintain a separate accounting dealing solely with records and documents which have been withdrawn from the clerk's files in accordance with this rule. The clerk shall advise the Supreme Court in writing on the first Monday of each month of any records, briefs, or papers which have not been returned in compliance with this rule. The Supreme Court may also take such other action with respect to records as the circumstances warrant, and may require any party failing to return a record to pay the full cost of reproducing the record from other sources. A copy of this rule shall be attached to any records or documents removed from the clerk's office indicating the estimated cost for reproduction. This rule does not apply to those cases which the Supreme Court has delivered to the Mississippi Department of Archives and History pursuant to Section 9-3-25 of the Mississippi Code of 1972, for which cases the Mississippi Department of Archives and History is solely responsible. (Adopted to govern matters on or after January 1, 1995; amended January 3, 2002; amended effective July 1, 2010.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss. R. App. P. 45 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 45, providing that the clerk of the Supreme Court shall serve as the clerk for the Court of Appeals. Subsection (b) was further amended to effect a technical change concerning the docket. 644-647 So.2d LXXXIV-LXXXV (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 45 follows Fed.R.App.P. 45 and prior state practice.

The Rule provides that the clerk of the Supreme Court also serves as the clerk of the Court of Appeals. This is consistent with the general policy under which the administrative structure and employees of the Supreme Court support and serve the Court of Appeals, and consistent with the Supreme Court's general authority to set administrative policies and procedures for the Court of Appeals. Of course, references throughout these rules to the clerk of the Supreme Court include any duly appointed deputy clerk. See Miss Code Ann. § 9-4-7(2) (Supp. 1994).

Rule 46. Admission, withdrawal, and discipline of attorneys.

(a) Admission to practice. Attorneys who have not been admitted to practice in the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals shall not be permitted to argue orally, or file briefs or any paper in any cause in either Court. Upon presentation to the clerk of a certified copy of the order of a trial court admitting an attorney to practice in this state, together with a certificate of good standing from the Executive Director of the Mississippi Bar, the clerk may admit such attorneys to practice before the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals and administer the oath to each such attorney.

(b) Admission of foreign attorneys pro hac vice.

i. "Administrative agency" shall include any agency, department, board or commission of the State of Mississippi, or any county, city, public school district or other political subdivision of the State of Mississippi.

ii. "Appearance" shall include the appending or allowing the appending of the foreign attorney's name on any pleading or other paper filed or served, or appearing personally before a court or administrative agency or participating in a deposition or other proceeding in which testimony is given. Presentation of uncontested matters to administrative agencies does not constitute appearances as the term is used in this Rule 46(b). Appearance of a foreign attorney shall commence with the first appearance and continue until final determination or until an order permitting the foreign attorney to withdraw has been issued.

iii. "General practice of law" shall be deemed to include, when applied to a foreign attorney, appearances by the foreign attorney in more than five (5) separate unrelated causes or other matters before the courts or administrative agencies of this state within the twelve (12) months immediately preceding the appearance in question.

iv. "Foreign attorney" shall mean an attorney licensed to practice law and in good standing in another state, the District of Columbia, or other American jurisdiction, but not licensed and in good standing to practice law in Mississippi.

v. "Local attorney" shall mean an attorney who is licensed and in good standing to practice law in Mississippi.

(2) Appearance of a foreign attorney pro hac vice permitted. A foreign attorney shall not appear in any cause except as allowed pro hac vice under this Rule 46(b). A foreign attorney who is of good moral character and familiar with the ethics, principles, practices, customs, and usages of the legal profession in this state, may, subject to the provisions of this Rule 46(b), appear as counsel pro hac vice in a particular cause before any court or administrative agency in this state upon compliance with the conditions stated in this subdivision.

(3) Foreign attorney appearing pro hac vice subject to local jurisdiction. A foreign attorney appearing as counsel pro hac vice before any court or administrative agency of this state shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state in any matter arising out of the attorney's conduct in such proceedings. The foreign attorney shall study and comply with the standards of professional conduct required of members of the Mississippi Bar and shall be subject to the disciplinary jurisdiction of the courts of this state, of the disciplinary tribunals of the Mississippi Bar, and of the Mississippi Board of Bar Admissions with respect to any acts occurring during the course of such appearance. A foreign attorney who has been found in an appropriate disciplinary proceeding to have advertised services in violation of Rule 7.2 of the Mississippi Rules of Professional Conduct, or who is employed by or is a member of a firm which has been so found, shall not be granted leave to appear pro hac vice before the courts or administrative agencies of this state.

(4) Association of local attorney. No foreign attorney may appear pro hac vice before any court or administrative agency of this state unless the foreign attorney has associated in that cause a local attorney. The name of the associated local attorney shall appear on all notices, orders, pleadings, and other papers filed in the cause. The local attorney shall personally appear and participate in all trials, and, unless specifically excused from such appearance by the court or administrative agency, in all pretrial conferences, hearings, other proceedings conducted in open court and all depositions or other proceedings in which testimony is given in this state. By associating with a foreign attorney in a particular cause, the local counsel accepts joint and several responsibility with such foreign attorney to the client, to opposing parties and counsel, and to the court or administrative agency in all matters arising from that particular cause.

(5) Verified application, clerk's statement and filing fees. A foreign attorney desiring to appear pro hac vice before any court or administrative agency of this state shall file with the subject court or administrative agency and with the Clerk of the Supreme Court (1) a verified application and (2) a statement obtained from the Clerk of the Supreme Court indicating all causes or other matters in which the foreign attorney previously requested leave to appear as counsel pro hac vice showing the date and disposition of each request. Such application and statement shall be accompanied by a certificate of service on all parties in accordance with the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure.

The verified application shall contain the following information:

i. the name of the court or administrative agency before which the foreign attorney desires to appear as counsel pro hac vice;

ii. the style of the cause in which the foreign attorney desires to appear;

iii. the full name, residence address, office address, voice and facsimile telephone numbers, and e-mail address, if any, of the foreign attorney;

iv. each jurisdiction in which the foreign attorney has been admitted and the date of admission;

v. a statement that the foreign attorney: (a) does not maintain an office within this state, or that the foreign attorney is a member of a firm which maintains an office or offices within this state which are staffed, full time, by an attorney or attorneys who are licensed to practice in this state and (b) has not engaged in the general practice of law in this state without being properly admitted and licensed to practice law in this state;

vi. a statement that the foreign attorney is currently licensed in good standing to practice law in each jurisdiction in which the foreign attorney has been admitted or, if the foreign attorney is not currently licensed in good standing to practice law in any jurisdiction in which the foreign attorney has previously been admitted, a full explanation of circumstances;

vii. a statement that the foreign attorney is not currently suspended or disbarred by any jurisdiction in which the foreign attorney has been admitted;

viii. a statement of whether or not the foreign attorney has been the subject of disciplinary action by the bar or courts of any jurisdiction during the preceding five (5) years, and, if so, a full explanation of the circumstances;

ix. a statement that the foreign attorney is of good moral character and familiar with the ethics, principles, practices, customs, and usages of the legal profession in this state;

x. the style and number of each cause, including the name of the court or administrative agency, in which the foreign attorney has appeared as counsel pro hac vice within this state within the immediately preceding 12 months, is presently appearing as counsel pro hac vice, or has requested admission to appear as counsel pro hac vice;

xi. a statement that, unless permitted to withdraw by order of the court or administrative agency, the foreign attorney will continue to represent the client in the cause until the final determination of the cause, and that, with reference to all matters incident to such cause, the foreign attorney consents to the jurisdiction of the courts of the State of Mississippi, of the disciplinary tribunals of the Mississippi Bar, and of the Mississippi Board of Bar Admissions in all respects as if the foreign attorney were a regularly admitted and licensed member of the Mississippi Bar;

xii. the name and office address of the member or members in good standing of the Mississippi Bar whom the foreign attorney has associated in the particular cause; and xiii. the verified application of the foreign attorney for appearance pro hac vice shall also be signed by the associated local attorney, certifying the local attorney's agreement to be associated by the foreign attorney in the particular cause.

Simultaneously with the filing of the application, the foreign attorney shall pay to The Mississippi Bar the sum of $200 which will be used by the Bar to provide legal services to the indigent, and shall certify to the court or agency and to the Clerk of the Supreme Court that such payment has been made, and shall pay to the Clerk of the Supreme Court the customary miscellaneous docket fee as provided in Miss. Code Ann. § 25-7-3. In cases involving indigent clients, the court or agency may waive the filing fees for good cause shown.

(6) Proceedings on application of foreign attorney to appear as counsel pro hac vice. No hearing on an application to appear pro hac vice is required except upon motion of a party or where the court considers such a hearing to be desirable. Upon motion of a party opposing such appearance, or on the court's motion, a hearing may, in the discretion of the judge, be held to determine whether the foreign attorney has complied with Rule 46(b).

No hearing on an application to appear pro hac vice is required except upon motion of a party or where the court considers such a hearing to be desirable. Upon motion of a party opposing such appearance, or on the court's motion, a hearing may, in the discretion of the judge, be held to determine whether the foreign attorney has complied with Rule 46(b).

(7) Order authorizing appearance. A foreign attorney shall not appear as counsel pro hac vice before any court or administrative agency until the foreign attorney certifies to the court or administrative agency that the foreign attorney has provided a copy of the order authorizing such appearance to the Clerk of the Supreme Court.

(8) Prohibition of general practice of law in Mississippi under pro hac vice privilege.

i. General Prohibition. No foreign attorney shall appear as counsel pro hac vice before any court or administrative agency of this state if the foreign attorney: (a) maintains an office within this state, unless the foreign attorney is a member of a firm which maintains an office or offices within this state which are staffed, full time, by an attorney or attorneys who are licensed to practice in this state or (b) has engaged in the general practice of law in this state without being properly admitted and licensed to practice law in this state.

ii. General Practice. Appearances by a foreign attorney before the courts or administrative agencies of this state in more than five (5) separate unrelated causes or other matters within the twelve (12) months immediately preceding the appearance in question shall be deemed the general practice of law in this state, which may be performed only by an attorney properly admitted and in good standing as a member of the Mississippi Bar. Appearance of a foreign attorney shall commence with the first appearance and continue until final determination on the merits or until the foreign attorney has obtained an order permitting him to withdraw.

iii. Exception for Law Teachers. The limitations in this subdivision (b)(8) shall not apply to a foreign attorney employed full-time as a law school teacher by a law school located in this state, provided that such law teacher must be in good standing in the jurisdictions in which the law teacher is admitted and must associate a local attorney in order to appear.

(9) Suspension or disbarment terminates permission to appear pro hac vice.

i. Foreign Attorney. Permission for a foreign attorney to appear pro hac vice under the provisions of this rule shall terminate upon such attorney's suspension or disbarment in any jurisdiction in which the foreign attorney has been admitted. The foreign attorney shall have the duty to promptly report to the court or administrative agency of this state before which the foreign attorney is appearing any disciplinary action which has been taken in any other jurisdiction.

ii. Local Attorney. In the event that the local attorney associated by a foreign attorney in a particular case is suspended, disbarred or incapacitated by virtue of health or otherwise from the practice of law in the State of Mississippi, the foreign attorney shall, before proceeding further in the pending cause, associate a new local attorney who is in good standing to practice law in this state and shall file an amendment to the verified application required by subdivision (b)(5).

(10) Exclusions.

i. Appearance Pro Se. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to prohibit any attorney from appearing before any court or administrative agency of this state on the attorney's own behalf in any civil or criminal matter.

ii. United States Attorneys. Attorneys representing the United States government in matters before the courts or administrative agencies of this state shall be permitted to appear on behalf of the United States government and to represent its interest in any matter in which the United States government is interested without the association of local counsel.

(11) Enforcement.

i. By Clerks and Filing Officers. No court clerk or filing officer of any administrative agency of this state shall accept or file any pleadings or other papers from a foreign attorney who has not complied with the requirements of this rule. Any pleadings or other papers filed in violation of this rule shall be stricken from the record upon the motion of any party or by the court or administrative agency sua sponte. A request for the issuance of a subpoena pursuant to Rule 45(a)(3) of the Rules of Civil Procedure is not subject to this Rule.

ii. By Courts and Administrative Agencies. The courts and administrative agencies of this state shall have the duty and authority to enforce the provisions of this rule by denying violators the right to appear. If a foreign attorney engages in professional misconduct during the course of a special appearance, the judge or chief officer of the administrative agency before which the foreign attorney is appearing may revoke permission to appear pro hac vice and may cite the foreign attorney for contempt. In addition, the judge or administrative officer shall refer the matter to the disciplinary counsel of the Mississippi Bar for appropriate action by the disciplinary tribunal.

iii. Violation. Violation of this rule is deemed to be the unlawful practice of law. The Mississippi Bar, or its designated representatives, shall have the right to take appropriate action to enforce the provisions of this rule under the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 73-51-1 (1989).

iv. Cumulative Enforcement. Provisions of this rule shall be cumulative with all other statutes and rules providing remedies against the unauthorized practice of law within the State of Mississippi.

(c) Withdrawal. An attorney who appears before the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals in an appeal or other proceeding may withdraw from the representation only with the approval of the appropriate court. If an attorney desires to withdraw, the attorney shall file a motion giving the attorney's reasons for desiring to withdraw and requesting approval of the appropriate court. Such motion shall be served upon the attorney's client and upon all parties. The motion shall be accompanied by an appearance form of substitute counsel or a signed statement by the client indicating that the client agrees to proceed pro se, or shall explain why neither can be obtained. If the motion is accompanied by a signed statement by a client in a criminal appeal, then pursuant to Rule 6(c), the appellate court shall request that the trial court determine whether the appellant knowingly and intelligently waives counsel on appeal.

(d) Disciplinary power of the court over attorneys. Every petition, motion, brief, or other paper filed by a party represented by an attorney shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name, whose address shall be stated. The appellate court may, after reasonable notice and an opportunity to show cause to the contrary, and after hearing, if requested by the attorney, take any appropriate disciplinary action against any attorney who practices before it for conduct unbecoming a member of the bar, or for failure to comply with these rules or any order of the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals, or for filing any frivolous petition, motion, brief, or other paper.

(e) Military legal assistance program.

(1) A lawyer admitted to the practice of law in a state or territory of the United States, other than Mississippi, who is serving in or employed by the armed services as an attorney and is otherwise authorized to provide legal assistance pursuant to 10 U.S. Code § 1044, may apply to the Supreme Court for a certificate as a Registered Military Legal Assistance Attorney in Mississippi to represent clients eligible for legal assistance in the courts and tribunals of this state while the lawyer is employed, stationed, or assigned within Mississippi.

(2) Each applicant for a Registered Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate shall:

(i) file with the clerk of the Supreme Court an application, under oath, upon a form furnished by the clerk;

(ii) furnish a certificate, signed by the presiding judge of the court of last resort, or other appropriate official of the jurisdiction in which the applicant is admitted to practice law, stating that the applicant is licensed to practice law and is an active member in good standing of the bar of such jurisdiction;

(iii) file an affidavit, upon a form furnished by the clerk of the Supreme Court, from the commanding officer, staff judge advocate or chief legal officer of the military base in Mississippi where the applicant is employed, stationed, or assigned, attesting to the fact that the applicant is serving as a lawyer to provide legal services exclusively for the military, that the nature of the applicant's employment or service conforms to the requirements of this rule, and that the commanding officer, staff judge advocate or chief legal officer, or his or her successor, shall notify the clerk of the Supreme Court immediately upon the termination of the applicant's employment or service at the military base.

(3) Upon a finding by the clerk of the Supreme Court that the applicant has produced evidence sufficient to satisfy the clerk that the applicant is a person of honest demeanor and good moral character who possesses the requisite fitness to perform the obligations and responsibilities of a practicing attorney at law and satisfies all other requirements of this rule, the clerk shall notify the applicant that he or she is eligible to be issued a Registered Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate. After the applicant has taken and subscribed to the oaths required of attorneys at law, the clerk shall issue to the applicant a Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate, which shall entitle the applicant to represent clients eligible for legal assistance in the courts and tribunals of this state solely as provided in this rule.

(4) The practice of a lawyer under this rule shall be subject to the limitations and restrictions of 10 U.S.C. § 1044 and the regulations of that lawyer's military service and shall be further limited to: (i) adoptions, (ii) guardianships, (iii) name changes, (iv) divorces, (v) paternity matters, (vi) child custody, visitation, child and spousal support, (vii) landlord-tenant disputes on behalf of tenants, (viii) consumer advocacy cases involving alleged breaches of contract or warranties, repossession, or fraud, (ix) garnishment defenses, (x) probate, (xi) enforcement of rights under the Service members Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. App. § 501 et seq.), (xii) enforcement of rights under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act, 38 U.S.C. § 4301 et seq., and (xiii) such other cases within the discretion of the court or tribunal before which the matter is pending.

(5) All pleadings filed by a legal assistance attorney shall cite this rule, and include the name, complete address and telephone number of the military legal office representing the client, and the name, grade and armed service of the lawyer registered under this rule providing representation.

(6) No lawyer registered under this rule shall (a) undertake to represent any person other than an eligible legal assistance client before a court or tribunal of this state, (b) offer to provide legal services in this state to any person other than as authorized by his or her military service, or (c) hold himself or herself out in this state to be authorized to provide legal services to any person other than as authorized by his or her military service.

(7) Representing clients eligible for legal assistance in the courts or tribunals of this state under this rule shall be deemed the practice of law and shall subject the lawyer to all rules governing the practice of law in Mississippi, including the Mississippi Rules of Professional Conduct and the Rules of Discipline. Jurisdiction of the Mississippi Bar shall continue whether or not the lawyer retains the Registered Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate and irrespective of the lawyer's presence in Mississippi.

(8) Each person receiving a Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate shall be registered with the Mississippi Bar as an active member on the basis of that certificate and shall be subject to the same membership obligations as other active members of the Mississippi Bar, other than the payment of dues and assessments and Continuing Legal Education requirements. A lawyer registered under this rule shall use as his or her address of record with the Mississippi Bar, the military address in Mississippi of the commanding officer, staff judge advocate or chief legal officer which filed the affidavit on the lawyer's behalf.

(9) Each person issued a Military Legal Assistance Attorney Certificate shall promptly report to the Mississippi Bar any changes in employment or military service, any change in bar membership status in any state or territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia where the applicant has been admitted to the practice of law, or the imposition of any disciplinary sanction in a state or territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or by any federal court or agency where the applicant has been admitted to the practice of law.

(10) The limited authority to practice law which may be granted under this rule shall be automatically terminated when (a) the lawyer is no longer employed, stationed, or assigned at the military base in Mississippi from which the affidavit required by this rule was filed, (b) the lawyer has been admitted to the practice of law in this state by examination or pursuant to any other provision of the Rules Governing Admission to the Mississippi Bar, (c) the lawyer fails to comply with any provision of this rule, (d) the lawyer fails to maintain current good standing as an active member of a bar in at least one state or territory of the United States other than Mississippi, or (e) when suspended or disbarred for disciplinary reasons in any state or territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or by any federal court or agency where the lawyer has been admitted to the practice of law.

(f) Pro bono publicus attorneys.

(1) Terminology.

(i) A "pro bono publicus attorney" is: (a) an inactive member of the Mississippi Bar who is not otherwise engaged in the practice of law; or (b) an attorney licensed in a state other than Mississippi who:

will provide free legal services under the supervision of a qualified legal services provider as defined in this rule; is licensed to practice law in at least one state and has no record of public discipline for professional misconduct imposed at any time within the past fifteen years and who did not resign or retire from the practice of law with disciplinary charges pending or in lieu of discipline; and neither asks for nor receives personal compensation of any kind for the legal services rendered under this rule.

(ii) A "qualified legal services provider" for the purposes of this rule is a not-for-profit legal aid organization that is approved by the Mississippi Bar as set forth in this rule. A legal aid organization seeking approval from the Mississippi Bar for purposes of this rule shall file a petition with the Office of General Counsel of the Mississippi Bar certifying that it is a not-for-profit organization and specifically stating:

(a) the structure of the organization and whether it accepts funds from its clients;

(b) the major sources of funds used by the organization;

(c) the criteria used to determine potential clients' eligibility for legal services performed by the organization;

(d) the types of legal and non-legal services performed by the organization;

(e) the names of all members of the Mississippi Bar who are employed by the organization or who regularly perform legal work for the organization; and

(f) the existence of professional liability insurance that will cover the pro bono publicus attorney.

(2) Limitations.

(i) Except for the acts and services performed in association with a qualified legal services provider, a pro bono publicus attorney shall not otherwise engage in the active practice of law.

(ii) The pro bono publicus attorney shall not be paid by the qualified legal services provider, but the qualified legal services provider may reimburse the pro bono publicus attorney for actual expenses incurred while rendering services. The qualified legal services provider shall be entitled to receive any court-awarded attorneys fees for representation rendered by the pro bono publicus attorney. Collection of any money from the client, including but not limited to reimbursements for expenses incurred, shall be handled exclusively by and through the qualified legal services provider.

(iii) An attorney who complies with this rule permitting practice as a pro bono publicus attorney shall not be deemed to be engaged in the unauthorized practice of law as defined by Miss. Code Ann. § 73-3-55 (1972, as amended), the Mississippi Rules of Professional Conduct and pertinent case law.

(3) Duties of pro bono publicus attorney.

Before providing services under the authority of this rule, an attorney shall first present to the Office of General Counsel of the Mississippi Bar an affidavit containing the following:

(i) the attorney's full name, firm name, residence address, principal business address, telephone numbers, jurisdiction or jurisdictions in which the attorney is admitted, and bar identification numbers;

(ii) affirmation that the attorney is an inactive member of the Mississippi Bar or is duly licensed and in good standing and authorized to practice law in at least one state and has no record of public discipline for professional misconduct imposed at any time within the past fifteen years and did not resign or retire from the practice of law with disciplinary charge spending or in lieu of discipline;

(iii) affirmation that in performing all services under the authorization of this rule, the attorney will be acting as a volunteer for a qualified legal services provider;

(iv) affirmation that all services to be performed will be at no charge or expense to the client;

(v) affirmation that the attorney will abide by the Mississippi Rules of Professional Conduct and consents to the jurisdiction of the State of Mississippi for disciplinary action; and

(vi) affirmation that the attorney will not undertake to represent any person other than an eligible legal assistance client for a qualified legal services provider, shall not offer to provide legal assistance in this State to any person or for any matter other than through a qualified legal services provider, and shall not hold himself or herself out in this State to be authorized to provide legal services to any person or for any matter other than through a qualified legal services provider. (Amended effective January 16, 2003; amended effective May 27, 2004 to place the responsibility of obtaining, filing and serving the statement of the Clerk of the Supreme Court with the foreign attorney seeking leave to appear pro hac vice; amended effective January 27, 2005 to provide legal assistance to certain military personnel and their families; amended effective March 24, 2005 to make technical corrections in references to federal laws; amended effective December 14, 2006, to delete the 21-day waiting period for proceedings on application of foreign attorney to appear pro hac vice; amended effective October 18, 2007, to provide for pro bono publicus attorneys; amended effective July 1, 2009; amended effective August 2, 2012.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective as to verified applications for leave to appear pro hac vice filed on or after March 1, 2003, Rule 46(b) and the Comment to Rule 46 were substantially amended to designate the Clerk of the Supreme Court as the central source from which to obtain a record of appearances by foreign attorneys, to enlarge the definition of "appearance," to clarify the definition of "general practice of law," to increase the role of local counsel, and to make other associated changes.

Effective January 1, 1995, Rule 46 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 46, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d LXXXVI-XC (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Effective October 29, 1992, Rule 46(c) was amended to state that an attorney must have the Court's approval to withdraw from representation before the Supreme Court. 603-605 So.2d XLVIII-XLIX (West Miss.Cases 1992).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 46 is based on Fed.R.App.P. 46(c) and the former rules of the Supreme Court. If the verified application required by Rule 46(b)(5) for admission pro hac vice is filed in a trial court or administrative agency, the application should be included in the record on appeal. In such cases, it is not necessary to file a separate application in the Supreme Court. Withdrawal from a criminal case is governed additionally by Rule 6 of these Rules. The Supreme Court has general disciplinary authority over attorneys practicing in this State. See Miss. Code Ann. § 73-3-301 (Supp. 1994). Rule 46(d) recognizes the Court's power to impose sanctions for frivolous pleadings. Cf. M.R.C.P. 11 (sanctions in trial court).

Major amendments to Rule 46(b) were adopted by order entered effective January 16, 2003 made to Rule 46(b). By the terms of the order adopting those amendments, Rule 46(b) as adopted applies to verified applications for leave to appear pro hac vice filed on or after March 1, 2003. Under the 2003 amendments, the Clerk of the Supreme Court was responsible for filing and serving a statement indicating all causes or other matters in which the foreign attorney previously requested leave to appear as counsel pro hac vice and the date and disposition of each request. By further amendment effective May 27, 2004, Rule 46(b)(5) was redrafted and now requires the attorney to obtain, file and serve the Clerk's statement with the verified application.

By the 2003 amendments, Rule 46(b)(1) broadens the previous definition of "appearance," and clarifies the definition of "general practice of law." "Appearance" now includes filing or appearing on "any pleading or other paper filed or served" in the cause or matter, "appearing personally before a court or administrative agency," and "participating in a deposition or other proceeding in which testimony is given."

"General practice of law" is now defined to include appearance as counsel pro hac vice by a foreign attorney in more than five (5) separate and unrelated causes or other matters before the courts or administrative agencies of this state within the 12 months immediately preceding the appearance in question. Consequently, a foreign attorney may not appear as counsel pro hac vice in more than five separate unrelated cases or other matters within any 12 month period, even if representation is terminated, or appear in more than five pending cases or other matters, regardless of when the appearance commenced.

As amended in 2003, Rule 46(b)(4) departs from prior practice and now requires that associated local counsel personally appear and participate in all depositions or other proceedings in which testimony is given in this state, in addition to all trials, pretrial conferences, hearings other proceedings conducted in open court. The local attorney may be specifically excused by the judge from attending proceedings other than trials.

The purpose of Rule 46(f) is to permit and encourage attorneys who do not engage in the active practice of law in Mississippi to provide legal representation to persons who cannot afford private legal services. Under certain circumstances, inactive members of the Mississippi Bar as defined by Miss. Code Ann. § 73-3-120(b) and members of bars in other states may provide pro bono legal services in the State of Mississippi. Attorneys over the age of seventy-five (75) who qualify as active members of the Mississippi Bar even if not engaged in the active practice of law are also encouraged to provide pro bono legal representation.

Rule 46(f)(1)(i) provides that a pro bono publicus attorney will provide free legal services under the supervision of a qualified legal services provider. This means that the legal services provider shall bear ultimate responsibility for the services provided under this rule.

Comment amended effective January 16, 2003; amended effective May 27, 2004 to place the responsibility of obtaining, filing and serving the statement of the Clerk of the Supreme Court with the foreign attorney seeking leave to appear pro hac vice; amended effective October 18, 2007; amended effective August 2, 2012.]

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Failure to comply with procedures.
Pro hac vice admission.

Failure to comply with procedures.

Complaint by a Mississippi resident against an insurer arising out of uninsured motorist provisions of a policy was properly dismissed as time barred; the original complaint was properly refused by the circuit court clerk because it was signed by a Louisiana attorney who was not licensed to practice in Mississippi, and who had not been admitted pro hac vice. Mitchell v. Progressive Ins. Co., 965 So. 2d 679 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's murder conviction was appropriate pursuant to Miss. R. App.P. 46(b) because she was procedurally barred from raising her attorney's failure to comply with Mississippi's pro hac vice requirements since she had already taken her chances with the jury and then lost her case. Lyle v. State, 908 So. 2d 189 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

The allegation that defense counsel failed to comply with the procedures for out-of-state counsel to appear pro hac vice in a particular cause did not warrant withdrawal of the defendant's guilty plea where defense counsel did not appear at the guilty plea hearing and, instead, local counsel, who was familiar with the local rules and practiced in this area of law was present when the defendant entered his plea of guilty at the hearing. Martin v. State, 749 So. 2d 375 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Pro hac vice admission.

Trial court erred in dismissing plaintiffs' case without prejudice pursuant to Miss. R. Civ. P. 11(a) and 41(b) based on the fact that plaintiffs were originally represented by a foreign attorney, who had not been admitted pro hac vice pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 46 because a subsequent appearance by a member of the Mississippi Bar cured the error; the foreign attorney's violation of Miss. R. App. P. 46 and La. St. Bar art. XVI, R. 5.5(a), which prohibited the unauthorized practice of law, warranted sanctions against the attorney and notification of the violation to the Louisiana state bar. Dinet v. Gavagnie, 948 So. 2d 1281 (Miss. 2007).

Out-of-state attorney's motion for admission pro hac vice in a Mississippi medical malpractice case was properly denied because the attorney had engaged in the "general practice of law" by participating in more than five cases in a 12-month period, in violation of Miss. R. App. P. 46(b)(6)(ii); the attorney also engaged in the unauthorized practice of law by conferring with clients, advising them of their legal rights, and engaging a local attorney to litigate their claim. In re Williamson, 838 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 821, 124 S. Ct. 133, 157 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2003).

Foreign attorney is deemed to have made an appearance in a Mississippi lawsuit if the attorney signs the pleadings, allows their name to be listed on the pleadings, physically appears at a docket call, a trial, a hearing, any proceeding in open court, a deposition, an arbitration, a mediation, or any other proceeding in which the attorney announces representation of a party to a lawsuit or is introduced to the court as a representative of a party to a lawsuit; any of these actions require the foreign attorney to be admitted pro hac vice and activates the prohibition of Miss. R. App. P. 46(b)(6)(ii). In re Williamson, 838 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 821, 124 S. Ct. 133, 157 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2003).

Contempt convictions for two attorneys for allegedly misrepresenting facts in an affidavit under Miss. R. App. P. 46(b)(4), among other things, was reversed because the trial judge should have recused himself based on substantial personal involvement in the case; moreover, one of the attorneys was not given notice of the proceedings. In re Williamson, 838 So. 2d 226 (Miss. 2002), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 821, 124 S. Ct. 133, 157 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2003).

The court had jurisdiction to awarded attorney's fees and expenses against both the plaintiff and his out-of-state counsel, notwithstanding that counsel was no longer representing the plaintiff at the time of the award and his authority to practice law in the court pro hac vice had been rescinded, as he submitted to the jurisdiction of the court by appearing for the plaintiff and he was served with notice of the hearing on attorney's fees and expenses. Wyssbrod v. Wittjen, 798 So. 2d 352 (Miss. 2001).

Where the objectors to the annexation were individual family members, but they were members of a corporate business incorporated in Missouri, the city asked the appellate court to explore the possibility that standing was absent due to the out of state citizenship of the corporation. Contrary to the objectors' arguments that since they were also properly owners, the standing argument warranted sanctions, the city's argument, while ultimately not successful, could not be classified as frivolous and did not warrant sanctions. Weeks v. City of Clinton (In re City of Clinton), 920 So. 2d 452 (Miss. 2006).

Rule 47. Prohibition against practice.

No one serving as clerk of the Supreme Court or as a law clerk or secretary to a justice of the Supreme Court or a judge of the Court of Appeals or as an employee of either court shall practice as an attorney or counselor in any court or before any agency of government while holding that position. No such person shall, after separating from that position, ever participate, by way of any form of professional consultation or assistance, in any case that was pending in either court during the tenure of such position.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 47 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 47, embracing proceedings in the Court of Appeals. 644-647 So.2d XC (West Miss.Cases 1994).

[Adopted August 21, 1996.]

COMMENT

Rule 47 is based on U.S.Sup.Ct.R. 7 and the prior rules of the Supreme Court.

Rule 48. Appellate procedure following denial of waiver of consent to abortion.

Notwithstanding any provision in the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure to the contrary, this Rule shall govern appeals by an unemancipated minor or her next friend from an adverse judgment or order of a chancery court in a waiver proceeding under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-41-55 (1993). For the purposes of this Rule, the term "minor" means a person under the age of eighteen (18) years.

If, in a proceeding initiated under said enactment by a minor or her next friend for waiver of the parental consent requirements to an abortion, judgment is entered denying such waiver, and the minor or next friend desires to appeal from such adverse judgment, an appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken by filing within forty-eight (48) hours after entry of such adverse judgment a written request that the record of the proceeding be certified to that Court. Promptly after filing of such request, the trial judge, within thirty-six (36) hours of notice, shall certify the judgment, together with the petition initiating the proceeding and either a stipulation of the facts or an electronic transcription of the evidence taken in the proceeding, and shall forward same to the Supreme Court. No motion to correct error or notice of appeal shall be filed.

In order to ensure anonymity and confidentiality, any written transcripts of the lower court proceedings, documents, or briefs shall make reference to said minor's identity by use of her initials only. The minor's name is not to be disclosed for purposes of this appeal.

The appeal shall be determined on the record so certified within seventy-two (72) hours of receipt in the office of the Mississippi Supreme Court clerk excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays without briefs or oral argument unless the Supreme Court orders otherwise. Any party may, however, file a short statement of special points desired to be brought to the attention of the Supreme Court, which statement need not conform to the usual requirement for appellate briefs.

As provided under Mississippi Code Ann. § 41-41-55 3(7), "No filing fees shall be required by any minor who avails herself of the procedures provided by this section."

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 48 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 48. 644-647 So.2d XCI (West Miss.Cases 1994).

Rule 48A. Confidential cases and sealed filings.

(a) Cases treated as confidential on filing. Any case filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals which was previously closed to the public by action of the trial court or which by statute is subjected to restriction on access to the public in the trial court by statute, shall be closed to public access in the appellate courts and shall be treated as a confidential case by the clerk of the appellate courts.

(b) Cases which may be designated as confidential on order of the appellate court. In the event that the appellate court shall determine that a case contains information the public disclosure of which will cause substantial harm to the welfare of a child or otherwise contains sensitive information the public disclosure of which will cause substantial harm, the appellate court may direct that such case be closed to public access and shall, upon order of the appellate court, be treated as a confidential case by the clerk. Pending determination by the appellate court of whether a case should be so treated, the clerk is authorized to deny access without order.

(c) Sealed documents. Where parties shall file documents physically under seal with the clerk of the appellate courts, such documents shall remain sealed until the appellate court by order removes the seal. The mere filing of documents with a request that they be sealed shall not constitute the filing of sealed documents. Such documents shall remain open until the appellate court on motion of a party or on its own motion orders that they be sealed.

(d) Requests for Access. Any person or entity with an interest in the proceedings may by motion request access to any case or filings therein by motion presenting their interest and argument for access, and such motions shall be ruled on expeditiously.

(e) Other Provisions. The designation of a case as closed shall not restrict access of the parties, counsel of record, appellate court or of court staff as needed to address the case. Sealed documents may be opened at the direction of a justice as needed to address the case without ordering that the seal, as to the public, be removed. Where necessary to accomplish the purpose of designating a case as confidential, the style of the case shall be amended so as to prevent disclosure of the names of parties. Access to the records concerning such cases shall be granted only upon order of the appellate court. (Adopted effective March 29, 2001.)

Rule 48B. Proceedings on motion for disqualification of trial judge.

If a judge of the circuit, chancery or county court shall deny a motion seeking the trial judge's recusal, or if within 30 days following the filing of the motion for recusal the judge has not ruled, the filing party may within 14 days following the judge's ruling, or 14 days following the expiration of the 30 days allowed for ruling, seek review of the judge's action by the Supreme Court. A true copy of any order entered by the subject judge on the question of recusal and transcript of any hearing thereon shall be submitted with the petition in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court will not order recusal unless the decision of the trial judge is found to be an abuse of discretion. Otherwise, procedure in the Supreme Court shall be in accordance with M.R.A.P. 21. Appointment of another judge to hear the case shall be made as otherwise provided by law. (Adopted April 4, 2002.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

No abuse of discretion.
Time for appeal.

No abuse of discretion.

Not only was property owner's appeal of his motion to recuse a county court judge failed to abide by the requirements of Miss. R. App. P. 48B because it was improperly filed with the county court clerk, instead of with the Supreme Court of Mississippi and it did not contain a transcript of the recusal proceedings, but his motion for recusal did not abide by the requirement of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 1.15 because it was not filed with the appropriate affidavit and was untimely. Furthermore, county court judge did not have to recuse himself under Miss. Code Jud. Conduct Canon 3(E)(1) or Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 1.15 because not only was the county court judge's prior knowledge merely from presiding over the case in open court, not from any sort of improper ex parte prior knowledge, but the owner's case was dismissed based on the statute of limitations, which did not require the county court judge to interpret his prior order. Whitley v. City of Pearl, 994 So. 2d 857 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not violate Miss. Code Jud. Conduct Canon 3. Trial judge's alleged impartiality was not apparent merely because he had presiding over previous criminal proceedings against defendant, or because he had sequestered the names of the jurors; moreover, this decision remained at the discretion of the trial judge. King v. State, 897 So. 2d 981 (Miss.

Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 896 So. 2d 373 (Miss. 2005).

Time for appeal.

In a personal injury action by guests against a casino, an appeal of the denial of the guests' recusal motion was time-barred where the guests failed to perfect a notice of appeal within 44 days after filing the recusal motion. Doll v. BSL, Inc., 41 So. 3d 664 (Miss. 2010).

Under Miss. R. App. P. 4, using the language "shall," required a party to file a notice of appeal within 30 days, while Miss. R. App. P. 48B, using the language "may," permitted a party to seek review within 14 days; therefore, the employee's appeal was timely because it was filed in accordance with Miss. R. App. P. 4. Hathcock v. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 912 So. 2d 844 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 48C. Disqualification of justices or judges of the appellate courts.

(a) Disqualification of justices and judges of the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals.

(i) Any party may move for the recusal of a justice of the Supreme Court or a judge of the Court of Appeals if it appears that the justice or judge's impartiality might be questioned by a reasonable person knowing all the circumstances, or for other grounds provided in the Code of Judicial Conduct or otherwise as provided by law. A motion seeking recusal shall be filed with an affidavit of the party or, if the party is represented, by the party's attorney setting forth the factual basis underlying the asserted grounds for recusal and declaring that the motion is filed in good faith and that the affiant truly believes the facts underlying the grounds stated to be true.

(ii) Any such motion for recusal shall be filed no later than 30 days following the notification by the clerk of the court that a case has been assigned to either appellate court, or, in the case of a motion or petition which is not filed within a proceeding initiated by a notice of appeal or where the facts upon which the motion is based could not reasonably have been known to the filing party within such time, it shall be filed within 30 days after the filing party could reasonably discover the facts underlying the grounds asserted.

(iii) Motions for recusal shall be decided in the first instance by the justice or judge who is the subject of the motion. The remainder of the court on which such justice or judge serves shall, prior to the order being entered, be informed of a decision of a justice to deny recusal, and such decision shall be subject to review by the entire court upon motion for reconsideration filed within 14 days following the issuance of an order denying recusal.

Comment

Although Rule 27(h) generally provides that motions, other than those addressed by the Clerk of the Courts under Rule 27(b), are only subject to reconsideration on the court's own motion, special provision is made in this rule for reconsideration of motions for recusal of appellate court justices and judges.

(b) Supreme Court review of orders of the court of appeals addressing recusal of judges. No decision concerning the recusal of a judge of the Court of Appeals shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court unless, upon timely motion, the Court of Appeals has denied reconsideration of the motion. A party may, within 14 days following the denial of reconsideration by the Court of Appeals, file a motion with the Supreme Court seeking further review, and the Supreme Court, en banc, shall promptly consider such recusal. Such motion for further review by the Supreme Court shall be accompanied by a copy of the order entered by the judge who is the subject of the motion for recusal, the order denying reconsideration, and the motions for recusal and reconsideration by the Court of Appeals. (Adopted effective October 17, 2002.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Purpose.
Recusal denied.

Purpose.

State Supreme Court adopted Miss. R. App. P. 48C that established procedures for consideration and review of motions for recusal of Supreme Court justices and judges of the appellate courts after having determined that the fair and efficient administration of justice would be promoted by establishing such procedures. In re Miss. Rules of Appellate Procedure, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 303 (Miss. Oct. 17, 2002).

Recusal denied.

In movant's motion to recuse an appellate court judge pursuant to Miss. R. App. P. 48C(b), the movant alleged that the judge had a bias based on statements in the judge's successful appellate court campaign that the judge would fight the special interest groups — like the personal injury lawyers who had created the lawsuit industry; however, because (1) the judge's voting record during his tenure on the appellate court did not indicate that he lacked impartiality towards a personal injury plaintiff represented by a personal injury lawyer and (2) the judge voted in the movant's favor on the merits, a reasonable person, knowing all the circumstances, could not question the judge's impartiality, Miss. Code Jud. Conduct Canon 3(E)(1)(a). Thus, the motion to recuse the judge and the motion to reconsider the judge's denial of the recusal motion were properly denied. Doe v. Stegall, 900 So. 2d 357 (Miss. 2004).

Rule 49. Title.

These Rules shall be known as the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure and may be cited as M.R.A.P.

Comments to the Supreme Court Rules have been amended to reflect the application of the rules to the Court of Appeals.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective January 1, 1995, Miss.R.App.P. 49 replaced Miss.Sup.Ct.R. 49, changing the name of the Rules to the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure. 644-647 So.2d XCI-XCII (West Miss.Cases 1994).

APPENDIX III. MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT RULES GUIDELINES FOR COURT REPORTERS

I. TRANSCRIPTS — HOW PREPARED

Transcripts of all administrative and judicial proceedings shall be uniform in and for all state courts throughout the State of Mississippi. The form, size, spacing and method of transcript preparation are as follows:

(a) All proceedings shall be typewritten only on one side of every leaf of paper eight and one-half (8 ½) inches wide and eleven (11) inches long, prepared for binding at the left margin. The purpose of this requirement is to facilitate a system-wide transfer from legal size paper to letter size paper effective July 01, 1993. See M.R.A.P. 11, 32, and M.R.C.P. Rule 7. Voluntary compliance with this Rule is to begin January 01, 1993; mandatory compliance will become effective July 01, 1993.

The cost of transcription shall be two dollars forty cents ($2.40) per page. The court reporter shall make an electronic disk of the transcript. No charge shall be made for the electronic disk or for the copy of the transcript provided for under Section II of this Appendix.

(b) Type size or print shall be nine to ten characters per inch.

(e) There shall be no fewer than twenty-nine (29) typed lines per page. Each typed line is to be numbered at the left margin. All typing shall extend to the right margin, and shall be double spaced with no more than a double space between paragraphs.

(f) Colloquy material shall begin on the same line following the identification of the speaker, but in no event shall there be more than two spaces between the identification of the speaker and the commencement of the colloquy. The identification of the speaker in colloquy shall begin no more than fifteen (15) spaces from the left margin and carry-over colloquy shall be indented no more than ten (10) spaces from the left margin. The identification of the speaker in colloquy shall be capitalized.

(g) Each question and answer shall begin on a separate line no more than five (5) spaces from the left margin with no more than five (5) spaces from the "Q." or "A." to the text. Carry-over question and answer lines shall be brought to the left margin.

(i) Opening statement and closing arguments shall begin at the left margin and extend to the right margin of the transcript.

(k) Exhibits shall be identified in all capital letters. Where possible, all exhibits shall be marked on the front page with an exhibit label.

[Amended effective June 3, 2004.]

Comment

Miss. Code Ann. § 25-7-89 (Rev. 2004) establishes the rate to be charged by the court reporters for transcripts at $2.40 per page. Under the statute, the reporter is also required to file with the clerk an additional copy of the transcript at no additional charge.

[Adopted effective June 3, 2004.]

II. TRANSCRIPTS — HOW FILED

(a) Upon completion of the transcript, the court reporter shall certify the transcript and attach the certification at the end of the transcript. The reporter shall then make a copy of the original transcript and bind in suitable covers both the original and copy at the left. Each volume shall contain no more than 150 pages and shall be consecutively labeled with Roman Numerals, i.e. Volume I, Volume II, etc. The reporter shall also prepare a copy of the transcript on electronic disk. The reporter shall simultaneously file the electronic disk and the transcript with the trial court clerk. See M.R.A.P. 11(c).

(b) Upon review of the completed transcript, should the parties agree on corrections, or should the trial court order corrections as to form only, the reporter shall verify that the corrections are required. Within seven (7) days after receiving the record for corrections, the reporter shall complete the corrections on the original transcript, the transcript copy and the electronic disk. M.R.A.P. 10(b)(5).

(c) Unless otherwise ordered by the trial or appellate courts, deposition testimony shall not be taken by the reporter during the course of the trial, provided a written transcript (not a videotape or other recording) of the deposition testimony is marked as an exhibit for identification and made part of the record. If only portions of deposition testimony are read, the page and line numbers shall be noted, along with all objections made and rulings of the court. Where only portions of the deposition are read in random order, such deposition shall be placed in the transcript as it is read into the record.

III. SANCTIONS FOR NONCOMPLIANCE

In the event that any court reporter shall fail to comply with the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Practice, the Guidelines for Court Reporters, or any order issued pursuant thereto, the Supreme Court may impose such sanctions as may be appropriate, including but not limited to, imposition of reasonable fines and citation of contempt. The judges of the lower courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court for the purpose of imposing sanctions in the event any court reporter, lower court clerk or attorney of record fails to comply with the rules governing appeals. If the judge of the lower court finds it necessary to impose sanctions, a copy of the sanction order shall be immediately forwarded to the Clerk of the Supreme Court. Sanctions imposed by a lower court judge are subject to review by the Supreme Court for abuse of discretion. (Amended May 13, 1996.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE HISTORICAL NOTE

Effective May 13, 1996, Appendix III, Section II was amended to add subsection (c). 668-672 So.2d XXXIII (West Miss. Cases 1996).

[Adopted April 17, 1997; amended effective July 1, 1998.]

Rule 1.01. Designation of rule name, proper citation, location of rules applicable in all proceedings.

These rules are the Uniform Rules of Circuit and County Court and may be cited as "URCCC __. ____." The word "court" shall mean both circuit and county court unless otherwise indicated. Rule Series 1, 2 and 3 of these rules apply to all proceedings, civil or criminal.

Rule 1.02. Court decorum.

The court shall be opened formally and conducted with dignity and decorum at all times. The judge shall wear a judicial robe at all times when presiding in open court. The wearing of a robe is discretionary where court facilities make it infeasible. Each officer of the court shall be responsible for the promotion of respect for the court.

Rule 1.03. Sanctions.

Any person embraced within these rules who violates the provisions hereof may be subjected to sanctions, contempt proceedings or other disciplinary actions imposed or initiated by the court.

Rule 1.04. Cameras.

There shall be no broadcasting, televising, recording, or taking photographs in the courtroom and areas immediately adjacent thereto during sessions of court or recesses between sessions, except that the court may authorize the same in accordance with the Code of Judicial Conduct.

COMMENT

Section 3B(12) of the Code of Judicial Conduct prohibits broadcasting, televising, recording, or taking photographs in the courtroom and areas immediately adjacent thereto except as authorized by rule or order of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has now adopted the Rules for Electronic and Photographic Coverage of Judicial Proceedings which provides detailed guidance for such coverage. (Adopted effective April 17, 2003 as to proceedings conducted from and after July 1, 2003.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Electronic and photographic coverage of judicial proceedings.

Miss. Code Jud. Conduct Canon 3B(12) prohibited broadcasting, televising, recording, or taking photographs in a courtroom and areas immediately adjacent thereto except as authorized by rule or order of the Mississippi Supreme Court; and the Supreme Court had adopted the "Rules for Electronic and Photographic Coverage of Judicial Proceedings" which provided detailed guidance for such coverage. In re Unif. Rules of Circuit & County Courts, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 189 (Miss. Apr. 11, 2003).

Rule 1.05. Information on each pleading and motion.

All pleadings, motions, or other applications to the court shall bear the name, address, and office phone number of the attorney who will try the case and, if different from the attorney who will try the case, the name, address, and office phone number of the attorney who will be prepared to argue the pleading, motion or other application.

Rule 1.05A. Assignment of cases.

A. In multi-judge districts and courts, all civil cases shall be assigned immediately on the filing of the complaint by such method which shall insure that the assignment shall be random, that no discernable pattern of assignment exists, and that no person shall know to whom the case will be assigned until it has been assigned. If an attorney or party shall attempt to manipulate or defeat the purpose of this rule, the case shall be reassigned to the judge who would have otherwise received the assignment. If the judge who would have received the case under an assignment in compliance with this rule cannot be determined, a new assignment in compliance with the rule shall be made, excluding the judge to whom it was incorrectly assigned. Sanctions, including costs and attorney's fees, may be imposed by that judge on reassignment. Such sanctions may also include suspension from practice in the court imposing them for not more than 30 days and referral to the Bar for further discipline.

B. Decisions regarding this rule shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court under M.R.A.P. 21, and appropriate stays shall be entered by the trial court to allow such review.

C. In districts where motion days are set in advance with judges specifically assigned, preliminary procedural matters may be submitted to the judge assigned such duties, notwithstanding the fact that the case has been assigned to another judge. Furthermore, by local rule approved by the Supreme Court, the trial court may make special provisions accommodating local needs of economy and efficiency which might otherwise be at variance with this rule. (Adopted effective May 29, 2003.)

COMMENT

In 2002 the Legislature adopted Miss. Code Ann. § 11-1-56, which required civil case assignments to be delayed until one defendant has filed responsive pleadings. By the adoption of this rule, the Supreme Court has superceded Section 11-1-56, exercising its inherent authority to adopt rules of practice, procedure and evidence to promote justice, uniformity, and the efficiency of the courts, as articulated in Newell v. State, 308 So. 2d 71 (Miss. 1975) and Hall v. State, 539 So. 2d 1338 (Miss. 1989).

The purpose of this rule is to prevent "judge shopping" within a district or a court. Although voluntary dismissal is allowed under M.R.C.P. 41 at any time prior to service by the adverse party of an answer or summary judgment, when a civil case is so dismissed and then refiled immediately thereafter with no substantial change in the parties or claims, such practice, as an example, may be taken as a wilful violation of this rule. Wilful violation of this rule may constitute an offense subject to suspension and other discipline under Rule 3.4(c) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Sanctions authorized by this rule are cumulative to discipline under the Rules of Professional Conduct.

The assignment of cases by regular rotation among the judges of the district is not a random assignment as contemplated by this rule since a regular rotation will allow those attentive to the docket to predict the judge who will receive a particular assignment.

A party who believes that a case has been assigned in violation of this rule will first submit the issue to the judge before whom the case is pending; thereafter, either party aggrieved by the judge's decision on the issue may seek review of that decision by this Court under the provisions of M.R.A.P. 21.

In some districts, local modifications, which to some degree are at variance with the strict provisions of this rule, may be made while fulfilling the policy of the rule. These modifications are to be made by local rule, on petition of the local district under M.R.C.P 83 to the Supreme Court. The order by which this Rule 1.05A was adopted provides:

It is further ordered that this new rule shall be effective upon issuance of this order; however, local practices adopted for the purpose of accommodating the needs of economy and efficiency may be continued for a period of forty-five days from the issuance of this order, and in districts wherein the judges of the district have within such period petitioned the Court under M.R.C.P. 83 for local rules seeking approval of such practices or of other practices which might otherwise be in variance to this rule, the practices may continue to be used until the Supreme Court has considered the petition. (Comment adopted effective May 29, 2003.)

Rule 1.06. Corporations must be represented by counsel.

All corporations that are party plaintiffs must be represented by an attorney licensed to practice law in this state, whose name must appear on the pleading prior to the filing of the pleading.

Rule 1.07. Signing of bonds by officer of court.

No officer of the court shall sign any bond of any kind in or to any court of this state.

Rule 1.08. Substitution of copies.

Substitution of a copy for an original exhibit will be permitted only after verification of the copy by the court reporter and permission of the judge.

Rule 1.09. County court use of chancery court rules.

In cases which have been assigned by the chancery court to the county court, the county court shall use the Uniform Rules of Chancery Court Practice.

Rule 1.10. Earwigging prohibited.

No person shall undertake to discuss with or in the presence or hearing of the judge the law or the facts or alleged facts of any case then pending in the court or likely to be instituted therein, except in the orderly progress of the trial, and arguments or briefs connected therewith; nor attempt in any manner, except as stated above, to influence the decision of the judge in any such case or matter.

Rule 1.11. Presentation of orders to the court.

With the exception of default or agreed orders and judgments, all proposed orders and judgments to be signed by the court shall be submitted directly to the court by an attorney and not through the clerk or through correspondence, unless otherwise permitted by the court. All orders or judgments presented to the court shall be signed by the attorney presenting the same.

Rule 1.12. Removal of records from the office of the clerk.

No record, or any part of a file of court papers, shall be taken from the clerk's custody without a written order from the judge to the clerk. The clerk shall keep a register of all files checked out by permission of the court and the same shall be redelivered to the clerk on the day provided for in the order from the judge, or, if none is provided, before the opening of the next term.

Rule 1.14. Local practice.

Attorneys having cases or practicing before a court shall contact the clerk of the court to ascertain the practices of the local courts. There will be no local rules of court unless such rules are approved by the Supreme Court of Mississippi.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Improper promulgation.

Summary judgment for defendant in medical malpractice case was properly reversed, where parties' affidavits raised triable questions of fact which, but for the imposition of an improperly promulgated local rule governing summary judgment, would have resulted in a jury trial. Koerner v. Crittenden, 635 So. 2d 833 (Miss. 1994).

Rule 1.15. Motions for recusal of judges.

Any party may move for the recusal of a judge of the circuit or county court if it appears that the judge's impartially might be questioned by a reasonable person knowing all the circumstances, or for other grounds provided in the Code of Judicial Conduct or otherwise as provided by law. A motion seeking recusal shall be filed with an affidavit of the party or the party's attorney setting forth the factual basis underlying the asserted grounds for recusal and declaring that the motion is filed in good faith and that the affiant truly believes the facts underlying the grounds stated to be true. Such motion shall, in the first instance, be filed with the judge who is the subject of the motion within 30 days following notification to the parties of the name of the judge assigned to the case; or, if it is based upon facts which could not reasonably have been known to the filing party within such time, it shall be filed within 30 days after the filing party could reasonably discover the facts underlying the grounds asserted. The subject judge shall consider and rule on the motion within 30 days of the filing of the motion, with hearing if necessary. If a hearing is held, it shall be on the record in open court. The denial of a motion to recuse is subject to review by the Supreme Court on motion of the party filing the motion as provided in M.R.A.P. 48B. (Adopted April 4, 2002.)

Recusal not required.

In a case in which defendant was convicted of violating Miss. Code Ann, § 47-5-193, his argument that the trial judge should have recused himself after speaking to the potential jurors was procedurally barred on appeal since he failed to object or file a motion seeking the trial judge to recuse himself. Lindsey v. State, 29 So. 3d 121 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for recusal where plaintiff failed to produce any evidence regarding either allegation of impropriety; plaintiff produced no evidence that the court administrator had any material input into the court's judicial decisions. Hill v. Mills, 26 So. 3d 322 (Miss. 2010).

Not only was property owner's appeal of his motion to recuse a county court judge failed to abide by the requirements of Miss. R. App. P. 48B because it was improperly filed with the county court clerk, instead of with the Supreme Court of Mississippi and it did not contain a transcript of the recusal proceedings, but his motion for recusal did not abide by the requirement of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 1.15 because it was not filed with the appropriate affidavit and was untimely. Furthermore, county court judge did not have to recuse himself under Miss. Code Jud. Conduct Canon 3(E)(1) or Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 1.15 because not only was the county court judge's prior knowledge merely from presiding over the case in open court, not from any sort of improper ex parte prior knowledge, but the owner's case was dismissed based on the statute of limitations, which did not require the county court judge to interpret his prior order. Whitley v. City of Pearl, 994 So. 2d 857 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case alleging tortious interference with business relations, there was no error based on a trial judge's failure to recuse himself under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 1.15 because the owners failed to raise the issue of alleged impartiality at the trial court level; the owners' website showed that they knew of a grounds for recusal at the time of trial, and even if the owners had not been able to raise this issue before the trial judge, a reversal would still not have been granted because the judge was not connected to the objectors by affinity or consanguinity, and he had no interest in the outcome of the case based on vague allegations that the judge had eaten at the owners' lodge. Bateman v. Gray, 963 So. 2d 1284 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to recuse himself in an individual's action asserting false imprisonment and negligence claims against the sheriff, county, and surety where the fact that circuit court judges dealt with the sheriff and county and were elected by the taxpayers of the county were insufficient to raise an appearance of impropriety.

Brooks v. Pennington, 995 So. 2d 733 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 680 (Miss. Dec. 4, 2008).

Trial judge was not required to disqualify himself under Miss. Const. art. VI, § 165, Miss. Code Ann. § 9-1-11, or Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 1.15 where there was no evidence that the trial judge was connected with the parties through marriage or blood and there was no evidence that the judge may have had an interest in the outcome of the proceeding, or that he was otherwise precluded by the statute; it was only in causes wherein the judge may have been of counsel that provided for disqualification. Hathcock v. S. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 912 So. 2d 844 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 1.16. Electronic filing and service procedures.

A court may, by local rule, allow pleadings and other papers to be served, filed, signed, or verified by electronic means in conformity with the Mississippi Electronic Court System procedures. Pleadings and other papers filed electronically in compliance with the procedures are written papers for purposes of these rules. Please refer to the Administrative Procedures for Mississippi Electronic Court System on the Supreme Court's website at www.mssc.state.ms.us (Adopted effective January 8, 2009, for purposes of a pilot program for the Mississippi Electronic Court System.)

Rule 2.01. Subpoenas.

A. Except as set forth below, the procedures for subpoenas in both civil and criminal matters shall conform to Rule 45 of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure. This rule shall not apply to proceedings before a grand jury.

B. Subpoenas Duces Tecum in Criminal Cases for Production at Trial or Hearing. A subpoena in a criminal case may, without a motion or hearing, require the production of books, papers, documents or other objects at the date, time and place at which the trial, hearing or proceeding at which these items are to be offered in evidence is scheduled to take place.

C.1. Subpoenas Duces Tecum in Criminal Cases for Production other than at Trial or Hearing. No subpoena in a criminal case may require the production of books, papers, documents or other objects at a date and time or place other than the date, time and place at which the trial, hearing or proceeding at which these items are to be offered in evidence is scheduled to take place, unless the court has entered an order pursuant to this rule authorizing the issuance of such subpoena.

2. Motions; Service; Opposition. A hearing on a motion for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum shall be set at the time the motion is filed and served. The hearing shall be set no earlier than ten (10) days after filing and service of the motion. Except for good cause shown, all motions for subpoenas duces tecum shall be served on: (1) the custodian of the books, papers, documents or other objects which would be subject to the subpoena; (2) all parties; (3) all persons whose books, papers, documents or other objects would be subject to the subpoena; and (4) all persons who may have a claim that privileged material would be subject to the subpoena. Any party to the action or other interested person may file an opposition or response.

3. Supporting Affidavit or Declaration. Motions seeking subpoenas duces tecum under this rule shall be supported by an affidavit or declaration stating facts which establish: (1) the documents or objects sought are evidentiary and relevant; (2) the documents or objects sought are not otherwise reasonably procurable in advance of the trial, hearing or proceeding by exercise of due diligence; (3) the moving party cannot properly prepare for trial without such production and inspection in advance of trial and the failure to obtain such inspection may tend unreasonably to delay the trial; and (4) the application is made in good faith and is not intended for the purpose of general discovery.

4. Immediate Lodging with Court. Any subpoena duces tecum issued under this subsection shall be returnable to and the items sought thereunder produced before the court. In the event that materials subject to a subpoena are received by a party, an attorney, or an attorney's agent or investigator directly from the subpoenaed person, any person receiving such materials shall immediately notify the court and shall immediately lodge such materials with the court. The materials shall not be opened, reviewed or copied by a recipient without a prior court order.

D. Sanctions. Violation of this rule may provide a basis for sanctions. (Adopted effective May 1, 1995; amended April 18, 2002.)

Rule 2.02. Scope of authority of court.

The court is empowered to hear and determine all motions, appeals or other applications to the court, which the court may hear and determine without a jury, in term or vacation, and may hear or determine the same in any county in the judicial district of the court, or in a county to which venue has been transferred.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Justice court order.

In defendant's trial on charges of telephone harassment, a violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-29-45(1)(a), the trial court did not err in admitting the phone records of defendant's girlfriend that were obtained pursuant to a justice court order because the records were obtained during the investigative process before defendant was charged; defendant had no standing to challenge the acquisition of the phone records because the phone was not his; defendant had notice and thus was not surprised by the use of the records, and defendant failed to cite any authority to support his claim that the justice court had no authority to order production of telephone records under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.02. Yates v. State, 919 So. 2d 1122 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 926 So. 2d 922, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 71 (Miss. 2006).

Rule 2.03. Rescheduling trials.

No case set for trial shall be continued or rescheduled for trial except by permission of the court.

Rule 2.04. Duties of movant.

It is the duty of the movant, when a motion or other pleading is filed, including motions for a new trial, to pursue said motion to hearing and decision by the court. Failure to pursue a pretrial motion to hearing and decision before trial is deemed an abandonment of that motion; however, said motion may be heard after the commencement of trial in the discretion of the court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Abandoned motion.
Post-conviction relief.
Waiver.

Abandoned motion.

Because the motion for appointment of a psychiatrist to conduct a psychiatric evaluation was never pursued to a decision, the matter was procedurally barred. Trammell v. State, 62 So. 3d 424 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Motion for travel expenses for two of defendant's witnesses was procedurally barred because she did not pursue her motion to a hearing and a ruling by the trial court where she did not even present her motion for payment of travel expenses to the trial court. Chamberlin v. State, 989 So. 2d 320 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1106, 129 S. Ct. 908, 173 L. Ed. 2d 122, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 495, 77 U.S.L.W. 3397 (2009).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the company in a wrongful death action was proper where products liability law limited itself to imposing liability on entities engaged in the actual production or sale of goods, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-1-63(a); further, the beneficiaries abandoned their motion for leave to amend because they permitted over three and on-half months to pass without making any effort to pursue a ruling on the motion in face of knowledge that the trial court had taken the summary judgment motion filed against them under advisement, Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 4.03(1), 2.04. Harrison v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 881 So. 2d 288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 882 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to hear a motion to suppress filed April 30, 2004, because it was based on the identical grounds contained in the motion which was scheduled to be heard on July 8, 2003, but which was not heard because counsel failed to appear; under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.04, failure to pursue a motion to decision was deemed an abandonment of the motion. Turner v. State, 945 So. 2d 992 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief.

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate because his contention that the trial court erred in failing to grant his motion for a directed verdict was procedurally barred under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.04 since the record did not reflect that the trial court had ruled on the motion; however, even if it was not procedurally barred, the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the victim was not the aggressor. Hawthorne v. State, 944 So. 2d 928 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Inmate argued that he was prevented from appealing the denial of his second motion for post-conviction relief; however, the inmate did not pursue the motion to a decision by the trial court as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.04. Thus, no action was taken by the trial, and therefore, there was no ruling from which the inmate could appeal to the appellate court. Runnels v. State, 919 So. 2d 1072 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

The rule does not apply to cause a lapse or abandonment of a motion for post-conviction relief and, therefore, a circuit judge had jurisdiction to enter an order denying such relief six years after the motion was filed. Berryman v. State, 734 So. 2d 292 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Waiver.

Appellate court found no record of a ruling by the trial court on defendant's motion for severance nor any evidence that the motion was noticed for hearing by defendant; by failing to pursue a hearing or ruling on the motion from the trial court, defendant effectively abandoned the motion and waived this issue for appeal. Smith v. State, 986 So. 2d 290 (Miss. 2008).

In a capital murder case, the trial judge did not err in declining to rule on defendant's pretrial motion to suppress a pistol, the alleged murder weapon, because defendant failed to request a ruling on the motion at an appropriate time; the trial court expressly noted that it had provided a time to hear pretrial motions and that conducting an evidentiary hearing on the pistol was inconvenient since the venire members had been convened and were waiting outside the courtroom. Ross v. State, 954 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant failed to pursue his motion to dismiss his trial counsel as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.04, and his motion was deemed abandoned; the trial court did not have a responsibility to pursue the motion as there was no abdication by trial counsel, nor was there a meaningful basis for charging counsel with any deficiency in his representation of defendant. Roy v. State, 878 So. 2d 84 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Rule 2.05. Trial briefs.

Unless otherwise directed by the court, the submission of a trial brief on the merits of a case or particular issues is within the discretion of the parties. A copy of any such brief submitted shall be simultaneously served upon opposing attorneys. No memorandum or brief required or permitted by this rule shall be filed with the clerk. Memorandum or briefs shall not exceed 25 pages in length and shall be accompanied by copies of all authorities cited therein.

Rule 2.06. Service of copies and certificate of service.

Unless otherwise ordered by the court, all pleadings, motions, or applications to the court, except the initial pleading or indictment, must be served by any form of service authorized by Rule 5 of the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure on all attorneys of record for the parties, or on the parties when not represented by an attorney, and the person filing the same shall also file an original certificate of service certifying that a correct copy has been provided to the attorneys or to the parties, the manner of service, and to whom it was served. Except as allowed by this rule or allowed by the court for good cause shown, the clerk may not accept for filing any document which is not accompanied by a certificate of service.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Harmless error.
Service of amended indictment.

Harmless error.

Although an amendment to the indictment of the defendant for capital murder may not have been correctly made in terms of procedure, it did not place the defendant in any worse position than before the amendment was made, as the indictment was amended only to include additional prior felony convictions with regard to the defendant's status as a habitual offender, and, therefore, any error was harmless. Mitchell v. State, 792 So. 2d 192 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 933, 122 S. Ct. 1308, 152 L. Ed. 2d 218 (2002).

Service of amended indictment.

There was no error in the state serving the inmate's counsel with the motion to amend the indictment under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09; the inmate was represented by counsel and this was not the initial pleading or indictment, and thus it was proper for counsel to be served in the inmate's place under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.06. Sneed v. State, 990 So. 2d 226 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 468 (Miss. 2008).

Rule 2.07. Habeas corpus in preconviction and extradition matters.

A. Habeas corpus in cases other than post-conviction and extradition.

1. The writ of habeas corpus shall extend to all cases of illegal confinement or detention by which any person is deprived of his/her liberty, or by which rightful custody of the person is withheld from the person entitled thereto.

2. If the person for which habeas relief is sought is charged with a crime in this state for which the accused may be imprisoned or confined to jail, and the accused is indigent and makes an affidavit of indigence, then the court shall appoint an attorney, if one has not already been appointed. The court may appoint an attorney for an indigent seeking relief hereunder even though the indigent has not been formally charged with a crime in this state.

3. The proceedings and judgments shall in all cases be entered on record.

4. The motion for the writ of habeas corpus shall be in writing, sworn to and signed by the person for whose relief it is intended, or by someone on his/her behalf, and shall contain the following matters:

a. A description of where and by whom the movant is deprived of his/her liberty;

b. The facts and circumstances of the restraint;

c. The form of the relief sought;

d. The grounds upon which relief is sought; and

e. If desired, a request for a copy of transcripts of any prior proceeding if the movant qualifies as an indigent under § 99-15-15 of the Mississippi Code of 1972, specifying what portions are necessary to decide the issues, and why they are necessary.

5. The motion for writ of habeas corpus shall be filed with the clerk of any court of competent jurisdiction of the county where the movant is detained. The proper respondent and, in cases where the person for whom habeas relief is sought is charged with a crime, the prosecuting attorney must receive three (3) days written notice, with a copy of the motion attached, prior to any hearing or consideration by the court. Such three (3) day notice may be waived for grounds sufficiently urgent and necessary to due process and the grounds therefore shall be found by the court and made a part of the record. If no court has entertained any proceeding on the movant's matter, excepting bond, the motion for habeas corpus shall be filed with the clerk of the circuit court in the county in which the movant is detained.

6. The court shall give preliminary consideration of the motion for the writ of habeas corpus as follows:

a. The motion shall be examined promptly by the judge of the court in which the motion is filed.

b. If the motion, upon examination, does not substantially comply with the requirements of this rule, it need not be entertained on its merits and the clerk shall so notify the movant.

c. If, from the showing made by the motion, it is manifest that the person on whose behalf it is presented is not entitled to any relief, the court can refuse to grant the writ and enter an appropriate order.

d. Upon granting the writ, the court shall order the respondent to file an answer within a reasonable time and in an appropriate court.

e. Upon granting the writ, the court shall also order the respondent to bring or cause to bring the person for whom habeas relief is sought before the court at the time and place of the hearing on the writ.

f. If the movant requests transcripts of any prior proceeding and the movant qualifies as an indigent as under § 99-15-15 of the Mississippi Code of 1972, the judge shall order the portions of the transcripts the court deems necessary to the issues to be made available to the movant within a reasonable time before the date of the hearing on the writ.

7. The respondent upon whom the writ of habeas corpus is served shall file a response in writing. The response shall be filed by the date and in the court designated in the writ of habeas corpus and a copy served as provided in these rules. The response must respond to all the allegations of the motion including the following matters:

a. Whether the respondent has or has not the person in custody or power or restraint.

b. If the respondent does have the movant in custody or power or restraint, the respondent shall state the authority and cause of the restraint.

c. If the movant is restrained by virtue of any writ, warrant, or other written authority a copy of such shall be attached to the answer.

d. If the respondent has had the movant in restraint at any time prior to or subsequent to the date on the writ of habeas corpus, but such person has escaped or been transferred to the custody of another, a description of the escape or if transfer, the time, place, for what cause, and by what authority such transfer took place.

8. A party shall be entitled to invoke the processes of discovery available under the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, if and to the extent that the court, in the exercise of its discretion and for good cause shown, grants leave to do so, but not otherwise.

9. Upon a hearing of the matter:

a. The court shall either discharge, or commit, or admit to bail, or remand the movant or award custody to the party entitled thereto as the law and the evidence shall require. The court may make any temporary order in the cause during the progress of the proceeding that justice may require.

b. The order rendered by the court shall be conclusive until reversed and shall be a bar to another writ of habeas corpus in the same cause, except by appeal or civil action for false imprisonment.

B. Habeas corpus in extradition matters.

1. The motion for the writ of habeas corpus in extradition matters shall be in writing, sworn to and signed by the person for whose relief it is intended, or by someone in his/her behalf, and shall contain the following matters:

a. A description of where and by whom the movant is deprived of liberty;

b. The facts and circumstances of the restraint;

c. The form of the relief sought; and

d. The grounds upon which relief is sought, which is limited to those areas specified in subsection six (6) below.

2. Upon issuance of the rendition warrant by the proper authorities of the State of Mississippi, the person detained thereunder shall not be entitled to bond.

3. If no court has entertained any proceeding on the movant's matter, excepting bond or the denial of bond, the motion for habeas corpus shall be filed with the clerk of the circuit court in the county in which the movant is detained.

4. The court shall give preliminary consideration of the motion for the writ of habeas corpus as follows:

a. The motion shall be examined promptly by the judge of the court in which the motion is filed.

b. If the motion, upon examination, does not substantially comply with the requirements of this rule, it need not be entertained on its merits and the clerk shall so notify the movant.

c. If, from the showing made by the motion, it is manifest that the person whom, or on whose behalf, it is presented is not entitled to any relief, the court can refuse to grant the writ and enter an appropriate order.

d. Upon granting the writ the court shall order the respondent to file an answer within a reasonable time and in an appropriate court.

e. Upon granting the writ the court shall also order the respondent to bring or cause to bring the movant before the court at the time and place of the hearing on the writ.

f. The Attorney General of Mississippi must receive three days written notice, with a copy of the motion for habeas corpus attached, prior to any hearing or consideration by the court.

5. The respondent upon whom the writ of habeas corpus is served shall file a response in writing. The response shall be filed by the date and in the court designated in the writ of habeas corpus and a copy served as provided in these rules. The response must respond to all the allegations of the motion including the following matters:

a. Whether the respondent has or has not the movant in custody or power or restraint.

b. If the respondent does have the movant in custody or power or restraint, the respondent shall state the authority and cause of the restraint.

c. If the movant is restrained by virtue of any writ, warrant, or other written authority a copy of such shall be attached to the answer.

d. If the respondent has had the movant in restraint at any time prior to or subsequent to the date on the writ of habeas corpus, but such person has escaped or been transferred to the custody of another, a description of the escape or if transfer, the time, place, for what cause, and by what authority such transfer took place.

6. The hearing before the court shall be a limited hearing and the court may inquire only into:

a. Whether the extradition documents on their face are in order;

b. Whether the movant for habeas relief has been charged with a crime in the demanding state;

c. Whether the movant is the person named in the request for extradition; and

d. Whether the movant for habeas relief is a fugitive.

The introduction into evidence of the rendition warrant issued by the proper official of the State of Mississippi creates a presumption that all the requirements for extradition have been met and constitutes a prima facie case for the state.

7. Extradition is a civil matter and does not entitle the subject of extradition to a court appointed attorney if the subject is indigent.

Rule 3.01. Prompt attendance and informing court of presence of expert witnesses.

Every person whose presence is required for the conduct of the business of the court shall be prompt in attendance. Any attorney or party who subpoenas an expert witness to testify shall inform the court of the presence of such witness at the time of such witness' initial appearance.

Rule 3.02. Conduct of attorneys.

Attorneys should manifest an attitude of professional respect toward the judge, the opposing attorney, witnesses, defendants, jurors, and others in the courtroom. In the courtroom, attorneys should not engage in behavior or tactics purposely calculated to irritate or annoy the opposing attorney and shall address the court, not the opposing attorney, on all matters relating to the case.

All objections to testimony must be made to the judge and not to the opposing attorney. The objection must be specific and not general. The attorneys will not be permitted to argue between themselves. Attorneys must stand when addressing the court, examining witnesses, and addressing the jury, except when excused for good cause by the court. Attorneys may direct remarks to the jury panel only during voir dire, opening and closing statements.

Attorneys must limit themselves to asking questions and must refrain from making statements, quips, or side remarks in an examination of a witness. The examination of witnesses will be conducted fairly and objectively, with the attorneys and witnesses displaying respect and courtesy to each other. The attorneys may not ask questions merely to embarrass or humiliate the witness. No more than one attorney per party shall be allowed to examine a witness.

In opening statements, and in closing arguments, the attorneys may not attack the opposing attorney. The attorneys may not call any juror by name, or have any personal contact with the jury whatsoever, nor attempt to converse with or solicit audible answers from the jurors individually. In the argument to the jury, the attorneys will be required to keep within proper bounds, and any attempt to inject improper matter may be stopped by the court without the necessity of an objection. The attorneys will refrain from thanking the jury for acting as jurors and after return of a verdict by the jury neither the attorneys, parties, nor spectators shall offer their congratulations, thanks or condemnation to the jury for the verdict returned.

After a verdict concerning the case, attorneys are prohibited from harassing or exhibiting disrespect for the jurors. The jurors shall be instructed by the court to report any harassment or objectionable conduct from any party, attorney, or representative of any party or attorney to the court immediately.

It is the duty of the court to enforce this rule of its own motion and without objection being made, but the court's failure to do so, where there is no objection made, will not constitute a ground for exception.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Closing argument.
Comments about opposing counsel.

Closing argument.

Defendant argued that the prosecution's attack on defense counsel implied that he presented a deceptive argument to the jury and violated defendant's due process rights by denying him the right to a fair and impartial trial; although Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.02 prohibited attorneys from attacking the opposing attorney during closing arguments, because the trial court sustained defendant's objection to the prosecutor's first statement, the error, if any, was cured or harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Baker v. State, 930 So. 2d 399 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 497 (Miss. 2006).

Comments about opposing counsel.

Prosecutor's comment that defense counsel knew defendant was in a certain city and was trying to hide that fact and the prosecutor's comment that defense counsel was trying to hide defendant's silence and tears from the jury did not attack the personal character or integrity of defense counsel; thus, they did not rise to the level of prohibited comments under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.02. Davis v. State, 970 So. 2d 164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 652 (Miss. 2007).

Rule 3.03. Number of petit jurors summoned; circuit and county and eminent domain court may use same venire.

The court may direct the clerk of court concerning the number of petit jurors needed to be summoned for jury duty. The circuit and county court may employ the same jury venire in the selection of petit juries. Special Courts of Eminent Domain may employ the jury venire of either county or circuit court in the selection of petit juries, or may direct the clerk of court concerning the number of petit jurors needed to be summoned for jury duty.

Rule 3.04. Communication with jury.

Except as provided by these rules, no person or attorney for the person involved in any case may communicate with or offer any favor, however slight, to any person on the jury venire.

Rule 3.05. Voir dire.

In the voir dire examination of jurors, the attorney will question the entire venire only on matters not inquired into by the court. Individual jurors may be examined only when proper to inquire as to answers given or for other good cause allowed by the court. No hypothetical questions requiring any juror to pledge a particular verdict will be asked. Attorneys will not offer an opinion on the law. The court may set a reasonable time limit for voir dire.

Hypothetical questions.

Trial court did not err when it allowed the State to ask jurors if they could convict a thug for shooting a thug during voir dire because although Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.05 prohibited the posing of hypothetical questions to the venire panel during voir dire that required a juror to pledge a particular verdict, the State asked a hypothetical question about thugs and did not specifically request a verdict during voir dire. Anderson v. State, 1 So. 3d 905 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 15 (Miss. 2009).

In a death penalty case, the trial court acted within its discretion in ruling that defense counsel's attempt to elicit statements from venire members regarding specific circumstances warranting the imposition of the death penalty violated the prohibition on hypothetical questions; the trial court's ruling on the challenged voir dire questions did not prevent defense counsel from probing prospective jurors' ability to consider mitigation evidence, as the record demonstrated that defense counsel asked a number of questions pertaining to mitigation evidence. Ross v. State, 954 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 2007).

Although prosecutor could not ask hypothetical questions, questions posed were clearly framed to determine whether jurors understood their function, not to secure a pledge to return a guilty verdict; hence, the prosecutor's questions during voir dire were permissible. Cotton v. State, 790 So. 2d 235 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A hypothetical question does not create per se reversible error where the prosecutor does not "specifically" request or require that the venire pledge a verdict one way or another in response to his questions and comments; ascertaining whether jurors are capable of returning a specific verdict differs greatly from requiring them to pledge a specific verdict under a hypothetical question. Longmire v. State, 749 So. 2d 366 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

A hypothetical question does not create per se reversible error where the prosecutor does not specifically request a verdict during voir dire. Robinson v. State, 726 So. 2d 189 (Ct. App. 1998).

Individual voir dire.

In a manslaughter case, individualized sequestered voir dire was not warranted under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.05 because there was no showing of prejudice; moreover, the jurors who had heard about the case stated that they were able to render a fair and impartial decision. Speagle v. State, 956 So. 2d 237 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 296 (Miss. 2007).

In a capital murder case, a trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for sequestration during voir dire because the trial court allowed jury questionaires and open voir dire; moreover, the trial court offered the option of small group voir dire, prospective jurors were allowed to approach the bench to ask questions, and defense counsel was given the opportunity to have additional questions put to the prospective jurors. Le v. State, 913 So. 2d 913 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 546 U.S. 1004, 126 S. Ct. 622, 163 L. Ed. 2d 508, 2005 U.S. LEXIS 8254, 74 U.S.L.W. 3288 (2005).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's request to conduct individual sequestered voir dire; none of the prospective jurors whom defendant sought to see in an individual voir dire actually served on the jury that was seated and defendant presented no evidence of any harm or prejudice that resulted because of the denial of individual voir dire. Howell v. State, 860 So. 2d 704 (Miss. 2003), cert. dismissed, 543 U.S. 440, 125 S. Ct. 856, 160 L. Ed. 2d 873 (2005).

In a case where defendant father and defendant adopted son were convicted of conspiracy to commit sexual battery, sexual battery, and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, beyond asserting that the pretrial publicity had an effect on prospective jurors, defendant father did nothing to demonstrate an abuse of discretion, in fact, he made no argument regarding the prejudicial effect of not being allowed to individually voir dire the venire, nor did he provide the Supreme Court with any evidence supporting his brief assertions regarding the effect of the alleged publicity on the prospective jurors; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying individualized, sequestered voir dire under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.05. King v. State, 857 So. 2d 702 (Miss. 2003).

The court properly refused to allow the defendant to conduct individual voir dire regarding the jurors' knowledge of his previous convictions and death sentences for murdering two Mississippi State students since (1) due to the highly publicized nature of the defendant's first capital murder trial, it would have been unlikely for the trial court to seat a jury of individuals who were unaware of the prior convictions, (2) of the 28 members of the first venire who had heard about the prior case, all but two stated that they would be able to be fair and impartial jurors and the other two were dismissed for cause, and (3) it was doubtful that individual voir dire would have encouraged any of the jurors to admit that they would be partial or unfair. Manning v. State, 735 So. 2d 323 (Miss. 1999).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for individual sequestered voir dire; methods employed by trial judge adequately addressed concerns regarding pretrial publicity and jurors' knowledge of the case. McFarland v. State, 707 So. 2d 166 (Miss. 1997).

Particular verdict.

In a murder prosecution, the state did not improperly seek to obtain a pledge of a particular verdict from the jurors when the prosecutor asked prospective jurors whether they would require the state to produce the murder weapon in order to find the defendant guilty. Smothers v. State, 756 So. 2d 779 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The prosecutor did not improperly require prospective jurors to pledge a particular verdict in the event that the evidence presented a certain set of facts where, during voir dire, he asked whether the venire would still be able to consider a guilty verdict even though there was no weapon, fingerprint, DNA, or confession evidence presented. Corner v. State, 744 So. 2d 793 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Time limit.

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in imposing a 10-minute time limitation for voir dire and by defendant's own admission, defendant's lawyer exceeded the time limitation, continued voir dire for 12 more pages in the transcript, and had plenty of time to pose a specific question to the potential jurors regarding their past experience with the crime of sexual assault; the failure of defendant's counsel to ask a question regarding sexual assault during voir dire could not be attributed to the time limitation set for voir dire. Evans v. State, 984 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App.

2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 289 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and arson were proper where the time allotted for voir dire was not inadequate; limiting defendant's counsel to 40 minutes was not an abuse of discretion. Payton v. State, 897 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 2003).

The trial court's limitation of voir dire to 15 minutes per side was proper, especially where defense counsel was granted two extensions beyond the 15 minutes and defendant suffered no prejudice. Beckham v. State, 735 So. 2d 1059 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Illustrative cases.

Defendant made no contemporaneous objection at trial to the prosecutor's question on voir dire, such that the issue was waived, but notwithstanding the procedural bar, the issue was without merit because the error, if any, was harmless; Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.07, cited by defendant, dealt with written jury instructions and was irrelevant to the issue, and assuming for the sake of argument that the prosecution impermissibly offered an opinion on the law, contrary to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.05, any error was harmless because the prosecutor did not misstate the law and the jury was later properly instructed on the law of possession, in defendant's trial for possession of more than five kilograms of marijuana in Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(c)(2)(G). Morales v. State, 990 So. 2d 273 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for aggravated assault was appropriate because statements made during voir dire were simply made to determine if the potentialjurors understood their objectives of weighing the evidence and determining the credibility of witnesses. Thus, they did not violate Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.05. Kimble v. State, 920 So. 2d 1058 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a manslaughter case, the prosecutor did not ask the jury to pledge a verdict based on less than reasonable doubt because the prosecutor explained that the state's burden of proof was beyond a reasonable doubt, and he was also trying to determine that the jury would not base its verdict on sympathy. McBride v. State, 934 So. 2d 1033 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

The prosecutor improperly explained his perspective of the law governing the presentation of the case to the jury by stating that the defendant was clothed with a presumption of innocence but that such presumption was erased when the state presented evidence sufficient to meet the burden of proof, but such error was harmless as there was no misstatement of the law and the jurors were later properly instructed again as to the presumption of innocence and the burden of proof by the trial judge. Goodin v. State, 787 So. 2d 639 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 996, 122 S. Ct. 1558, 152 L. Ed. 2d 481 (2002).

The prosecutor improperly explained his perspective of the law governing the presentation of the case to the jury by stating that there was no essential difference between the burden of proof in a circumstantial evidence case and in a case that depends on direct evidence, but such error was harmless as the verdict rendered was unattributable to these misstatements where the jurors were later properly instructed both in written and oral form as to the burden of proof by the trial judge, and they were instructed to apply these rules to the evidence in reaching a verdict. Goodin v. State, 787 So. 2d 639 (Miss. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 996, 122 S. Ct. 1558, 152 L. Ed. 2d 481 (2002).

There was no violation of the statute, notwithstanding the assertion that, during voir dire, the prosecutor endangered the defendant's right to a fair trial by omitting an element of the crime when he listed what the state needed to prove to convict the defendant, because no showing was made that the comment resulted in the impaneling of a jury incapable of reaching a fair and impartial verdict. McCollum v. State, 785 So. 2d 279 (Miss. 2001).

The state did not require the jury to pledge a particular verdict when the prosecutor merely asked whether testimony based on the defendant's mental deficiency would affect the jury's judgment. Dabney v. State, 772 So. 2d 1065 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for armed robbery and aggravated assault, the prosecuting attorney did not improperly ask a hypothetical question intended to obtain a pledge of a particular verdict when he asked whether the jurors could follow the instructions given by the court without regard to the youthfulness of the defendants. Forbes v. State, 771 So. 2d 942 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

There was no violation of this rule where, during voir dire, the prosecutor stated, "It happens from time to time that there may be a conflict in the evidence. State's witnesses may testify to a certain set of circumstances, and if the Defendant chooses to call witnesses, they may testify to something different. But, do you understand that a mere conflict in the evidence does not necessarily create a reasonable doubt? That's why we have twelve jurors, to sit up here and listen to the case, to resolve that conflict and decide what the truth is," notwithstanding defendant's assertion that this statement (1) required the jury to resolve all conflicts, thereby causing them to do away with the consideration of reasonable doubt (2) offered an opinion, and (3) misstated the law. Palm v. State, 748 So. 2d 135 (Miss. 1999).

There was no violation of this rule where, during voir dire, the prosecutor stated, "So, my final question to you is simply this: After you have heard all of the evidence and you are satisfied the State has proven the Defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, can you tell me that you will act upon your oath as jurors at that point and return a verdict of guilty? Other than the people who have already indicated they have a situation, they are either related to or friends with the defendant and might not want to sit on this particular jury, can the rest of you return a verdict of guilty as charged?," notwithstanding defendant's assertion that the statement constituted a direct requirement that the jurors pledge a verdict. Palm v. State, 748 So. 2d 135 (Miss. 1999).

There was no violation of this rule where, during voir dire, the prosecutor stated, "The Defendant as he sits here right this minute, is clothed with a presumption of innocence. The law says at this point we have to presume he is innocent, but do you understand once we go forward with the evidence and produce testimony to prove to your satisfaction his guilt, then at that point, he no longer enjoys that presumption of innocence? Does everyone understand that?," notwithstanding defendant's assertion that the statement constituted an implied request that the jury pledge a verdict. Palm v. State, 748 So. 2d 135 (Miss. 1999).

Rule 3.06. Conduct of jurors.

Jurors are not permitted to mix and mingle with the attorneys, parties, witnesses and spectators in the courtroom, corridors, or restrooms in the courthouse. The court must instruct jurors that they are to avoid all contacts with the attorneys, parties, witnesses or spectators.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Juror contacts.

Nothing in the record overcame the presumption that the juror followed the trial court's instructions not to talk to anyone and if the bailiff had seen the juror communicating with someone outside the courtroom, he would have informed the trial judge, who then would have conducted a hearing on the matter. Neal v. State, 15 So. 3d 388 (Miss. 2009).

The trial court did not err in failing to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial due to alleged communications between a juror and a witness for the state where (1) the defendant's witness offered only vague, unsubstantiated, after-the-fact testimony, and the defendant presented no additional proof to support the testimony of the witness, and (2) the court presumed that the jurors adhered to the trial court's repeated instructions to refrain from communicating with the attorneys or anyone else connected to the case. Moore v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 264 (Miss. Dec. 21, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 787 So. 2d 1282, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 164 (Miss. 2001).

Rule 3.07. Jury instructions.

At least twenty-four hours prior to trial each of the attorneys must number and file the attorney's jury instructions with the clerk, serving all other attorneys with copies of the instructions. Except for good cause shown, the court will not entertain a request for additional instruction or instructions, which have not been pre-filed. At the conclusion of testimony, the attorneys must select no more than six jury instructions on the substantive law of the case from the instructions prefiled and present them to the judge. The court, for good cause shown, may allow more than six instructions on the substantive law of the case to be presented. The attorneys must dictate into the record their specific objections to the requested instructions stating the grounds for each objection. Instructions will not be given after closing argument has begun except in extreme cases of injustice and in such cases the adverse parties shall have an opportunity to submit other instructions.

The judge may instruct the jury. The court's instructions must be in writing and must be submitted to the attorneys, who in accordance with this rule, must dictate their specific objections into the record.

All instructions shall be captioned at the top of the page "Jury Instruction #__" in order to allow the court to number the instructions given in such sequence as it deems proper. All letters and numerals identifying instructions submitted by parties for the court's consideration in civil or criminal cases shall be in conformity with Rule 51(b)(2), Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, and shall be placed in the bottom right hand corner of each page.

All instructions will be read by the court in whatever order the court chooses, will be available for the attorneys during their argument, and will be carried by the jury into the jury room when they retire to consider their verdict.

Applicability.

Defendant made no contemporaneous objection at trial to the prosecutor's question on voir dire, such that the issue was waived, but notwithstanding the procedural bar, the issue was without merit because the error, if any, was harmless; Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.07, cited by defendant, dealt with written jury instructions and was irrelevant to the issue, and assuming for the sake of argument that the prosecution impermissibly offered an opinion on the law, contrary to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.05, any error was harmless because the prosecutor did not misstate the law and the jury was later properly instructed on the law of possession, in defendant's trial for possession of more than five kilograms of marijuana in Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(c)(2)(G). Morales v. State, 990 So. 2d 273 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Failure to object.

Not only did defendant fail to object to the jury instruction at issue, but when asked by the trial judge if he had an objection, his response was, "No, sir, we don't have a problem with that." Accordingly, defendant waived appellate review by not objecting to the jury instruction at trial, Bynum v. State, 929 So. 2d 324 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), affirmed by 929 So. 2d 312, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 261 (Miss. 2006).

Harmless error.

Where jury instruction was not filed twenty-four hours before trial, as required under Miss. R. CCP 3.07, the error was harmless because the defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from the untimely filing of the instruction. Hill v. State, 929 So. 2d 338 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's convictions for manufacture of a controlled substance and possession of a controlled substance were both proper in part where defendant failed to offer any proof of prejudice resulting from a late jury instruction given to the jury; thus, the error was harmless. Clair v. State, 845 So. 2d 733 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Limit.

Defendant's argument that six-instruction limit denied the jury instructions regarding weighing and deliberations in sentencing phase in capital case was without merit. Evans v. State, 725 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1097, 143 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1999).

Timely submission.

Finding in favor of the bank in the customer's action for fraud was improper because two jury instructions likely confused and misled the jury as to the correct principle of law; additionally, the customer's objections were not waived because she objected to both instructions in a jury instruction conference held out of the jury's presence before the instructions were given. Savory v. First Union Nat'l Bank of Del., 954 So. 2d 930 (Miss. 2007).

Although the State plainly violated Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.07 governing the filing of proposed instructions, defendant did not show the possible alternative theories of defense he might have raised had he known that the State intended to ask for a manslaughter instruction; therefore, he was not prejudiced by the delay. Carter v. State, 858 So. 2d 212 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The failure of the State to submit its jury instructions within 24 hours of the trial was harmless error; the state submitted its jury instructions at 10:45 A.M. on Friday and the court did not reconvene until 1 P.M. on Monday, and the appellants had ample time to review the State's jury instructions and were not prejudiced. Blue v. State, 716 So. 2d 567 (Miss. 1998).

Rule 3.08. Duty of bailiff.

The bailiff will escort the impaneled jury each time they enter or leave the courtroom during the trial and after the verdict. All attorneys, litigants, and spectators will be seated when the jury enters or leaves the courtroom.

Rule 3.09. Unnecessary witnesses.

No party shall subpoena unnecessary witnesses to repeatedly prove the same fact or set of facts. The court may, in its discretion, tax the per diem and mileage of all unnecessary witnesses against the party or attorney for the party causing them to be subpoenaed whether or not they are called to testify. In all cases, the mileage and per diem of any witness not called to testify will be taxed against the party causing them to be subpoenaed, unless good cause to the contrary be shown. Attorneys are directed to confer with their witnesses prior to commencement of trial, and no recesses shall be permitted for conferring with witnesses who were accessible before trial.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Illustrative cases.

The use of two witnesses to testify to the dying declarations of a murder victim did not violate this rule since the testimony of both witnesses was required to satisfy the requirements for the introduction of the dying declarations. Morris v. State, 777 So. 2d 16 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 3.10. Jury deliberations and verdict.

The court may direct the jury to select one of its members to preside over the deliberations and to write out and return any verdict agreed upon, and admonish the jurors that, until they are discharged as jurors in the cause, they may communicate upon subjects connected with the trial only while the jury is convened in the jury room for the purpose of reaching a verdict.

The jurors shall be kept together for deliberations as the court reasonably directs.

The court shall permit the jury, upon retiring for deliberation, to take to the jury room the instructions and exhibits and writings which have been received in evidence, except depositions.

After the jurors have retired to consider their verdict the court shall not recall the jurors to hear additional evidence.

The court, after notice to all attorneys, may recall the jury after it has retired and give such additional written instructions to the jury as the court deems appropriate.

If the jury, after they retire for deliberation, desires to be informed of any point of law, the court shall instruct the jury to reduce its question to writing and the court in its discretion, after affording the parties an opportunity to state their objections or assent, may grant additional written instructions in response to the jury's request.

In criminal cases if there are two or more defendants, the jury at any time during its deliberations may return a verdict or verdicts with respect to a defendant or defendants as to whom it has agreed; if the jury cannot agree with respect to all defendants, the defendant or defendants as to whom it does not agree may be tried again.

In criminal cases if different counts are charged in the indictment or if the court instructs the jury as to related or lesser offenses, the jurors shall, if they convict the defendant, make it appear by their verdict on which counts or of which offenses they find the defendant guilty.

If it appears to the court that the jury has been unable to agree, the court may require the jury to continue their deliberations and may give an appropriate instruction.

If it appears to the court that there is no reasonable probability of agreement, the jury may be discharged without having agreed upon a verdict and a mistrial granted.

When the jurors have agreed upon a verdict they shall be conducted into the courtroom by the officer having them in charge. The court shall ask the foreman or the jury panel if an agreement has been reached on a verdict. If the foreman or the jury panel answers in the affirmative, the judge shall call upon the foreman or any member of the panel to deliver the verdict in writing to the clerk or the court. The court may then examine the verdict and correct it as to matters of form. The clerk or the court shall then read the verdict in open court in the presence of the jury. The court shall inquire if either party desires to poll the jury, or the court may on its own motion poll the jury. If neither party nor the court desires to poll the jury, the verdict shall be ordered filed and entered of record and the jurors discharged from the cause, unless a bifurcated hearing is necessary. If the court, on its own motion, or on motion of either party, polls the jury, each juror shall be asked by the court if the verdict rendered is that juror's verdict. In a criminal case where the verdict is unanimous and in a civil case where the required number of jurors have voted in the affirmative for the verdict, the court shall order the verdict filed and entered of record and discharge the jury unless a bifurcated hearing is necessary. If a juror dissents in a criminal case or in a civil case if less than the required number cannot agree the court may: 1) return the jury for further deliberations or 2) declare a mistrial. No motion to poll the jury shall be entertained after the verdict is ordered to be filed and entered of record or the jury is discharged.

If a verdict is so defective that the court cannot determine from it the intent of the jury, the court shall, with proper instructions, direct the jurors to reconsider the verdict. No verdict shall be accepted until it clearly reflects the intent of the jury. If the jury persists in rendering defective verdicts the court shall declare a mistrial.

While it is appropriate for the court to thank jurors at the conclusion of a trial for their public service, such comments should not include praise or criticism of their verdict.

After the verdict has been received by the court and entered on the record, the testimony or affidavits of the jurors shall not be received to impeach the verdict, except as permitted by the Mississippi Rules of Evidence.

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine, the court erred when it refused to allow the jury to take an audiotape of the transaction with them during deliberations. White v. State, 732 So. 2d 961 (Miss. 1999).

Computer animation.

Evidence that was admitted for demonstrative purposes only should not be given to the jury for its consideration during deliberations; defendant's computer animation should not have been given to the jury for consideration during their deliberations. Cox v. State, 849 So. 2d 1257 (Miss. 2003).

Demonstrative evidence.

Defendants' conspiracy convictions were proper where the trial court did not err in allowing the jurors to take certain transcripts of telephone conversations into the jury room when they retired to deliberate because the trial judge told the jury that the transcripts were strictly for the purpose of assisting the trier of fact and the jurors were cautioned to listen mainly to the audio. Farris v. State, 906

So. 2d 113 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Court erred in admitting a computer-generated animation into evidence and in allowing it into the jury room, as defendant failed to outline the scientific data used to create the animation evidence, and evidence admitted for demonstrative purposes only should not have been given to the jury for its consideration during deliberations. Cox v. State, — So. 2d —, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 103 (Miss. Mar. 13, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 849 So. 2d 1257, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 337 (Miss. 2003).

Form of verdict.

Where a jury returned a verdict of capital murder with avoiding arrest as a mitigating factor, and the verdict stated "the offense was committed with the purpose of covering up and hiding evidence," there was no doubt that the jury found the "avoiding arrest" aggravator to exist under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-101(5)(e), and the verdict form complied with Miss. Unif. Crim. R. Cir. Ct. Prac. 3.10. Thorson v. State, 895 So. 2d 85 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 126 S. Ct. 53, 163 L. Ed. 2d 83 (2005).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant a mistrial after the jury returned two separate verdicts, as the judge redirected the jury's attention to the instruction emphasizing there could be only one verdict and instructed the jury to resume deliberations until a unanimous decision as to one form of the verdict was reached, and the jury returned five minutes later with a verdict finding defendant guilty of burglary of a dwelling Clay v. State, 881 So. 2d 323 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 893 So. 2d 1061 (Miss. 2005).

It was not error for the trial court to submit a duplicate form of verdict instruction, notwithstanding the contention that in doing so, the court caused a verdict to be returned that did not satisfy the requirement that the court receive a written verdict; the instruction did nothing more than provide a list of alternative forms for the verdict and space where the jury could indicate its choice, and once a verdict was reached and the jury marked its decision on the form and handed it to the clerk, as instructed by the court, the requirement of was satisfied. Johns v. State, 746 So. 2d 947 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

No violation of the rule found.

Where decedent was killed in a one-car collision after a tire on his truck burst, his estate sued the manufacturer; the jury returned an interrogatory verdict showing that jurors were divided on the defective-manufacture claim, but when polled all agreed that the condition of the tire was not the proximate cause of decedent's death. The jury substantially complied with the law in rendering the verdict; the trial court was not required to send the jury back for further deliberations pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.10. Oliver v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 10 So. 3d 976 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant was validily convicted by a verdict of the jury accepted and recorded in court, Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-3(1), as the proceedings were in full compliance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County. Ct. Prac. R. 3.10 and the trial court did not have to state expressly that the court accepted the verdict in order to effect defendant's conviction. Neal v. State, 15 So. 3d 388 (Miss. 2009).

Although the record reflected that three jurors did not give audible responses when the trial judge polled them to determine the unanimity of their guilty verdict, this did not support defendant's contention that the only conclusion that could be reached was that the jurors did not agree with the verdict. Although it was customary and expected that a juror give an audible response, nothing in Rule 3.10 of the Uniform Rules of Circuit and County Court required that each juror give an audible response; it mandated only that each juror be asked by the circuit court if the announed verdict was that juror's verdict. Edwards v. State, 997 So. 2d 241 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by giving the jury a supplemental instruction because the initial instructions and the supplemental instructions correctly stated the law and the trial court complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.10. The second supplemental instruction directed the jury to the portion of the instruction they identified as troublesome, plainly told the jury that it was self-explanatory, and then further clarified that the verdict should be based on the evidence that was presented from the witness stand. Howard v. State, 2 So. 3d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 77 (Miss. 2009).

Where defendant requested that the jury be polled after its finding of guilty, and the trial court instructed the jurors to stand and for each of them to individually indicate whether the verdict as read was his or her verdict and each juror answered in the affirmative, because defendant failed to object to the method of polling, and in fact expressed his satisfaction with its results, there was no merit to his issue on appeal that the circuit court had failed to adequately poll the jury. Enlow v. State, 878 So. 2d 1111 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 888 So. 2d 1177 (Miss. 2004).

In a capital murder case, when faced with a juror who questioned his earlier assent to the death sentence, the trial judge did not err in sending the jury back for further deliberations, did not coerce the jury into imposing a death sentence, and was not faulted for failing to give an instruction derived from the situation in Sharplin. Howard v. State, 853 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1197, 124 S. Ct. 1455, 158 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2004).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and arson were proper where it was obvious that the jury was confused about the voting process and that confusion was not alleviated by reference to the initial jury instructions; therefore, there was no doubt that the trial court had the authority to give supplemental instructions to the jury. Payton v. State, 897 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court had the authority under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.10 to give the jury supplemental instructions, and the trial court did not err in giving the jury an additional instruction of voluntary intoxication as a defense and in rereading the murder and manslaughter instructions to the jury, nor did the court find any violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-17-35; the intoxication instruction was necessary in order to guide the jury in making an informed decision on defendant's guilt, and the court found no harm emanating from the trial judge's rereading of the murder and manslaughter instructions. Thornton v. State, 841 So. 2d 170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Reversible error.

In a case involving Medicaid fraud, a trial court erred by giving additional instructions under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 3.10 after the jury began its deliberations because it was not necessary; the trial court should not have used both the defendant's and the state's proposed instructions because they were confusing and impossible to follow. Woods v. State, 965 So. 2d 725 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a negligence case (slip and fall), the trial judge abused his discretion in twice orally reinstructing the jury. That was not to say that a trial judge could never instruct a jury that the verdict was not in proper form; however, the trial judge stretched his comments beyond the bounds of merely seeking to have the jury clarify the verdict, and the conflicting special verdicts, coupled with the series of intervening erroneous oral instructions constituted reversible error. HWCC-Tunica, Inc. v. Jenkins, 908 So. 2d 150 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Although defendant's counsel was tardy in the request for a jury poll, the jury was still in the courtroom. The trial court's failure to poll the jury was reversible error. McLarty v. State, 842 So. 2d 590 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Supplemental instructions.

Approximately thirty minutes into jury deliberations, the jury sent the trial judge a written note that asked whether defendant was being charged with armed or attempted robbery. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in giving a supplemental instruction to the jury in accordance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.10. Hughes v. State, 983 So. 2d 270 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1052, 129 S. Ct. 633, 172 L. Ed. 2d 620, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 8544, 77 U.S.L.W. 3324 (2008).

Rule 3.11. Jury recess.

Within the discretion of the court, a recess of jury deliberations may be held. The jury may be reconvened at the time and place set by the court. In cases in which the jury is not sequestered the judge shall instruct the jury as to the following:

1. That the jurors are not to converse with anyone, including family members or another juror, about the case or on any subject connected with the trial. However, a juror may inform another about the juror's schedule.
2. That the jurors are not to form or express an opinion on the case or any subject connected with the trial.
3. That the jurors are not to view any place connected with the case or subject connected with the trial.
4. That the jurors are not to read, listen to, or watch any news account or other matter relating to the case or other subject connected with the trial.
5. That the jurors shall report to the court any communications or attempts to communicate with them on the case or subject connected with the trial.
6. On such other matters as the court deems appropriate.

When the jury is reconvened, the court, in its discretion, may poll the jury to determine if the jury has complied with the court's instructions.

In cases where the jury has been sequestered the court may instruct the jury on as many of the above matters as are appropriate.

Rule 3.12. Mistrials.

Upon motion of any party, the court may declare a mistrial if there occurs during the trial, either inside or outside the courtroom, misconduct by the party, the party's attorneys, or someone acting at the behest of the party or the party's attorney, resulting in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the movant's case.

Upon motion of a party or its own motion, the court may declare a mistrial if:

1. The trial cannot proceed in conformity with law; or
2. It appears there is no reasonable probability of the jury's agreement upon a verdict.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Prosecutorial misconduct.
Illustrative cases.

Hearsay evidence.

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial in a case involving receiving stolen property because any prejudice flowing from a prosecutor's reference to hearsay during cross-examination was properly cured by an instruction to the jury. Massey v. State, 863 So. 2d 1019 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a prosecution of defendant for aggravated assault, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial and by allowing the case to go to the jury after the trial was tainted by inadmissible hearsay testimony, where the trial court took corrective action by instructing the jury to disregard the hearsay testimony. Norwood v. State, 834 So. 2d 735 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The court properly refused to grant a mistrial in a prosecution for sale of marijuana even though a police officer provided impermissable testimony regarding prior bad acts; the trial court correctly sustained the defendant's objection, admonished the jury to disregard such testimony, and also polled the jury to determine whether "irreparable prejudice" had resulted. Snider v. State, 755 So. 2d 507 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Jury deliberations.

Trial court proceeded to poll the jury and when it asked the juror if the guilty verdict represented her vote on the charge of sale of cocaine, she initially responded, "No." However, the jury had failed to reach a verdict on another charge against defendant for the sale of marijuana, and the jury then reiterated several times that she had in fact voted to convict on the cocaine charge; there was no evidence to support defendant's argument that the trial court coerced the juror into changing her vote and trial court was correct in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial. Avant v. State, 910 So. 2d 695 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

After defense counsel learned from the juror's note that a second juror had been a victim of what was presumed to have been a violent crime, rather than asking the trial court to interrogate the second juror to ascertain the nature of the act perpetrated against her and to determine whether she had understood the voir-dire question, defense counsel chose to move for a mistrial. Based on only the note which came from the first juror, and not juror the second juror, the appellate court was unwilling to hold that the second juror failed to properly respond to the voir-dire question, and in any event, it was an improper characterization to call what occurred a discussion of extraneous evidence. Gibson v. State, 895 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant was on trial for the sale of cocaine in a church zone and possession of cocaine with intent to deliver within a church zone, the notes sent by the jury did not require the judge to comment on the evidence, but merely to provide clarification on "housekeeping" issues to determine which evidence went with which count, and defendant's motion for a mistrial was properly denied. Williams v. State, 856 So. 2d 571 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, en banc, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to declare a mistrial after improper statements by a potential juror where the trial court had determined that the venire had not been prejudiced by the potential juror's remarks. Davis v. State, 850 So. 2d 176 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a prosecution for possession of a controlled substance, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for mistrial, even though certified copies of the defendant's prior traffic convictions, stemming from the arrest which led to the discovery of cocaine, were inadvertently allowed into the jury room during deliberations; such error was harmless as the jury had previously heard testimony regarding the prior convictions. Huckaby v. State, 743 So. 2d 413 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Motion properly denied.

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a mistrial after becoming aware of potential juror misconduct because the judge: (1) investigated the matter by polling each juror individually; (2) struck the two jurors involved in the misconduct and replaced them with alternate jurors; (3) found the other jurors were not exposed to outside information; and (4) found the juror who had written the note reporting the misconduct could remain impartial. Kee Brown v. State, 75 So. 3d 573 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 76 So. 3d 169, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 585 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's convictions for sexual battery and conspiracy to commit sexual battery were proper because the trial judge did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial. When the jury poll conflicted with the verdict, the trial judge was permitted to either order the jury to resume its deliberations or order a mistrial; the trial judge, in his discretion, chose to order the jury to resume its deliberations.

Powell v. State, 58 So. 3d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Denial of defendant's motion for mistrial pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.12 was proper because there was no prejudice to defendant from use of his nickname "Two Pistols" in the State's opening statement. The nickname had evidentiary support in the record from the testimony of the robbery victim, and the reference was an accurate statement of what the State intended to prove. Collins v. State, 30 So. 3d 1239 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Although defendant was brought before a jury venire in waist restraints and handcuffs, there was no abuse of the trial judge's discretion in the finding of no prejudice or in the refusal to grant a mistrial motion because the jury that was chosen did not include any of the prospective jurors that had expressed concern over seeing defendant in handcuffs. Jones v. State, 20 So. 3d 57 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a mistrial in defendant's trial for assault when defendant's husband, the victim, testified that he had died twice because the husband was responding to questions about the extent of his injuries. Ross v. State, 16 So. 3d 47 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Prosecutor's act of requesting in front of the jury that a witness be taken in to custody after he testified was not grounds for a mistrial because, while an arrest of a witness for perjury in the presence of a jury may constitute reversible error, there was no precedent that an arrest of a witness in the presence of the jury for an offense other than perjury constituted reversible error. Roach v. State, 7 So. 3d 911 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 399, 175 L. Ed. 2d 274, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 7474, 78 U.S.L.W. 3206 (U.S. 2009).

Defendant's motion for mistrial was properly denied as defense counsel specifically declined to object to the introduction of the videotape of defendant's police interrogation; nothwithstanding the procedural bar, defense counsel declined a corrective instruction, and the references were sufficiently nondescript that any prejudice resulting from their admission was harmless in light of the other evidence of guilt. Pittman v. State, 42 So. 3d 556 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 42 So. 3d 24, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 453 (Miss. 2010).

In a case involving the sale of cocaine, a trial court did not err by denying a request for a mistrial based on defendant's assertion that the State attempted to appeal to the jury's sense of responsibility for a county's major drug problem because, if the challenged statements were removed from the closing argument, the jury would have reached the same verdict based on the evidence presented at trial; therefore, the State's argument did not create an unjust prejudice that influenced the jury's decision. Moreover, the statements in question did not constitute a "send a message" argument; even if the comments were considered improper, the State's comments were not so egregious to have interfered with the fairness of the trial. Mosely v. State, 4 So. 3d 1069 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Whatever error the trial court committed in failing to distinguish the Miss. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence clearly was harmless as the State produced overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt that went undiscredited, and whatever evidence was admitted by Rule 404(b) was merely superfluous; because the trial court's failure to distinguish evidence of prior bad acts under Rule 404(b) was harmless error, the trial court's refusal to grant defendant's request for a mistrial on the entire indictment was not error. Caldwell v. State, 6 So. 3d 1076 (Miss. 2009).

Circuit court did not err when it overruled defendant's request for a mistrial after the victim testified that defendant was on house arrest when their son was born as defendant experienced no prejudice as a result of the victim's answer to his attorney's question; the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it declined to grant defendant's request for a mistrial where defendant did not experience any prejudice as a result of the investigator's statement. Hope v. State, 992 So. 2d 666 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case involving forcible sexual intercourse, sexual battery, and burglary of a dwelling, a trial court did not err by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial based on a statement made at trial about him being a suspect in a series of crimes; there was no showing of irreparable damage to the case because the jury could have simply thought that the statement was a mistake since defendant was charged in a multi-count indictment, and the jury was presumed to have followed an instruction to disregard. Robinson v. State, 2 So. 3d 708 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a case involving sexual abuse of children, defendant's Sixth Amendment claim was rejected because he failed to show that he was prejudiced by the denial of the right to view the demeanor of the children as they testified via closed circuit television, pursuant to Miss. R. Evid. 617. Therefore, defendant's motions for a mistrial and a new trial were properly denied. Rollins v. State, 970 So. 2d 716 (Miss. 2007).

Prosecutorial misconduct.

Trial court did not err when it denied a mistrial based on the prosecutor's comments on defendant's right to remain silent because at trial, defendant testified to a different sequence of events than he originally told detectives after his arrest, claiming the defenses of self-defense and heat-of-passion manslaughter; he put his credibility in issue by taking the stand and testifying to a different scenario than the one he provided previously to law enforcement. Therefore, the prosecutor's questions upon cross-examination were admissible under Miss. R. Evid. 613 to show that defendant's prior statements were inconsistent with his statements at trial and to inquire about the novelty of the new sequence of events stated at trial. Robinson v. State, 40 So. 3d 570 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Prosecutor's statement was a permissible comment on the absence of evidence to support defendant's defense as the prosecutor's statement neither referred to defendant's failure to testify, nor by masked implication suggested defendant's silence was evidence of guilt; therefore, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's motion for a mistrial. Dora v. State, 986 So. 2d 917 (Miss. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 555 U.S. 1142, 129 S. Ct. 1009, 173 L. Ed. 2d 302, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 780, 77 U.S.L.W. 3429 (2009).

Judge was within his discretion to deny defendant's motion for a mistrial, as the judge determined that the relevant statements of the prosecutor were not so prejudicial that they would influence the jury's decision; furthermore, since the judge sustained defendant's prompt objections to the comments, any prejudice was cured. Jefferson v. State, 964 So. 2d 615 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in failing to grant a mistrial as a result of improper remarks made by the prosecution, immediately before referring to defendant as a child molester the prosecution was reading portions of his statement wherein he stated that he was not a child molester; the prosecutor's remarks constituted fair argument based upon the testimony and the evidence and the facts of the case showed that defendant sexually penetrated the victim, and thus the trial court did not err in failing to grant a mistrial based on the prosecutor's remarks. Divine v. State, 947 So. 2d 1017 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

During closing arguments in defendant's trial for possession of cocaine, the prosecutor's comment on defendant's knowledge of the events was a comment on the weight and sufficiency of the evidence offered by the State, rather than on defendant's decision not to testify. The trial court did not err by denying his motion for a mistrial. Johnson v. State, 914 So. 2d 270 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where defendant was charged with five counts of statutory rape, one count of sexual battery, and three counts of fondling, defendant was not entitled to a mistrial because the State attempted unsuccessfully to introduce evidence of other sexual offenses committed by defendant in violation of a court ruling excluding such evidence. Defendant's attorney declined the judge's attempt to cure any potential prejudice emanating from the remark. Moses v. State, 885 So. 2d 730 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Illustrative cases.

Refusal to declare a mistrial in defendant's murder trial was appropriate because, after a spectator's emotional outburst, the trial court immediately sent the jury out and restored order to the courtroom; there was no further outburst and the trial court obviously did not think that the spectator's moaning was prejudicial to defendant's case. Craft v. State, 970 So. 2d 178 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 89 (Miss. 2008).

In a murder prosecution, while police erred by conducting the pre-trial identification knowing that defense counsel could not be present, the error was not fatal because the victim's in-court identification was based on her view of defendant at the scene of the crime and not based on the lineup; thus, defendant was not entitled to a mistrial. Lattimore v. State, 958 So. 2d 192 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant convicted of burglary was not entitled to a mistrial where a witness referenced bad acts outside the time period given in the indictment; the jury was instructed to disregard the remark. Sandefer v. State, 952 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial because the appellate court could not say that the comment by a member of the venire resulted in substantial or irreparable harm to defendant's case since defendant, in his own testimony, admitted to frequent trips to the store, and defendant admitted going to the two different store locations on the day in question; a member of the venire commented that as an employee of the store, they've seen defendant in the store a lot. Watts v. State, 936 So. 2d 377 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 936 So. 2d 367, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 452 (Miss. 2006).

Because from both jurors' testimony it did not appear that the second juror knew anything other than that the first juror overheard some witnesses talking in a bathroom and did not know which witnesses or the substance of the conversation and that his only role was to encourage the first juror to report the incident to the judge, there was nothing to indicate that the second juror was exposed to an outside influence during the trial; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.12 when the trial court did not excuse the second juror. Bracken v. State, 939 So. 2d 826 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Although a voluntary statement made by defendant was in violation of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments since defendant had asked for an attorney, it was properly used for impeachment purposes during a murder trial; moreover, the failure to provide a limiting instruction on such was not error since defendant did not make such a request, and therefore a motion for a mistrial was properly denied. Sipp v. State, 936 So. 2d 326 (Miss. 2006).

Circuit court did not err in failing to declare a mistrial where the record did not support defendant's argument that the cell phone issue was raised during trial, and defendant's failure to preserve the record barred her claim from consideration. Younger v. State, 931 So. 2d 1289 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1217, 127 S. Ct. 1271, 167 L. Ed. 2d 95, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 2242, 75 U.S.L.W. 3436 (2007).

By sustaining the objection and informing the jury of the necessity of disregarding the putative prejudicial statements, any potential prejudice was avoided; accordingly, the trial judge's decision to overrule defendant's motion for a mistrial was an appropriate exercise of his discretionary power under the circumstances. Mixon v. State, 921 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 2005).

Even though a police officer improperly stated that injuries to a minor child were not accidental, no mistrial was warranted in a felony child abuse case because the jury was properly admonished. Wells v. State, 913 So. 2d 1053 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault, where the State failed to timely disclose a potential witness who said there was a second shooter, the court was not required to grant defendant a mistrial. Defendant refused an opportunity to subpoena the witness; therefore, he suffered no prejudice. Bankston v. State, 907 So. 2d 966 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant argued that the trial court erred because the prosecutor's question as to whether defendant had "ever been accused of anything" prejudiced the jury by attempting to refer to other crimes which he might have committed. However, defendant never answered the question, and he did not suffer serious and irreparable damage from the unanswered question; thus, his motion for a mistrial was properly denied. Tyler v. State, 911 So. 2d 550 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 600 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after the State elicited testimony from defendant's investigator that defendant was incarcerated because defendant did not suffer serious and irreparable damage from the investigator's statement. Moore v. State, 914 So. 2d 185 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 745 (Miss. 2005).

Court did not abuse its discretion during defendant's arson trial in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial because the admissibility of photographs showing a church engulfed in flames was within the court's discretion; jury was later admonished by the court to disregard the photographs. McGee v. State, 907 So. 2d 380 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 910 So. 2d 574, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 450 (Miss. 2005).

In a criminal prosecution for aggravated assault, where the State failed to timely disclose a potential witness who said there was a second shooter, the court was not required to grant defendant a mistrial. Defendant refused an opportunity to subpoena the witness; therefore, he suffered no prejudice. Bankston v. State, 907 So. 2d 966 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

There was no physical evidence linking defendant to the burglary but the jury was provided with physical evidence connecting his accomplice to the crime. Then, the jury was told that defendant was able to identify his accomplice close to the crime scene when said identification had already been suppressed due to the violation of defendant's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights at the time of his arrest (Miranda violation); thus, the identification testimony by the officer was unquestionably prejudicial, the prosecutor's closing argument further compounded the problem by linking the physical evidence connecting the accomplice to the crime to defendant, and the trial court committed reversible error in denying defendant's motions for a mistrial and for a new trial. Carpenter v. State, 910 So. 2d 528 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant argued that the trial court should have granted his motion for a mistrial on the basis that two defense witnesses were intimidated by the county law enforcement officials; however, both of the witnesses did testify at trial, and therefore they could not have been too intimidated. Thus, defendant did not show that the incident prejudiced or damaged his case, and a mistrial was not necessary. Tate v. State, 912 So. 2d 919 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial because the detective's statement that she filed charges against defendant for the murder of the victim did not amount to an improper opinion as to defendant's guilt and was not improper bolstering of the officer's testimony. Young v. State, 891 So. 2d 813 (Miss. 2005).

Where the State moved for a mistrial, no double jeopardy emanated from the first trial because a manifest necessity arose, same being the discovery by the State during direct examination, that its first witness (defendant's companion, charged as an accessory), was unrepresented by counsel. Said witness had made incriminating statements, it was his rights, not defendant's, that the State believed were violated, and there was no showing of harm to defendant or bad faith prosecutorial misconduct. Knox v. State, 912 So. 2d 1004 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 686 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant cited seven instances of misconduct by the State in its closing argument, including references to the victim's family and their attendance at the trial, the State's actions as the "last voice" for the victim, references to the victim's last thoughts, and the grief of the victim's family members. However, the trial court alleviated any prejudice in properly sustaining the objections of counsel and admonishing the jury and the appellate court could not say that the improper arguments led to a verdict that was based upon prejudice and not upon the evidence so as to have justified a mistrial. Smith v. State, 911 So. 2d 541 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. Lexis 634 (Miss. 2005).

Only motions defendant made at trial were a motion for a mistrial and a motion to dismiss based on the State's failure to disclose the past criminal history of a confidential informant. As such, the appellate court would consider only defendant's post-trial motion for a new trial, but not his assertion that his motion for a directed verdict was improperly denied. Dunlap v. State, 883 So. 2d 145 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. dismissed, 893 So. 2d 1061 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant a mistrial when the prosecution commented on defendant's failure to call a certain witness. The witness was not equally available to the prosecution, and therefore, the prosecution had every right to comment on defendant's failure to call him. Bright v. State, 894 So. 2d 590 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 893 So. 2d 1061 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant's attorney argued that a detective's testimony amounted to an improper opinion as to defendant's guilt and that a mistrial should be declared. The trial judge did not abuse his discretion when he denied the motion for a mistrial because the trial judge observed that an officer in every case made a determination as to who to charge and because he found that there was no prejudicial inference that the jury should convict defendant. Young v. State, — So. 2d —, 2004 Miss. LEXIS 588 (Miss. May 27, 2004), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 891 So. 2d 813, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 40 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant contended that the State had erred in mentioning other criminal acts during voir dire where a prospective juror had replied that as a former deputy, he had arrested defendant (the nature of the offense was not stated), and that the State had erred in referring to a similar crime defendant might have committed during its opening argument. As to the former, defendant did not object until the conclusion of voir dire, and as to the latter, while counsel approached the bench, counsel did not specifically state his objection on the record; while any prejudice was negligible, defendant waived both alleged errors and his motion for a mistrial was properly denied. Clayton v. State, 893 So. 2d 246 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 893 So. 2d 1061 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a mistrial after juror revealed in voir dire that defendant was incarcerated. The trial judge found no prejudice because it would be obvious to any potential juror that defendant had been arrested; it would also be reasonable for a juror to assume defendant would have been incarcerated at some point. McDonald v. State, 881 So. 2d 895 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine and his enhanced 40-year sentence were both proper where the trial court properly denied defendant's request for a mistrial based on an agent's testimony mentioning other transactions, because of the defense's refusal to allow the trial court to grant the limiting instruction, and the trial court immediately sustained defendant's objection. Easter v. State, 878 So. 2d 10 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in declaring a mistrial in an armed robbery case because, by the time a Batson challenge was raised, other jurors in the case had already been dismissed; jeopardy did not attach because the record indicated that the jury had not been sworn, despite a trial court's order that stated otherwise. Gaskin v. State, 873 So. 2d 965 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial based on testimony regarding defendant's dishonorable discharge from the military because defense counsel "opened the door" to the testimony during cross-examination. Schuck v. State, 865 So. 2d 1111 (Miss. 2003).

In defendant's trial for unlawfully taking possession of a motor vehicle, an identifying witness's statement that the witness remembered defendant well, even two years later, because the witness "could have got blasted that night," was not grounds for a mistrial, because the trial court quickly instructed the jury to disregard the statement, sought assurances that all jurors could set the remark aside, and because the isolated remark was not considered to have done serious and irreparable harm to the fundamental fairness of the trial. Parks v. State, 859 So. 2d 1084 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where defendant was tried for the sale of cocaine in a church zone, and an officer in testimony referred to defendant's co-defendant (whose case was severed) as being a "Colombian," any prejudicial error, from the fact that Colombia was a country where there are known drug cartels, was harmless, in light of other evidence that overwhelmingly supported the jury's verdict; defendant was not entitled to a mistrial. Williams v. State, 856 So. 2d 571 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, en banc, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to sua sponte grant a mistrial; the trial court granted defendant's request to strike a witness's statement and took appropriate steps to instruct the jury, defendant did not request a mistrial or a continuance, and the trial court did not find it necessary to grant a mistrial sua sponte. Williams v. State, 854 So. 2d 1077 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a mistrial because the unresponsive statement of a witness to the prosecutor's question of whether defendant "acted crazy" did not warrant a mistrial, and the trial court admonished the jury, which was sufficient under the circumstances. Martin v. State, 854 So. 2d 1004 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not err in not granting defendant a mistrial after the district attorney referred to defendant as a "predator" in closing argument; the prosecutor's comments were not prejudicial to the extent that a mistrial was warranted. Piercy v. State, 850 So. 2d 219 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a capital murder case, a mistrial was not warranted where the trial court instructed the jury to disregard a witness's statements that defendant had previously been in the penitentiary. Howard v. State, 853 So. 2d 781 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1197, 124 S. Ct. 1455, 158 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2004).

Defendant was not entitled to a mistrial after a venire member stated in voir dire that this was defendant's second capital murder trial, as there was no showing of misconduct that resulted in substantial or irreparable harm to his case; defendant had been granted an additional peremptory challenge, but never challenged this prospective juror. Shelton v. State, 853 So. 2d 1171 (Miss. 2003).

Where a police witness testified that defendant "stopped talking" after admitting having been in the city where a murder occurred, defendant was not entitled to a mistrial based on an alleged inappropriate comment on his right to remain silent under the Fifth Amendment or Miss. Const. art. 3, § 26; merely stating that defendant stopped talking did not rise to the level of justifying a mistrial. Shelton v. State, 853 So. 2d 1171 (Miss. 2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial following comments by a prosecution witness calling defendant "gay"; trial court's instruction to the jury to disregard the comments cured any error. Osborne v. State, 843 So. 2d 99 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Court rejected defendant's claim that a police officer's testimony was inadmissible under Miss. R. Evid. 701; although the officer referred to the substance found in defendant's residence as a controlled substance, because the trial court gave the jury a curative instruction, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's refusal to grant a mistrial pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.12 on this basis. Mooneyham v. State, 842 So. 2d 579 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 837 So. 2d 771 (Miss. 2003).

In a prosecution for burglary and rape, the trial court did not err in failing to sua sponte declare a mistrial where the prosecutor asked a police officer whether he needed permission to draw a blood sample from the defendant and the officer unresponsively answered "It is my understanding that the suspect was previously convicted for a sexual offense . . ." before he was interrupted by the court and the jury was instructed to disregard his answer. Reed v. State, 764 So. 2d 511 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for the sale of cocaine, the court did not err when it denied the defendant's request for a mistrial after the state asked three questions that referred to the substance in an evidence envelope as cocaine when there was as yet no evidence introduced making that identification where, later during the trial, a witness from a crime laboratory who tested the substance identified it as cocaine. Brooks v. State, 761 So. 2d 944 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

In a prosecution for grand larceny and false pretense, the court properly denied a mistrial where the police chief improperly testified with regard to the exchange receipt and a store's business practices, but the trial court sustained the defense counsel's objection, and instructed the jury to disregard the police chief's testimony. Anderson v. State, 738 So. 2d 253 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

Rule 3.13. Assessment of costs upon settlement of case.

The court may assess all costs, including fees and mileage of jurors who have been required to be present for the trial, against whichever party litigant or attorney it deems appropriate, for failure of an attorney to try the case or for failure to notify the court of settlement of a case before 5:00 P.M. on the day before the trial.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Mistrial.

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in granting a mistrial nor in assessing the cost of the jurors' pay for the day of jury duty where the judge determined that defense counsel in a criminal proceeding purposely set out to, and did, obtain a mistrial after his motion for a continuance was denied. Crosby v. State, 760 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 3.14. Note taking by jurors.

1. Note Taking Permitted in the Discretion of the Court. The court may, in its discretion, permit jurors to take written notes concerning testimony and other evidence. If the court permits jurors to take written notes, jurors shall have access to their notes during deliberations. Immediately after the jury has rendered its verdict, all notes shall be collected by the bailiff or clerk and destroyed.

2. Instructions. The court shall instruct the jury as to whether note taking will be permitted. If the court permits jurors to take written notes, the trial judge shall give both a preliminary instruction and an instruction at the close of all the evidence on the appropriate use of juror notes. These instructions shall be given in the following manner.

(a) Preliminary Instruction: Note Taking Forbidden

You may not take notes during the course of the trial. There are several reasons for this. It is difficult to take notes and, at the same time, pay attention to what a witness is saying. Further, in a group the size of yours, certain persons will take better notes than others will, and there is a risk that jurors who do not take good notes will depend on jurors who do. The jury system depends upon all jurors paying close attention and arriving at a decision. I believe that the jury system works better when the jurors do not take notes.

You will notice that we do have an official court reporter making a record of the trial; however, we will not have typewritten transcripts of this record available for your use in reaching a decision in this case.

(b) Preliminary Instruction: Note Taking Permitted

If you would like to do so, you may take notes during the course of the trial. On the other hand, you are not required to take notes if you prefer not to do so. Each of you should make your own decision about this. If you decide to take notes, be careful not to get so involved in note taking that you become distracted from the ongoing proceedings.

Notes are only a memory aid and a juror's notes may be used only as an aid to refresh that particular juror's memory and assist that juror in recalling the actual testimony. Each of you must rely on your own independent recollection of the proceedings. Whether you take notes or not, each of you must form and express your own opinion as to the facts of this case. An individual juror's notes may be used by that juror only and may not be shown to or shared with other jurors.

You will notice that we do have an official court reporter making a record of the trial; however, we will not have typewritten transcripts of this record available for your use in reaching a decision in this case.

(c) Use of Notes During Deliberations.

Jury Instruction # _____

Members of the Jury, shortly after you were selected I informed you that you could take notes and I instructed you as to the appropriate use of any notes that you might take. Most importantly, an individual juror's notes may be used by that juror only and may not be shown to or shared with other jurors. Notes are only a memory aid and a juror's notes may be used only as an aid to refresh that particular juror's memory and assist that juror in recalling the actual testimony. Each of you must rely on your own independent recollection of the proceedings. Whether you took notes or not, each of you must form and express your own opinion as to the facts of this case. Be aware that during the course of your deliberations there might be the temptation to allow notes to cause certain portions of the evidence to receive undue emphasis and receive attention out of proportion to the entire evidence. But a juror's memory or impression is entitled to no greater weight just because he or she took notes, and you should not be influenced by the notes of other jurors.

Thus, during your deliberations, do not assume simply because something appears in your notes that it necessarily took place in court. (Adopted effective April 18, 2002.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Untimely objection.

Because defense counsel did not object to the timing of an instruction regarding the jurors taking notes in a drug case, the issue was not preserved for appellate review. Vardaman v. State, 966 So. 2d 885 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Rule 4.01. Scope of civil rules.

Rule Series 4 and 5 shall apply only in civil proceedings.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Findings of fact.

Where trial court modified an agreed judgment of paternity to adjust the father's visitation with his minor child, the judgment consisted of twelve pages and included detailed fact-findings and legal conclusions on the issues of modification of custody and visitation. The chancellor properly denied the father's request for specific fact findings. Balius v. Gaines, 908 So. 2d 791 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 920 So. 2d 1008, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 495 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 4.02. Cost deposit.

A cost deposit shall be made with the clerk of court at the time of the filing of the complaint in the amount of $75.00. (Adopted effective May 1, 1995; amended effective June 29, 1995; amended March 22, 2001; amendment suspended April 12, 2001; March 22, 2001 amendment repealed October 11, 2007.)

Editor's Note — By order dated March 15, 2001, the Supreme Court of Mississippi amended Rule 4.02 of the Uniform Rules of Circuit and County Courts, effective March 22, 2001, to read as follows:

"1. A cost deposit shall be made with the clerk of court at the time of the filing of the complaint in the amount of $75.00.

"2. The plaintiff shall make an additional cost deposit of $1,000.00 with the clerk of the court at the time of filing of a complaint pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 11-27-81 claiming the right of immediate possession of property sought to be condemned."

By order dated April 12, 2001, the Supreme Court of Mississippi suspended the amendment to Rule 4.02 pending further order of the court.

By order dated October 5, 2007, the Supreme Court of Mississippi repealed the March 22, 2001, amendment to Rule 4.02.

Rule 4.03. Motion practice.

The provisions of this rule shall apply to all written motions in civil actions.

1. The original of each motion, and all affidavits and other supporting evidentiary documents shall be filed with the clerk in the county where the action is docketed. The moving party at the same time shall mail a copy thereof to the judge presiding in the action at the judge's mailing address. A proposed order shall accompany the court's copy of any motion which may be heard ex parte or is to be granted by consent. Responses and supporting evidentiary documents shall be filed in the same manner.

2. In circuit court a memorandum of authorities in support of any motion to dismiss or for summary judgment shall be mailed to the judge presiding over the action at the time that the motion is filed. Respondent shall reply within ten (10) days after service of movant's memorandum. A rebuttal memorandum may be submitted within five (5) days of service of the reply memorandum. Movants for summary judgment shall file with the clerk as a part of the motion an itemization of the facts relied upon and not genuinely disputed and the respondent shall indicate either agreement or specific reasons for disagreement that such facts are undisputed and material. Copies of motions to dismiss or for summary judgment sent to the judge shall also be accompanied by copies of the complaint and, if filed, the answer.

3. Accompanying memoranda or briefs in support of other motions are encouraged but not required. Where movant has served a memorandum or brief, respondent may serve a reply within ten (10) days after service of movant's memorandum or brief. A rebuttal memorandum or brief may be served within five (5) days of service of the reply memorandum.

4. No memorandum or brief required or permitted by this rule shall be filed with the clerk. Memoranda or briefs shall not exceed 25 pages in length. If any memorandum, brief or other paper submitted in support of a legal argument in any case cites or relies upon any authority other than a Mississippi or federal statute, Mississippi or federal Rule of Court, United States Supreme Court case, or a case reported in the Southern or Federal Reporter series, a copy of such authority must accompany the brief or other paper citing it.

5. All dispositive motions shall be deemed abandoned unless heard at least ten days prior to trial. (Adopted effective May 1, 1995; amended May 23, 2002.)

Finding in favor of the business owner in the husband's and wife's action after the husband was shot by his sister on the business owner's property was appropriate under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.03 because the husband and wife provided no additional authority with which to prove that the business owner's omission of the itemization of undisputed facts should have been fatal to her request for summary judgment; while the summary judgment motion itself did not specifically itemize undisputed facts, the appellate court found from the record that the business owner did attach relevant excerpts from the pleadings, discovery, and depositions, which described undisputed facts. Otts v. Lynn, 955 So. 2d 934 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the company in a wrongful death action was proper where products liability law limited itself to imposing liability on entities engaged in the actual production or sale of goods, Miss. Code Ann. § 11-1-63(a); further, the beneficiaries abandoned their motion for leave to amend because they permitted over three and on-half months to pass without making any effort to pursue a ruling on the motion in face of knowledge that the trial court had taken the summary judgment motion filed against them under advisement, Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 4.03(1), 2.04. Harrison v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 881 So. 2d 288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 882 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2004).

Dismissal of the patient's medical-negligence action under Miss. R. Civ. P. 41(b) was inappropriate even though the record reflected no written motions by the patient requesting additional discovery time and the record showed that the patient failed to reply to a motion to dismiss within the requisite period, because there was no clear record of actual prejudice caused to the physician or medical center, or even that of presumptive prejudice, and the delays were solely the result of the negligence of plaintiff's counsel. Holder v. Orange Grove Med. Specialties, P.A., 54 So. 3d 244 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), reversed by 54 So. 3d 192, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 640 (Miss. 2010).

Medical malpractice complaint was properly dismissed with prejudice because, when plaintiffs (1) did not submit answers to interrogatories until 435 days past the deadline in Miss. R. Civ. P. 33(b)(3), (2) did not begin discovery until almost a year past the deadline in Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A), and (3) did not reply to the motion to dismiss within ten days, under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.03(2), it was unnecessary to show plaintiffs' contumacious conduct, prejudice from plaintiffs' unreasonable delay was presumed, even though defendants did not show witnesses' fading memories and no aggravating factors were present, and lesser sanctions would not suffice, since the case was not an isolated incident of one missed deadline or a short, delayed response. Holder v. Orange Grove Med. Specialties, P.A., 54 So. 3d 192 (Miss. 2010).

Where a firefighter did not file his response to the city's summary judgment motion until 18 days after the motion was personally served, the response was not timely. Pratt v. City of Greenville, 918 So. 2d 81 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Rule 4.04. Discovery deadlines and practice.

A. All discovery must be completed within ninety days from service of an answer by the applicable defendant. Additional discovery time may be allowed with leave of court upon written motion setting forth good cause for the extension. Absent special circumstances the court will not allow testimony at trial of an expert witness who was not designated as an expert witness to all attorneys of record at least sixty days before trial.

B. When responding to discovery requests, interrogatories, requests for production, and requests for admission, the responding party shall, as part of the responses, set forth immediately preceding the response the question or request to which such response is given. Responses shall not be deemed to have been served without compliance to this subdivision.

C. No motion to compel shall be heard unless the moving party shall incorporate in the motion a certificate that movant has conferred in good faith with the opposing attorney in an effort to resolve the dispute and has been unable to do so. Motions to compel shall quote verbatim each contested request, the specific objection to the request, the grounds for the objection and the reasons supporting the motion.

In general.

Trial court did not err in excluding a witness as a late-designated expert as the witness was not designated in a timely manner. While the trial was continued two months, resulting in the expert being identified 73 days prior to trial, the continuance was not intended to allow either party to designate additional experts. O'Keeffe v. Biloxi Casino Corp., 76 So. 3d 726 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 78 So. 3d 906, 2012 Miss. LEXIS 5 (Miss. 2012).

Medical malpractice complaint was properly dismissed with prejudice because, when plaintiffs (1) did not submit answers to interrogatories until 435 days past the deadline in Miss. R. Civ. P. 33(b)(3), (2) did not begin discovery until almost a year past the deadline in Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A), and (3) did not reply to the motion to dismiss within ten days, under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.03(2), it was unnecessary to show plaintiffs' contumacious conduct, prejudice from plaintiffs' unreasonable delay was presumed, even though defendants did not show witnesses' fading memories and no aggravating factors were present, and lesser sanctions would not suffice, since the case was not an isolated incident of one missed deadline or a short, delayed response. Holder v. Orange Grove Med. Specialties, P.A., 54 So. 3d 192 (Miss. 2010).

Pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A), supplemental expert testimony regarding a hospital's standard of care was properly excluded as untimely; the report was submitted just over one month before trial and caused prejudice to the hospital, which would not have had adequate time before trial to review the evidence. Paige v. Miss. Baptist Med. Ctr., 31 So. 3d 637 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Special circumstances.

Trial court did not err in allowing an employer to supplement the designation of its accident reconstruction expert three and a half weeks before the trial date as supplementation was required to address the widow's own late designation of her expert and a change in the widow's theory of the case occurring seventy-five days before trial. Martin v. B&B Concrete Co., 71 So. 3d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 71 So. 3d 1207, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 487 (Miss. 2011).

Because patient did not fully designate any expert witness until his January 30, 2008, filing of his supplemental discovery responses and, to be in compliance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A), the patient needed to designate an expert for trial by December 10, 2007, summary judgment was properly granted on his medical negligence claim against the doctor. Johnson v. Lee, 17 So. 3d 1140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Where plaintiffs, a father and a son, claimed the trial court erred in allowing defendants, two county attorneys, a sheriff, and the sheriff's deputy, to file discovery requests after the expiration of the time allowed by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04 because defendants did not file a written motion for an extension and because defendants had drafted an "Agreed Order" that was forwarded to the court, but to which plaintiffs never agreed, the argument was rejected because plaintiffs had not responded to defendants' discovery request until after the court entered its scheduling order, and the fact that the order was labeled as "agreed" was inconsequential; the trial court had considerable discretion with regard to scheduling orders. Blake v. Wilson, 962 So. 2d 705 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court erred in not granting a trial continuance to defendant company in a personal injury suit because the untimely designation of plaintiff's expert's 59 (versus 60) days prior to trial, the addition of a third theory of liability as to the company one week before trial, and the last-minute deposition of the expert, had the effect of working a severe prejudice on the company which could have been avoided had the trial court allowed a reasonable continuation of the trial. Int'l Paper Co. v. Townsend, 961 So. 2d 741 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 962 So. 2d 38, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 424 (Miss. 2007).

Where an invitee's responses to a motion to compel did not comply with Miss. R. Civ. P. 33, the invitee sought late discovery in violation of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 4.04, and did not show good cause for failing to prosecute after two notices of dismissal under Miss. R. Civ. P. 41(d), the trial court properly dismissed the lawsuit and denied a motion for reconsideration. Guidry v. Pine Hills Country Club, Inc., 858 So. 2d 196 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In parents' action against a doctor for the wrongful death of their unborn child where the trial centered on a battle of experts, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying the parents' the opportunity to add another expert, as the designation of the expert exceeded the discovery deadline by more than seven months, the only excuse being that finding a local expert was more difficult than had been anticipated. Venton v. Beckham, 845 So. 2d 676 (Miss. 2003).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it denied the plaintiff estate's motion to compel where its requests for admissions and interrogatories were filed 169 days after the defendant filed her answer and the estate failed to demonstrate any prejudice from the trial court's ruling. Tatum v. Barrentine, 797 So. 2d 223 (Miss. 2001).

The circuit court did not err in refusing to allow discovery to be conducted outside the 90-day period prescribed by the rule where the plaintiff filed its first set of requests for production 169 calendar days after the defendant filed her answer and the plaintiff failed to demonstrate any prejudice to its case as a result of the denied motion, there being no evidence in the record that the plaintiff had not received the information it complained of needing. Tatum v. Barrentine, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 73 (Miss. Mar. 29, 2001), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 797 So. 2d 223, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 269 (Miss. 2001).

Failure to comply.

Where, despite a timely request for discovery from the defense, a motion to compel discovery, and a motion to continue the case, the State did not release requested information on a confidential informant who was to be the key prosecution witness less than twenty-four hours before the start of the trial, defendant was entitled to a new trial. The trial court's reluctance to enforce the applicable rules of discovery, including Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 9.04(A) and Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A), was reversible error. Patterson v. State, — So. 3d —, 2011 Miss. App. LEXIS 262 (Miss. Ct. App. May 10, 2011), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2011 Miss. App. LEXIS 752 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 6, 2011).

Timeliness.

Dismissal of the patient's medical-negligence action under Miss. R. Civ. P. 41(b) was inappropriate pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.04(A) even though the record reflected no written motions by the patient requesting additional discovery time and the record showed that the patient failed to reply to a motion to dismiss within the requisite period, because there was no clear record of actual prejudice caused to the physician or medical center, or even that of presumptive prejudice, and the delays were solely the result of the negligence of plaintiff's counsel. Holder v. Orange Grove Med. Specialties, P.A., 54 So. 3d 244 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), reversed by 54 So. 3d 192, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 640 (Miss. 2010).

Rule 4.05. Jury selection process.

A. Peremptory jury challenges shall be exercised as follows:

1. The court shall consider all challenges for cause before the parties are required to exercise peremptory challenges.

2. Next, the plaintiff shall tender to the defendant a full panel of accepted jurors having considered the jury in the order in which they appear, having exercised any peremptory challenges desired.

3. Next, the defendant shall go down the juror list accepted by the plaintiff and exercise any peremptory challenge(s) to that panel.

4. Once the defendant exercises peremptory challenges to the panel tendered, the plaintiff shall then be required to again tender to the defendant a full panel of accepted jurors.

5. The above procedure shall be repeated until a full panel of jurors has been accepted by both sides.

6. Once the jury panel is selected, alternate jurors shall be selected following the procedure set forth above for selecting the jury panel.

B. Constitutional challenges to the use of peremptory challenges shall be made at the time each panel is tendered. (Amended April 18, 1995.)

Jury selection outside court's presence.

Constitutionality.

This rule does not supplant United States Supreme Court decisions on federal constitutional law; to the extent that this rule may be in conflict with such, it must fail. Lard v. State, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 519 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 10, 1999).

Jury selection outside court's presence.

State supreme court criticized trial court's actions in directing lawyers to select the jury outside of the trial court's presence because the fact that the peremptory strikes portion of the jury selection was not held on the record posed significant problems in the consideration of defendant's Batson challenge on appeal. Under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 4.05B, constitutional challenges to the use of peremptory challenges were to be made at the time each panel was tendered, and the application of the rule required, at the time the peremptory strikes are made, the presence of the judge to rule on any challenge and the court reporter to record the arguments and rulings. Pruitt v. State, 986 So. 2d 940 (Miss. 2008), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 2008 Miss. LEXIS 342 (Miss. July 24, 2008).

Rule 4.06. Interlocutory appeal from county court.

Interlocutory Appeal. An appeal from an interlocutory order in county court may be sought in the Supreme Court as provided in Rule 5 of the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure. (Adopted effective July 1, 2008.)

Rule 5.01. Appeals to be on the record/exceptions.

Except for cases appealed directly from justice court or municipal court, all cases appealed to circuit court shall be on the record and not a trial de novo. Direct appeals from justice court and municipal court shall be by trial de novo.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Judicial review.

Where a city discharged an employee for directing a police dog towards a suspect who was resisting arrest, the civil service commission properly reinstated the employee because the testimony of the arresting officer and the police department's policies substantially supported the commission's finding that the use of the dog was not excessive force. City of Laurel v. Brewer, 919 So. 2d 217 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Rule 5.02. Duty to make record.

In appeals on the record it is the duty of the lower court or lower authority (which includes, but is not limited to, state and local administrative agencies and governing authorities of any political subdivision of the state) to make and preserve a record of the proceedings sufficient for the court to review. Such record may be made with or without the assistance of a court reporter. The time and manner for the perfecting of appeals from lower authorities shall be as provided by statute.

Rule 5.03. Scope of appeals from administrative agencies.

On appeals from administrative agencies the court will only entertain an appeal to determine if the order or judgment of the lower authority:

1. Was supported by substantial evidence; or
2. Was arbitrary or capricious; or
3. Was beyond the power of the lower authority to make; or
4. Violated some statutory or constitutional right of the complaining party.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Role on review.
Illustrative cases.

Role on review.

Court of appeals misapprehended its burden of proof for an agency decision, under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.03, by reversing a circuit court decision affirming a denial of a claimant's disability retirement benefits because there was conflicting medical evidence of disability but substantial evidence supporting the administrative decision. Thomas v. Public Employees' Ret. Sys., 995 So. 2d 115 (Miss. 2008).

Acting de novo is not the appellate court's role on review, and if the court upheld the decision that the employee was not disabled as a result of depression for disability retirement benefits purposes, the court would have been acting de novo. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Illustrative cases.

In case in which a wastewater services company challenged a utility authority's acceptance of another company's proposal for the operation and management of the authority's wastewater facilities, the services company argued unsuccessfully that the authority's decision was arbitrary and capricious when the authority's engineer evaluated the three "extras" in the winning company's proposal as having a market value of between $ 28,000 and $ 35,000 and by adjusting the services company's bid upward by $ 30,000. The services company did not cite any authority for its proposition that the authority's executive director was not in a position to make the estimates and to assign a market value. Wastewater Plant Serv. Co. v. Harrison County Util. Auth., 28 So. 3d 686 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Disability Appeals Committee failed to point to any objective evidence in the record to indicate the nurse's fibromyalgia did not exist and did not contribute to her disabling condition. Wright v. Public Employees' Ret. Sys., 24 So. 3d 382 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Court could not see how the Disability Appeals Committee (DAC) could base its 2003 denial on its conclusion that the nurse was treated optimally, and turn around in 2007 and claim the same report from the psychiatrist illustrated the nurse did not receive adequate treatment for her illness and needed to be optimized; the psychiatrist offered no new findings to the DAC in 2007 and it reviewed the same report as it had earlier in 2003. Furthermore, these inconsistent findings did not concern mere collateral matters, but instead, these contradictory conclusions formed the main bases the DAC relied upon in 2003 and on remand in 2007 to deny the nurse's claim; the DAC's puzzling contradictory analysis left the impression that its decision was indeed arbitrary and without support of substantial, objective evidence. Wright v. Public Employees' Ret. Sys., 24 So. 3d 382 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

While the court found that the Public Employees' Retirement System's decision to deny benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a) regarding an employee's physical condition was supported by substantial evidence, the court was unable to do so with regard to her mental condition, for purposes of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.03. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Primary issue before the court was not whether there was evidence to support the employee's disability, but whether there was substantial evidence to support the finding that she was not disabled, for disability retirement benefit determination under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a). Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Public Employees' Retirement System's decision to deny benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a) with regard to the employee's anxiety and depression was not supported by substantial evidence; the disability appeals committee relied on the fact that the employee had not been evaluated or treated by a psychiatrist or psychologist, but this was improper, and regardless of whether the diagnosis was secondary, the employee's primary physician stated that she was disabled as a result of depression and anxiety and medical diagnoses by licensed physicians constituted objective evidence of disability, and while the court might have found that the employee's testimony de-emphasized her depression and anxiety to some extent, the committee did not rely upon this, and the employee was to be awarded the appropriate disability benefits. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

For purposes of denying disability benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a), the Public Employees' Retirement System disability appeals committee's finding that the employee was not disabled as a result of arthritis or neck and arm pain was supported by substantial evidence; from a review of the medical records, the committee found that the employee's surgical intervention was considered successful and she was cleared to return to work without restrictions, plus an independent medical examination indicated that the employee was physically capable of performing her job. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

For purposes of denying benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a), the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) disability appeals committee's decision that the employee was not disabled as a result of her fibromyalgia was supported by substantial evidence; one doctor's opinion alone was sufficient to constitute substantial evidence supporting the committee's decision, plus the committee found that virtually all of the employee's laboratory studies were normal and within acceptable limits, and most of the employee's missed work days were attributed to her complaints related to blood pressure and cardiac complaints. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

For purposes of denying disability benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a), the decision of the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) that the employee was not permanently disabled as a result of arrhythmia was supported by substantial evidence; the PERS disability appeals committee evaluated the employee's medical records and cited specific medical evidence to support the finding that the arrhythmia was not disabling, PERS was not required to send the employee to a cardiologist in order to reject certain physician opinions, and given that the committee adequately explained its rejection of these opinions, it was not an abuse of discretion for the committee not have had the employee evaluated by a cardiologist. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

For purposes of denying disability benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113(1)(a), the decision of the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) regarding an employee's hypertension was supported by substantial evidence; although the employee's blood pressure readings might have appeared elevated to the court, it was not the court's place to substitute its judgment for that of the PERS, which found that the employee's medical records showed that the employee's blood pressure readings were within acceptable limits on most visits, and the PERS disability appeals committee sufficiently explained its conclusion that the employee's hypertension was not disabling. Case v. Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys., 973 So. 2d 301 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Commission's finding that a surgical procedure undergone by a workers' compensation claimant was not reasonable and necessary was upheld because the commission's decision was supported with substantial evidence and was not clearly erroneous under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 5.03, as it was based on the reports and testimony of several experts, who indicated that surgery was inappropriate. Moffett v. Howard Indus., 976 So. 2d 910 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 97 (Miss. 2008).

Reversal of the Mississippi Public Employees' Retirement System's (PERS) denial of nonwork related retirement disability benefits to the employee was improper because the circuit court substituted its own judgment for that of the administrative agency; the assessment by PERS in ruling that the employee was unqualified for non-duty related disability benefits under Miss. Code Ann. § 25-11-113 was supported by substantial evidence. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Lewis, 954 So. 2d 440 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Where a city discharged an employee for directing a police dog towards a suspect who was resisting arrest, the civil service commission properly reinstated the employee because the testimony of the arresting officer and the police department's policies substantially supported the commission's finding that the use of the dog was not excessive force. City of Laurel v. Brewer, 919 So. 2d 217 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Circuit court's overruling of the Mississippi Public Employees' Retirement System's denial of disability benefits to a teacher was reversed, as substantial evidence supported the agency's decision. However, the teacher was to submit to an evaluation by a physician of the agency's choice, as well as an updated exam by her physician if she so chose. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Howard, 905 So. 2d 1279 (Miss. 2005).

Trial court erred in reversing administrative board's decision denying benefits which was based on the determination that it was not supported by substantial evidence. However, the board's decision was supported by substantial evidence, was not arbitrary and capricious, was made within the board's scope or power, and did not violate the employee's constitutional rights — the employee failed to meet her burden of proving she was in fact disabled — though she may have needed her surgery, she was clearly able but unwilling to return to her job; the record clearly supported the board's order, which took into consideration all of the medical evidence, which did not establish that the employee's ailments were disabling. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Stamps, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 37 (Miss. Jan. 20, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 898 So. 2d 664, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 255 (Miss. 2005).

Circuit court erred by substituting its judgment in place of a public employees' retirement system's decision to deny a teacher line of duty disability benefits based on contradictory evidence as to whether or not the teacher was unable to perform the duties of the job; it was within the province of the system to decide which evidence was believable. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Howard, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 761 (Miss. Dec. 4, 2003), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 905 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 387 (Miss. 2005).

Appellate court noted that it was not an appellate court's job to determine whether the claimant had presented enough evidence to prove she was disabled, but rather whether an agency had presented enough evidence to support its finding that the claimant was not disabled; the evidence that supported the claimant's case for disability appeared to be anecdotal and while it did not require her to prove that she was disabled, the Mississippi Public Employees' Retirement System's decision was supported by much more substantial evidence than was brought in the claimant's case. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Henderson, 867 So. 2d 262 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Trial court's judgment reversing Public Employees' Retirement System Board of Trustees decision denying public employee's application for disability supported by substantial and not arbitrary or capricious evidence, which disclosed its reasons, was reversed. Public Emples. Ret. Sys. v. Howard, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 28 (Miss. Feb. 7, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 2003 Miss. LEXIS 761 (Miss. Dec. 4, 2003).

Rule 5.04. Notice of appeal.

The party desiring to appeal a decision from a lower court must file a written notice of appeal with the circuit court clerk. A copy of that notice must be provided to all parties or their attorneys of record and the lower court or lower authority whose order or judgment is being appealed. A certificate of service must accompany the written notice of appeal. The court clerk may not accept a notice of appeal without a certificate of service, unless so directed by the court in writing. In all appeals, whether on the record or by trial de novo, the notice of appeal and payment of costs must be simultaneously filed and paid with the circuit court clerk within thirty (30) days of the entry of the order or judgment being appealed. The timely filing of this written notice and payment of costs will perfect the appeal. The appellant may proceed in forma pauperis upon written approval of the court acting as the appellate court. The written notice of appeal must specify the party or parties taking the appeal; must designate the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken; must state if it is on the record or an appeal de novo; and must be addressed to the appropriate court. (Amended May 13, 1996; amended November 26, 1996.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Time limitation.

Where an attorney appealed the denial of unemployment benefits, it was error to find that the attorney's appeal was untimely based on the failure to include a civil cover sheet, because the attorney demonstrated good cause for an extension of the filing deadline since the cover sheet requirement did not bar the otherwise timely notice of appeal. Cummings v. Miss. Dep't of Empl. Sec., 980 So. 2d 340 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Employee abandoned an appeal of the termination of disability benefits by failing to have the record of the administrative agency's proceedings timely filed in accordance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.04, where the employee's attorney failed to take any action for eight months after the notice of appeal was filed. Stuart v. Public Employees' Retirement Sys., 799 So. 2d 886 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The appellant of a replevin does not have to post double the amount of the property value under this rule and any bonds which may have already been posted in the replevin case would remain in effect pending the appeal. Aldridge, May 13, 2005, A.G. Op. 05-0180.

The 10-day rule in Section 11-51-85 does not apply to replevins; someone wishing to appeal a replevin has 30 days to file a notice of appeal with the circuit court under this rule. Aldridge, May 13, 2005, A.G. Op. 05-0180.

The party desiring to appeal from justice court must file a written notice of appeal with the circuit court clerk. Criswell, Aug. 18, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0376.

Rule 5.05. Filing of record in appeals on the record.

In appeals in which the appeal is solely on the record, the record from the lower court or lower authority must be filed with the court clerk within thirty (30) days of filing of the notice of appeal. Provided, however, in cases involving a transcript, the court reporter or lower authority may request an extension of time. The court, on its own motion or on application of any party, may compel the compilation and transmission of the record of proceedings. Failure to file the record with the court clerk or to request the assistance of the court in compelling the same within thirty (30) days of the filing of the written notice of appeal may be deemed an abandonment of the appeal and the court may dismiss the same with costs to the appealing party or parties.

Time limitation.

Circuit court erred in dismissing an employee's appeal of a city civil service commission's affirmance of his termination on the ground that pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 5.05 his, decision to wait forty days before he requested its assistance in compelling the commission to file the transcript exceeded the allowable thirty days because under Miss. R. App. P. 2(a)(2), the employee was entitled to notice from the circuit clerk of the deficiency in his appeal and fourteen days to correct any deficiency, and that lack of notice and opportunity to remedy the deficiency deprived the employee of due process; the circuit court may still dismiss an appeal for which an appellant has failed to timely provide a record, but the Mississippi Rules of Appellate Procedure apply to an appeal to circuit court. Fields v. City of Clarksdale, 27 So. 3d 464 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Employee abandoned an appeal of the termination of disability benefits by failing to have the record of the administrative agency's proceedings timely filed in accordance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.05, where the employee's attorney failed to take any action for eight months after the notice of appeal was filed. Stuart v. Public Employees' Retirement Sys., 799 So. 2d 886 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Transfer of record.

The appellant has the duty to ensure that the record arrives at the appropriate court and cannot rely on one county circuit court to ensure that records are transferred to another county circuit court. Zurich Am. Ins. Co. of Ill. v. Beasley Contracting Co., 779 So. 2d 1132 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 5.06. Briefs on appeals on the record.

Briefs filed in an appeal on the record must conform to the practice in the Supreme Court, including form, time of filing and service, except that the parties should file only an original and one copy of each brief. The consequences of failure to timely file a brief will be the same as in the Supreme Court.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Dismissal of appeal.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the residents'appeal of the city's grant of a special use permit to the humane society as the residents did not file their brief by the time set forth Miss. Unif. Cir. &County Ct. Prac. R. 5.06, and Miss. R. App. P. 31(d) authorized the dismissalof appeals for failing to timely file a brief. Truax v. City of Gulfport, 931 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 334 (Miss. 2006).

Rule 5.07. Procedure on appeals by trial de novo.

In appeals by trial de novo, the circuit court clerk, upon the filing of the written notice of appeal, must enter the case on the docket, noting that it is an appeal with trial de novo. The appeal will proceed as if a complaint and answer had been filed, but the court may require the filing of any supplemental pleading to clarify the issues. All proceedings on an appeal de novo will be governed by the Mississippi Rules of Civil Procedure, where applicable, the Mississippi Rules of Evidence, and these Rules. (Amended May 13, 1996.)

Rule 5.08. Supersedeas.

The perfecting of an appeal, whether on the record or by trial de novo, does not act as supersedeas. In cases being appealed that involve a money judgment, the party against whom money judgment was rendered may post with the court clerk of the court acting as the appellate court a bond that is 125% of the money judgment, such bond to be approved by the circuit clerk. The posting of this bond shall automatically act as a supersedeas solely on the money judgment, but not any other part of the order or judgment. Upon application the court may reduce the amount of the supersedeas bond. In appeals from lower authorities, when the statute provides for automatic supersedeas, the statute shall govern. In all other cases the court may grant a supersedeas upon proof of the party requesting the same, applying the same standards as for a preliminary injunction. However, except in those cases in which the statute provides for automatic supersedeas, no supersedeas will be granted on appeals from a denial, revocation or suspension of a license to practice a profession or a trade. The court may grant an expedited hearing, may alter the briefing schedules, and may require the record to be expedited. In all cases in which a discretionary supersedeas is granted, the court may require a bond sufficient to protect the interests of the other parties. (Amended May 13, 1996.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Authority of court.

The circuit court had jurisdiction to enter a temporary restraining order or a temporary injunction allowing an American Legion Post to continue bingo operations while the revocation of its charitable bingo license was on appeal as § 97-33-61 did not grant an automatic supersedeas. American Legion Post 134 v. Mississippi Gaming Comm'n, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 188 (Miss. Aug. 17, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 798

So. 2d 445, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 71 (Miss. 2001).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The court may grant a supersedeas upon proof of the party requesting the same, applying the same standards as for a preliminary injunction. In all cases in which a discretionary supersedeas is granted, the court may require a bond sufficient to protect the interests of the other parties.This opinion supersedes MS AG Op., Grubbs (August 9, 1996) and MS AG Op., Smith (June 27, 1997). Parker, Aug. 27, 2004, A.G. Op. 04-0407.

In a case where an eviction was granted and judgment was entered for past due rent, if the party desires to appeal both the judgment for rent and the judgment of eviction the party must post a bond that is 125% of the money judgment and must also make application for supersdeas of the eviction. Criswell, Aug. 18, 2006, A.G. Op. 06-0376.

Rule 5.09. Cost bond.

In all appeals, unless the court allows an appeal in forma pauperis, the appellant or appellants shall pay all court costs incurred below and likely to be incurred on appeal as estimated by the circuit court clerk. Should a dispute arise, a party may apply to the court for relief. (Amended May 13, 1996.)

Rule 5.10. Writ of certiorari.

The availability of writs of certiorari shall be as provided by the Constitution and Statutes of the State of Mississippi. Upon the filing of a record pursuant to a writ of certiorari, the case shall proceed as an appeal on the record.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Prosecutorial comment during examination of defendant.

Where defendant asserted that the prosecutor violated Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 5.12 by making the following side remark in her examination of defendant: "I think your definition of the truth is a little different from mine, but, at any rate, as I said, you signed off on it," and by further stating, "I don't doubt someone is committing perjury today, too, Mr. Dunigan," court concluded that even if it were to suppose that the comment should not have been made, it was surely a harmless error and not a prejudicial one. Dunigan v. State, 915 So. 2d 1063 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 793 (Miss. 2005).

Rule 6.01. Scope of rules applicable only in criminal proceedings.

Rule Series 6 through 12 are applicable only to criminal proceedings. For the purpose of these rules a misdemeanor is defined as a criminal offense punishable by a maximum possible sentence of confinement for one year or less, fine, or both.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Punishment for misdemeanor.

Even though a misdemeanor is punishable by a confinement period of one year or less under this rule, a longer probationary period covering a misdemeanor with a suspended sentence can be inferred from Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-25. See also, Wilson v. State, 735 So. 2d 290, 292 (Miss. 1999). Conner v. State, 750 So. 2d 1258 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 6.02. Bail.

A. Pretrial bail shall be governed by § 29 of the Mississippi Constitution of 1890.

B. In all cases involving murder, manslaughter, rape, armed robbery, kidnapping, or other crime punishable by incarceration for a term of twenty (20) years or more, bond shall be 100% of the bail set, unless otherwise ordered by the court. Bail shall be taken in the following form:

State of Mississippi

County of _____

We _____, principal, and _____, sureties, agree to pay the State of Mississippi _____ dollars, unless _____, principal, shall appear at the next term of the Circuit Court of County, and there remain from day to day and term to term until discharged by the trial court or the Supreme Court of Mississippi, to answer a charge of _____.

Signed:_____

Approved. _____

C. All other persons permitted to make bail may, in lieu of a 100% bond, make a cash bail bond provided the following requirements are met:

1. The accused must never have been convicted in any court of this state, another state or a federal court, of a crime punishable by more than one year's imprisonment, been charged with escape, or had an order nisi entered on a previous bond;

2. The amount of the bond must be set by the proper authority;

3. A return date must be set by the proper authority;

4. The accused must tender to the clerk of the circuit court ten percent (10%) of the amount of the bond as set, in cash, or $250.00 in cash, whichever is greater;

5. The accused must sign an appearance bond guaranteeing his/her appearance and binding himself/herself unto the State of Mississippi in the full amount of the bond as set to be used in the case of default;

6. The accused, by affidavit duly notarized, must swear in substantially the following form:

State of Mississippi

County of _____

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and state, _____, who after being duly sworn states:

(a) I have never been convicted in any court of this state, another state, or a federal court of a crime punishable by more than one year's imprisonment. I have never been charged with escape. I have had no order nisi entered on a bail bond executed by me.

(b) The proper authority has set the sum of $_____ as the amount of bail bond to be executed by me. This bond was set by _____.

(c) A return date has been set for this bond. Its return date is _____ and was set by _____.

(d) I have tendered to the clerk of the Circuit Court of _____ County, Mississippi, ten percent of the amount of said bond in cash, which sum is not less than $250.00. Said cash is my property. I authorize the clerk of said court to dispose of the same as follows: If the bond is forfeited, the cash tendered will be paid by the clerk, less a fee of not more than $10.00, to the county, and the amount so paid will be credited on the bond forfeited. If I appear on the return day and a final disposition is made of the case, the amount deposited with the clerk, less a fee of not more than $10.00 to be retained by the clerk, will be disposed of as ordered by the court.

(e) I agree to report to the clerk of the court by telephone, or in person, and in writing on the first Monday of each month as to my current address and telephone number. If I fail to do so, I agree that the bond may be declared in default.

(7) The amount of money tendered under this rule shall not be disbursed to any person except on written order of the court. The money deposited with the clerk shall be disbursed in the following manner: first, to pay any court costs assessed against the defendant; second, to pay any restitution the defendant has been ordered to make; third, to pay any fines imposed against the defendant; fourth, to pay any assignment of the sum made by the defendant to defendant's attorney; and fifth, any refund to the defendant or other disbursements as allowed by the court.

D. The clerk shall in all cases collect the fee imposed by § 83-39-31 of the Mississippi Code of 1972 on the face value of the bond by calculating the fee on the amount of the bond, not the amount deposited.

E. The circuit judge has the discretion to waive or modify any requirements of this rule, except for the collection of the fee as set by § 83-39-31.

F. The sheriff, upon proof that all of the foregoing conditions have been met, shall approve all written bonds and return them to the circuit clerk. The circuit clerk shall file and keep these bonds separately in a safe place where they can be kept for presentation at trial or on demand of the court. (Amended effective August 26, 1999.)

Rule 6.03. Initial appearance.

Every person in custody shall be taken, without unnecessary delay and within 48 hours of arrest, before a judicial officer or other person authorized by statute for an initial appearance.

Upon the defendant's initial appearance, the judicial officer or other person authorized by statute shall ascertain the defendant's true name and address, and amend the formal charge if necessary to reflect this information. The defendant shall be informed of the charges against him/her and provided with a copy of the complaint. If the arrest has been made without a warrant, the judicial officer shall determine whether there was probable cause for the arrest and note the probable cause determination for the record. If there was no probable cause for the warrantless arrest, the defendant shall be released. The judicial officer shall also advise the defendant of the following:

1. That the defendant is not required to speak and that any statements made may be used against him/her;

2. If the defendant is unrepresented, that the defendant has the right to assistance of an attorney, and that if the defendant is unable to afford an attorney, an attorney will be appointed to represent him/her;

3. That the defendant has the right to communicate with an attorney, family or friends, and that reasonable means will be provided to enable the defendant to do so;

4. Conditions under which the defendant may obtain release, if any;

5. That the defendant has the right to demand a preliminary hearing while the defendant remains in custody.

Illustrative cases.

In general.

Defendant's motion to suppress his confession, contending that his rights under Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments, Miss. Const. art. 3, §§ 14, 26 and 28, and Miss. Unif. Crim. R. Cir. Ct. Prac. 6.03 were violated was properly denied where a psychiatrist testified that defendant was not so impaired by mental disease or defect as to make him clearly incompetent to make a confession. Further, in defendant's original direct appeal, he challenged the admission of his confession on five separate grounds and that adverse decision constituted the law of the case. Thorson v. State, 895 So. 2d 85 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 126 S. Ct. 53, 163 L. Ed. 2d 83 (2005).

Through Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.03, Mississippi has provided a procedure for a fair and reliable determination of probable cause by a judicial officer promptly after arrest. If the procedure of Rule 6.03 is followed, the U.S. Const. amend IV and Miss. Const. art. 3, § 23, rights of the accused are protected; however, the converse does not necessarily follow; failure to follow the exact procedure of Rule 6.03 does not necessarily result in a Fourth Amendment or Article 3 violation. Lawrence v. State, 869 So. 2d 353 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1164, 124 S. Ct. 1178, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (2004).

To satisfy the rule and prevailing case law, arrested persons must be afforded an initial appearance both (1) within 48 hours, and (2) without unnecessary delay. Swinney v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 45 (Miss. Mar. 1, 2001), opinion withdrawn by 2002 Miss. LEXIS 360 (Miss. Oct. 31, 2002).

An initial appearance is unconstitutional if the defendant can show that the hearing was delayed for an impermissible purpose, such as gathering additional evidence to justify the arrest, a delay motivated by ill will against the arrested individual, or delay for delay's sake; further, an initial appearance brought within 48 hours may also be unconstitutional if the defendant can show that the delay was not necessary for custody, booking, administration, or security, and was not caused by lack of access to a judge. Swinney v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 45

(Miss. Mar. 1, 2001), opinion withdrawn by 2002 Miss. LEXIS 360 (Miss. Oct. 31, 2002).

The failure to give the defendant a timely initial appearance is but one of a number of factors to be considered in determining whether, in the totality of the circumstances, it can be shown that his confession was not freely and intelligently given. Lawrence v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 153 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 17, 2001), affirmed by 869 So. 2d 353, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 296 (Miss. 2003).

Harmless error.

In a murder case, defendant did not show that his failure to receive an initial appearance prior to his being interrogated by law enforcement, was an unnecessary delay which resulted in prejudice to him. Defendant's confessions were given within 24 of his arrest, well within the 48-hour provision for an initial appearance, a witness's testimony put defendant within feet of the scene of the crime within hours of the discovery of the victim's body, and of seven latent fingerprints/palm prints recovered from the victim's bedroom window, six of the prints belonged to defendant. Glasper v. State, 914 So. 2d 708 (Miss. 2005).

Although the defendant was denied an initial appearance in two cases, the error was harmless as he offered no proof of prejudice. McClurg v. State, 758 So. 2d 473 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Prejudice.

While defendant was illegally detained by the State in that he was not provided with the complaint against him and was also denied a preliminary hearing, he was not entitled to reversal of his conviction because he failed to mention any prejudice to his defense other than the mere assertion that Miss.Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 6.03 was violated. Roach v. State, 938 So. 2d 863 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 937 So. 2d 450, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 600 (Miss. 2006).

Trial court had not erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress hisconfession, because any delay was brought about by defendant, and he waived anyrights he had by the postponement because he initiated the postponement of theinitial hearing by asking to speak to the deputies on his way to the hearingand telling them that he wanted to make a statement. Defendant then signed aMiranda rights waiver. Wilson v. State, 923 So. 2d 1039 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 151 (Miss. 2006).

A defendant was not entitled to have his conviction set aside on the ground that he was not provided a prompt initial appearance where there was no evidence of prejudice. Lee v. State, 759 So. 2d 1264 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

A three week delay between the defendant's indictment and initial appearance, while a violation of this rule, did not require the reversal of the conviction because the merits of defendant's case suffered no prejudice. Johnson v. State, 749 So. 2d 306 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Warrantless arrest.

Where the inmate argued in a postconviction appeal that the inmate was improperly denied an initial appearance or preliminary hearing for a determination of the probable cause underlying the arrest as was required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.03, 6.04, the issue was waived because the inmate had entered a guilty plea pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.05 because the inmate was released on bond. Battaya v. State, 861 So. 2d 364 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

The admitted failure to comply with the rule could not be excused by the fact that law enforcement officials, after the defendant had been arrested, went before a magistrate and obtained an arrest warrant that was subsequently served on the defendant at the place of his confinement; such a procedure is not a proper substitute for compliance with the rule. Lawrence v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 153 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 17, 2001), affirmed by 869 So. 2d 353, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 296 (Miss. 2003).

Illustrative cases.

Defendant's argument that he was improperly held in jail for more than 48 hours without the benefit of an appearance, in which time he was questioned and forced to give a statement without the benefit of an attorney, was rejected because despite defendant's allegation that he was held in jail for three days without being informed of the charges against him, the record showed that he gave his voluntary statement after signing a waiver of his Miranda rights within a period clearly within 48 hours. Bell v. State, 963 So. 2d 1124 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's claim that the trial court erred by not dismissing the indictment for failure to comply with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 6.03 was rejected because he failed to cite the record or explain how his argument was supported by the record; there was a discussion between the court and counsel that indicated that the police questioned defendant about the rape and burglary while defendant was being held on other charges and that defendant was afforded a timely preliminary hearing on those charges, and there was an order denying defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of a timely initial appearance on the rape and burglary charges. Magee v. State, 966 So. 2d 173 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 567 (Miss. 2007).

In a capital murder case, defendant claimed that defendant's statements should have been excluded because defendant was denied the right to an initial appearance within 48 hours of arrest; however, the record showed defendant was given Miranda warnings, signed two waiver forms, and freely, voluntarily and intelligently gave the statements. The State's failure to provide an initial appearance within the time allowed was not, of itself, a reason to suppress defendant's confession. Stewart v. State, 881 So. 2d 919 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for manslaughter by culpable negligence was proper where nothing in the record suggested that there was any type of coercion when he made statements that were later used against him at trial; the law enforcement authorities did not subject defendant, following his arrest, to immediate and constant interrogation until they obtained a confession. Bougon v. State, 883 So. 2d 98 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Although defendant was not given an initial appearance until six days after his arrest, which violated Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.03, because defendant was not taken to his initial appearance within 48 hours of arrest, the failure to comply with Rule 6.03 did not violate defendant's U.S. Const. amend IV or Miss. Const. art. 3, § 23, rights because a probable cause determination was made well within the required 48-hour period, when defendant was served with an arrest warrant on the day after his arrest. Lawrence v. State, 869 So. 2d 353 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1164, 124 S. Ct. 1178, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (2004).

Although defendant's initial appearance was delayed slightly, the delay was reasonable because officers were investigating whether defendant could be charged with double murder and defendant's appearance was still within 48 hours as required. Swinney v. State, 829 So. 2d 1225 (Miss. 2002).

The defendant's initial appearance was unnecesarily delayed, even though it occurred within 48 hours of her arrest, where investigators took her statement, investigated the truthfulness of that statement, and then confronted her with discrepancies, while at the same time delaying the initial appearance and thereby denying her access to counsel, which is provided at the initial appearance, under the guise of investigating which charges to bring against her; however, her resulting confession was nevertheless admissible as she knowingly and voluntarily waived her right to counsel before making her confession. Swinney v. State, — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. LEXIS 45 (Miss. Mar. 1, 2001), opinion withdrawn by 2002 Miss. LEXIS 360 (Miss. Oct. 31, 2002).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

If, after holding an initial appearance, a justice court judge makes a determination that the evidence presented does not amount to probable cause for the felony offense charged, the judge should either allow the prosecutor to amend the charges to a misdemeanor or dismiss the charges and release the defendant; if the charge is amended and reduced to a misdemeanor, the justice court has the authority to remand or pass the case to the file in appropriate cases. Helfrich, Dec. 10, 1999, A.G. Op. #99-0655

The rule does not technically apply to municipal courts; however, it accurately reflects statutory and common law and applies to a municipal court when holding initial appearances. Via, Dec. 27, 1999, A.G. Op. #99-0679.

The rule does not allow a judge to refuse to set a bond for a defendant until the expiration of 48 hours after arrest of such defendant. Via, Dec. 27, 1999, A.G. Op. #99-0679.

Rule 6.04. Preliminary hearing.

At a preliminary hearing the judicial officer shall determine probable cause and the conditions for release, if any. A finding of probable cause may be based on hearsay evidence. Objections to evidence on the ground that it was acquired by unlawful means are not properly made at the preliminary hearing.

If from the evidence it appears that there is probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed, and that the defendant committed it, the judicial officer shall bind the defendant over to await action of the grand jury. If from the evidence it appears that there is no probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed or that the defendant committed it, the defendant shall be discharged from custody. The discharge of the defendant shall not preclude the state from instituting a subsequent prosecution for the same offense.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Collateral estoppel.
Waiver.

Collateral estoppel.

Trial court erred in dismissing on collateral estoppel grounds, the State's indictment charging defendant with cocaine possession, as an earlier dismissal of the State's petition to revoke the previously imposed suspended sentence in light of the new criminal charge of cocaine possession, since the State had not proven the substance in question was cocaine, did not prevent a subsequent indictment and trial on the same charge of cocaine possession. State v. Oliver, 856 So. 2d 328 (Miss. 2003).

Waiver.

Where the inmate argued in a postconviction appeal that the inmate was improperly denied an initial appearance or preliminary hearing for a determination of the probable cause underlying the arrest as was required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.03, 6.04, the issue was waived because the inmate had entered a guilty plea pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.05 because the inmate was released on bond. Battaya v. State, 861 So. 2d 364 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Rule 6.05. Waiver of initial appearance and preliminary hearing.

In all cases wherein the defendant shall post bond and is released from custody, or is allowed release on his/her own recognizance, or has been indicted by a grand jury, the defendant shall not be entitled to an initial appearance. A defendant who has been indicted by a grand jury shall not be entitled to a preliminary hearing.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Preliminary hearing.

Post-conviction relief was denied in a drug case because appellant inmate failed to show that he was denied bail for an unreasonable time after his arrest; moreover, a person who had been indicted by a grand jury had no right to an initial appearance or a preliminary hearing. Ramsey v. State, 973 So. 2d 294 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where, in a post-conviction appeal, the inmate argued having been improperly denied an initial appearance or preliminary hearing for a determination of the probable cause underlying the arrest as was required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.03, 6.04, the issue was waived because the inmate had entered a guilty plea, and the issue was waived pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 6.05 because the inmate was released on bond. Battaya v. State, 861 So. 2d 364 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In cases where a defendant has been indicted by a grand jury, the defendant is not entitled to a preliminary hearing. Hughes v. State, 807 So. 2d 426 (Miss. 2001).

Rule 6.06. Change of venue.

A change of venue may be granted, in the discretion of the judge, upon a showing of good cause. The judge, if the change is granted, shall direct that a certified copy of the order granting the change of venue be transmitted to the circuit clerk of the county to which the venue has been changed. The circuit clerk of the county to which the venue has been changed must file the certified order and designate a docket number for said case for future reference. Unless otherwise directed by the presiding judge, all pleadings, motions, orders of the court or other matters that are thereafter filed shall bear both the original number of the county of original venue and the assigned number of the county of changed venue and shall be filed with the circuit clerk of the county of original venue. The presiding judge may hear or determine all pretrial and post-trial matters in the county to which venue has been changed or in any county of the presiding judge's district. In all cases in which venue has been changed it shall be within the presiding judge's discretion, after the jury has been selected, to conduct the trial in the county of original venue, or in the county to which venue has been transferred. All costs of a trial transferred from one county to another county, including the cost of transporting the jury from one county to another where the same is ordered, shall be borne by the county of original venue. The clerk of the county of original venue shall handle any appeal.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.

The trial court properly denied a motion for a change of venue where the defendant failed to submit affidavits of two or more credible persons showing that the defendant could not receive an impartial and fair trial in the county, and an article in the local newspaper was not sufficiently damaging to require a change of venue. Davis v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. LEXIS 162 (Miss. June 29, 2000).

Rule 6.07. All applications to be made by motion.

An application to the court for an order shall be by motion which, unless made during a hearing or trial, shall be made in writing, shall state with particularity the grounds therefor, and shall set forth the relief or order sought. The requirement of writing is fulfilled if the motion is stated in a written notice of the hearing of the motion or if the matter is presented in an agreed order.

Rule 7.01. Charge to the grand jury.

The circuit judge shall charge the grand jury according to the matters required by law and other statutes as the judge deems fit and proper. Only the circuit judge shall deliver the charge to the grand jury, except that the circuit clerk may read the charge as proposed by the circuit judge when the judge shall be unable to deliver the charge by reason of physical infirmity. A sample charge which may be used is attached as an appendix to these rules.

Rule 7.02. Grand jury.

Grand juries may serve both in term time and vacation and any circuit judge may impanel a grand jury in term time or vacation. The grand jury shall consist of at least 15 persons, but not more than 20 persons, the exact number to be within the discretion of the judge impaneling the jury. Upon impanelment, a grand jury may be convened and reconvened by order of the court. The grand jury will continue to serve until the next grand jury is impaneled and it may return indictments to court in term or vacation notwithstanding intervening terms of court between the time the grand jury is impaneled and the time an indictment is returned. The court may appoint the clerk of court to accept the grand jury indictments. The court may adjourn the grand jury in its discretion. The court shall appoint one member of the grand jury as foreman, who shall take the oath prescribed in § 13-5-45 of the Mississippi Code of 1972. In the event a foreman shall become unable to continue service as a grand juror, the circuit judge shall appoint another member as foreman. The fact that the original foreman was replaced shall not be grounds for attacking the validity of the acts or indictments of the grand jury. If during the service of a grand jury the number of grand jurors able to serve on the grand jury shall become less than 15, then the circuit judge may have additional grand jurors summoned and impaneled. These additional jurors shall be charged in the same manner as the original jurors.

Rule 7.03. Grand jury not to do certain things.

A grand jury has the power to indict any person upon affirmative vote of 12 or more grand jurors. The grand jury report should not accuse any person by name of an offense, malfeasance or misfeasance unless an indictment is returned. If accusations are included in a grand jury report, the comments may be expunged upon the motion of the individual(s), or on motion of the court.

Rule 7.04. Grand jury secrecy.

A grand juror, except when called as a witness in court, shall keep secret the proceedings and actions taken in reference to matters brought before the grand jury for six months after final adjournment of the grand jury and the name and testimony of any witness appearing before the grand jury shall be kept secret. No grand juror, witness, attorney general, district attorney, county attorney, other prosecuting attorney, clerk, sheriff or other officer of the court shall disclose to any unauthorized person that an indictment is being found or returned into court against a defendant or disclose any action or proceeding in relation to the indictment before the finding of an indictment or within six months thereafter or before the defendant is arrested or gives bail or recognizance. No attorney general, district attorneys, county attorneys, or any other prosecuting attorneys or any other officer of the court shall announce to any unauthorized person what the grand jury will consider in its deliberations. If such information is disclosed, the disclosing person may be found in contempt of court punishable by fine or imprisonment.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Illustrative cases.

The defendant was not entitled to examine the records of testimony presented to the grand jury, notwithstanding his assertion that he was indicted only because false information was presented to the grand jury, because such allegation did not establish a "particularized need" which outweighed the need for secrecy of the grand jury proceeding. James v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 164 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 11, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 777 So. 2d 682, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Rule 7.05. Recalcitrant witnesses before grand jury.

When a witness under examination before the grand jury refuses to testify, to answer a question or to give evidence, the grand jury shall proceed with the witness in open court. The foreman shall then distinctly state to the court the question or evidence requested and the refusal of the witness. If, after inquiry, the court shall decide that the witness is bound to testify, answer or give the evidence, the court shall so inform the witness. If the witness persists in refusing to answer the question, or testify, or to give evidence, the court shall proceed with the witness as in cases of similar refusal in open court.

Rule 7.06. Indictments.

The indictment upon which the defendant is to be tried shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged and shall fully notify the defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation. Formal and technical words are not necessary in an indictment, if the offense can be substantially described without them. An indictment shall also include the following:

1. The name of the accused;
2. The date on which the indictment was filed in court;
3. A statement that the prosecution is brought in the name and by the authority of the State of Mississippi;
4. The county and judicial district in which the indictment is brought;
5. The date and, if applicable, the time at which the offense was alleged to have been committed. Failure to state the correct date shall not render the indictment insufficient;
6. The signature of the foreman of the grand jury issuing it; and
7. The words "against the peace and dignity of the state."

The court on motion of the defendant may strike from the indictment any surplussage, including unnecessary allegations or aliases. (Amended effective August 26, 1999.)

Bill of information charging defendant with statutory rape was not required to conform to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06; Rule 7.06 governed the form of indictments, not informations. Frazier v. State, 28 So. 3d 646 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 27 So. 3d 404, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 84 (Miss. 2010).

Capital murder.

Petitioner's claim that his death sentence had to be vacated because the aggravating circumstances that charged capital murder were not included in the indictment was without merit because the indictment conformed to the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06, and petitioner was not entitled to formal notice of the aggravating circumstances to be employed by the prosecution. Lynch v. State, 951 So. 2d 549 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's capital murder conviction was proper pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 where the indictment did not fail to specifically inform him of the subsection under which the State planned to proceed with the charge against him. The indictment in the case cited to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(2)(a), which made that a capital offense and informed defendant of what made his offense a capital crime. Davis v. State, 914 So. 2d 200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 746 (Miss. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 856, 127 S. Ct. 133, 166 L. Ed. 2d 98, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 6743, 75 U.S.L.W. 3167 (2006).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in refusing to quash the indictment as defendant's contention that the indictment did not identify the co-conspirators was specifically waived and disavowed by defendant at trial, all seven requirements of Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 were met, the indictment reasonably provided defendant with actual notice of the charge against her, and defendant failed to prove, or even allege, that she was prejudiced, hampered, or disadvantaged in any way in preparing her defense to meet this indictment. Byrom v. State, 863 So. 2d 836 (Miss. 2003), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 71, 160 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2004).

An indictment was sufficient where it contained a charge of capital murder under § 97-3-19(2)(f) and included all seven factors enumerated in the rule. It was not necessary for the indictment to specifically set forth the elements of the underlying felony used to elevate the crime to capital murder. James v. State, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 164 (Miss. Ct. App. Apr. 11, 2000), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 777 So. 2d 682, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 457 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Date of offense.

Because the amendment to defendant's indictment did not alter his defense, it was proper; the amendment merely corrected the sentencing date of one of the underlying convictions contained in the habitual-offender portion of the indictment, and the original indictment put defendant on notice that the State planned to use his prior conviction to enhance his sentence. Peterson v. State, 37 So. 3d 669 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant never objected to his indictment and thus his argument that the indictment was too vague was waived, but the argument was without merit in any event because under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06(5), the failure to state the correct date did not render an indictment insufficient and defendant was fully and fairly apprised of the charges against him. Wilson v. State, 990 So. 2d 798 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

State's amendment of the indictment to change the date of the alleged burglaries was proper where a failure to state the correct date did not render the indictment insufficient under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06(5). Logan v. State, 987 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 45 (Miss. 2009).

Fact that a traffic ticket issued in a driving under the influence case had a scrivener's error regarding the date of offense did not render it ineffective under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 because defendant was put on notice of the date of the offense by the fact that the date was correct on the other two citations he was issued. Scott v. City of Booneville, 962 So. 2d 698 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 637 (Miss. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant was convicted of the sale of cocaine because the indictment satisfied Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 when it included the date that the offense was allegedly committed; moreover, the money received and the amount of cocaine did not have to be included in the indictment they were not elements of the crime under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(a)(1), (b)(1). Shorter v. State, 946 So. 2d 815 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because the victim was under the age of 14 during the entire time frame identified in the indictment, the alleged deficiency in failing to allege a specific date for the sexual abuse in the indictment was nonjurisdictional and was waived when defendant failed to raise the issue with the trial court in a timely manner. In addition, the indictment was sufficient to apprise defendant of the crimes with which he was charged; furthermore, the broad time span contained in the indictment (and therefore the jury instruction) was based in large part upon the varying times provided by defendant himself. Baker v. State, 930 So. 2d 399 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 497 (Miss. 2006).

Denial of the inmate's petition for post-conviction relief was appropriate because his indictment was not defective; the indictment clearly set the date of the offense as December 29 or 30, 2001 and in his sworn petition and in his statement under oath at the plea hearing, the inmate said that he killed the victim on December 30, 2001. Harris v. State, 944 So. 2d 900 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err by failing to dismiss an indictment in a statutory rape case because there was no requirement of specific dates and times. Price v. State, 898 So. 2d 641 (Miss. 2005).

In defendant's prosecution for fondling a child victim, his argument that the indictment failed to properly advise him of the date of the offense because it alleged that the offense occurred over more than a two-year period, and deprived him of a fair opportunity to prepare defense, was rejected; the indictment was amended at the conclusion of the State's case to narrow, to a three-month window, the time period, and the child was very specific as to the dates of the offense. Barnes v. State, 906 So. 2d 16 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 904 So. 2d 184 (Miss. 2005).

Under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 (5), the failure to state the correct date did not render an indictment insufficient; therefore, the indictment was merely defective because the year read 1998 rather than 1997. Wofford v. State, 875 So. 2d 251 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In an aggravated assault case, defendant was not prejudiced by the lack of specificity in the listing of the date of the offenses charged in the indictment, as a change in the date of the offenses did not affect the viability of defendant's defense, since the date was not the essence of the crimes and was, therefore, amendable and the error not fatal. Davis v. State, 866 So. 2d 1107 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Amending the date of the offense from "during the month of July" to "sometime in May or June" was allowed because it was immaterial to the merits of the case and the defense would not be prejudiced by the amendment. Crawford v. State, 754 So. 2d 1211 (Miss. 2000).

Form of indictment.

Defendant's argument that his convictions for aggravated assault on law enforcement officers should be reversed and remanded or that he should be resentenced on the lesser charge of simple assault on law enforcement officers was without merit. The heading of defendant's indictment stated that he was being charged with aggravated assault on a law enforcement officer and the counts stated that statute under which he was charged; thus, it was clear from the indictment that he injured the two police officers with a deadly weapon. Mayers v. State, 42 So. 3d 33 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 42 So. 3d 24, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 437 (Miss. 2010).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for postconviction relief after defendant pled guilty in two cases to the sale of cocaine because the requirements for the form of an indictment were met. Hunt v. State, 11 So. 3d 764 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Because defendant pled guilty to manslaughter and transfer of a controlled substance, defendant's argument on appeal regarding the indictment being defective was waived; nonetheless, the appellate court determined that the indictment met the requirements of the rule. Conlee v. State, 23 So. 3d 535 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 22 So. 3d 1193, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 616 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's convictions for conspiracy, burglary of a building other than a dwelling, attempted grand larceny, and attempted aggravated assault were appropriate because a new, formal indictment would have provided no additional notice to defendant or his counsel as to any possible charges or defenses that they were not aware of after the order amending the indictment was filed. Commodore v. State, 994 So. 2d 864 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's indictment met the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 where, under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-9, the endorsement by the foreman, together with the marking, dating, and signing by the clerks shall be the legal evidence of the finding and presenting to the court of the indictment; defendant's indictment was endorsed by the grand jury foreman; it was also marked "filed," dated, and signed by the clerk of the circuit court, and as such, his indictment was free from jurisdictional defects. Watts v. State, 981 So. 2d 1034 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where appellant pleaded guilty to two counts of sexual battery, his lawyer was not deficient because he allowed appellant to plead guilty to a faulty indictment which he claimed did not meet the requirements of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-7-9 and Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06. The indictments charging defendant with committing sexual battery bore a signature of the grand jury foreman and each was stamped filed on October 20, 2005, by the circuit clerk; three unsigned and unfiled indictments in the case were not cause to grant appellant relief on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Kimble v. State, 983 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06, there is no requirement that the indictment include a caption from the minutes; therefore, defendant's indictment for the sale of cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(b) was not defective for failing to include such a caption. Morgan v. State, 966 So. 2d 204 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied based on an amended indictment in an aggravated assault case because the failure to include the phrase "thereby manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life" was not erroneous since this was not an element of the crime; moreover, all of the requirements for indictments under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 were met. Nichols v. State, 955 So. 2d 962 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant's suspended sentence for statutory rape was revoked because he waived issues relating to a speedy trial and defects in an evidence sample due to a guilty plea, there was no evidence that an indictment was manufactured, and the revocation of the suspended sentence was permitted under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-34 and Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-37 where defendant had already served a portion of a five-year sentence after the guilty plea was entered. Davis v. State, 954 So. 2d 530 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a new trial following her conviction for felony shoplifting, as the uncontroverted evidence was that defendant and a friend entered the store, took items of clothing from the racks, and defendant's friend left the store without paying for the items that defendant had given her. Watson v. State, 939 So. 2d 806 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 939 So. 2d 805, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 592 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant was originally indicted for attempted breaking and entering, but the indictment was properly amended when the amendment was one of form, not substance, and defendant had notice, as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06. Spears v. State, 942 So. 2d 772 (Miss. 2006).

Where the original indictment identified the inmate by name and stated that he unlawfully, wilfully, feloniously, and burglariously broke into and entered a storage shed, the indictment was not defective as it tracked the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33, and a subsequent amendment to change a section number did not require the indictment to be returned to the grand jury. Ford v. State, 911 So. 2d 1007 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Although defendant argued that the indictment against him was defective, his assertion was not supported by the record where the indictment contained the grand jury foreman's signature and the requisite phrase "against the peace and dignity of the State of Mississippi;" the indictment was in accord with the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. R. 7.06. Beene v. State, 910 So. 2d 1152 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

The court rejected the defendant's claim that he was denied due process of law because in the bill of information each count ended with the words "against the peace and dignity of the State," as his guilty plea waived all technical and nonjurisdictional issues and as the claim was also without merit. McCullen v. State, 786 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The fact that the signature of the grand jury foreman appeared after the phrase "against the peace and dignity of the state" did not render the indictment defective; for that language to "conclude" the indictment does not mean it must appear by itself at the bottom of the page on which the charging language is typed and signed. Chaney v. State, 739 So. 2d 416 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Multicount indictment.

In a case in which appellant sought postconviction collateral relief because he claimed, among other things, that the multicount indictment was defective, appellant waived possible complaints of a defective indictment because he failed to raise this issue before entering his guilty pleas to drug charges. Hentz v. State, 852 So. 2d 70 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 315 (Miss. 2003).

A multicount indictment for touching a child under the age of 14 for lustful purposes was proper where it included accusations of three separate and distinct acts as reported by the child victim. Bosarge v. State, 786 So. 2d 426 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Place of indictment.

Indictment was sufficient under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 because it listed the state, court, and county in which the indictment was being brought. Furthermore, because the weight involved in a charge of possession of cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139 only affected the penalty imposed, not the crime itself, there was no problem with the amendment of the indictment. Harris v. State, 5 So. 3d 1127 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 181 (Miss. 2009).

Indictment charging defendant with the sale of cocaine was not invalid under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06(4) for failing to contain the jurisdictional elements of the crime charged; Lee County only had one judicial district, and the indictment stated that it was brought in Lee County. Coleman v. State, 979 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Because the county in which an indictment was brought had only one judicial district, it was not necessary for the indictment to identify the judicial district in which it was brought. Harris v. State, 757 So. 2d 195 (Miss. 2000).

An indictment sufficiently included the county and judicial district in which the indictment against the defendant was brought where the indictment was entitled "Indictment For The Offense Of Murder § 97-3-19;" immediately below, in capital letters and bold print appeared the words "County Of Carroll, Second Judicial District;" and the body of the indictment alleged the murder of the victim "in the county, judicial district, and state aforesaid." Campbell v. State, 749 So. 2d 1208 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Proof of charges.

Where the evidence showed that appellant used a deadly weapon to strike his current spouse and to shoot the other victim, the State showed intent to cause bodily injury with a deadly weapon. The indictment charging appellant with aggravated assault in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(2)(b) and aggravated domestic violence in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7(4) was not defective under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06. McComb v. State, 986 So. 2d 1087 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 36 So. 3d 455, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for the sale of dextropropoxyphene, a schedule IV controlled substance was proper because she never claimed that the circuit court should have granted a directed verdict because of a variance between the proof and the indictment; further, the state proved that the named confidential informant was the coded confidential informant when the informant testified that he acted as a confidential informant and that he purchased narcotics from defendant. Smith v. State, 948 So. 2d 474 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Where the State charged defendant with attempted armed robbery pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict. The State failed to prove that the victim was placed in immediate fear by exhibition of a deadly weapon, an essential element of the crime as charged in the indictment. Dambrell v. State, 905 So. 2d 655 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where the State has failed to prove each and every essential element of the indictment as drafted, the Court of Appeals of Mississippi is compelled to reverse and render the conviction. Dambrell v. State, 905 So. 2d 655 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Repeat offenses.

Indictment for Felony DUI-Third Offense met requirements of this section; not only were defendant's prior DUI convictions and courts in which they were tried enumerated on face of indictment, but abstracts of court record showing convictions were attached and made part of indictment. Weaver v. State, 713 So. 2d 860 (Miss. 1997).

Service of indictment.

Where police found a bottle of vodka and four cans of beer in defendant's vehicle, he was arrested and charged with the offenses of possession of whiskey and possession of beer in a dry county; the failure of the police justice affidavit to cite to the Mississippi statute did not render the affidavit invalid, as defendant was adequately notified of the nature and cause of the accusations against him and the affidavit complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06. Loveless v. City of Booneville, 972 So. 2d 723 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 2 (Miss. 2008).

In defendant's auto burglary case, the indictment was properly served because defendant was already in possession of a copy of the indictment at the time his counsel moved to dismiss for improper service, at the hearing the circuit court judge stated that he wanted the lack of proper service to be cured, and defendant was re-served with the second indictment by the assistant district attorney and in the presence of the trial judge and his defense counsel. Qualls v. State, 947 So. 2d 365 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Sufficient description of offense.

Defendant's indictment for receiving or possessing athletic wear which was stolen and exceeded a value of over $500, in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-5 was sufficient to inform him as to the charges he was facing such that he had a fair opportunity to prepare a defense; it was of no instance that the indictment did not list each individual cap, sweatshirt, or pair of tennis shoes since the purpose of an indictment is to inform defendant, with some measure of certainty, as to the nature of the charges brought against him. Tucker v. State, 47 So. 3d 164 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), reversed by 47 So. 3d 135, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 573 (Miss. 2010).

Defendant's conviction for simple assault of an employee of a private correctional facility was appropriate because the nature and cause of the charge against defendant were clear and the indictment properly informed him of the possible defenses to the charged offense. The trial court was within its discretion in finding that the jury properly weighed the evidence and determined that the State showed that the victim suffered an injury as a result of defendant's striking her with his fist. Moten v. State, 20 So. 3d 757 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Indictment was not defective because it did not contain the type of personal use defendant engaged in that led to his indictment for embezzlement and fraud because the indictment sufficiently stated the essential elements of the crime and the acts which constituted the embezzlement or fraud. Terry v. State, 26 So. 3d 378 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 24 So. 3d 1038, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 34 (Miss. 2010).

Indictment charging defendant conspiracy to posses precursors was not insufficient for failing to include the language "with the intent to unlawfully manufacture a controlled substance" because the crime of conspiracy andthe crime of possession of precursors were inherently different and the crime of conspiracy did not merge with the crime of possession of precursors. While the State was required to inform a defendant of the underlying crime to which he conspired, the State did not have to prove every element of the underlying crime in order to prevail on a conspiracy charge; therefore, the indictment did not have to include language that defendant possessed precursors with the intent to manufacture a controlled substance or with knowledge that the precursor chemicals would be used to unlawfully manufacturer a controlled substance. Berry v. State, 996 So. 2d 782 (Miss. 2008).

Indictment charging defendant with embezzlement sufficiently provided notice of the essential elements of the crime of embezzlement, and the indictment cited to the statute proscribing embezzlement; accordingly, the indictment was proper. Wilson v. State, 12 So. 3d 8 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 14 So. 3d 731, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 306 (Miss. 2009).

Where each count of the indictment specifically stated that defendant did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously commit sexual battery by some form of sexual penetration or performing cunnilingus on the victim while defendant was above the age of eighteen and the victim was under the age of sixteen, the indictment was not fatally flawed because it tracked the language of both subsections (c) and (d) of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1). The indictment satisfied the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06, because it included the birth date of both defendant and the victim as well as the time of the alleged offense; the fact that it mistakenly referred to the victim as being under the age of sixteen instead of fourteen was irrelevant. Smith v. State, 989 So. 2d 973 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In defendant's armed robbery case, the court properly denied a motion to quash the indictment because, during the motion hearing, defense counsel only argued that defendant's opportunity to present an alibi would be removed if the indictment were amended, defendant declined the court's offer for continuance, and defendant was well aware of the charge against him and stood ready to defend that charge. Jones v. State, 993 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 503 (Miss. 2008).

Defendants' embezzlement indictment was sufficient because the only named entities in the indictment were the customers who had paid sums to defendants that had not been forwarded to the insurance company; therefore, it was logical that the customers were the alleged victims. Salts v. State, 984 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 334 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's conviction for capital rape in violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(1)(b) was proper because it was clear from a plain reading of the indictment as a whole that each of the seven enumerated requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 were satisfied. The absence of the specific language pertaining to the victim of the rape being 24 months younger than the person accused was of no merit. Gordon v. State, 977 So. 2d 420 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Indictment for sale of cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(a)(1), (b)(1) (2005) was not defective for omitting the weight or quantity of cocaine sold because the penalty was the same regardless of the quantity sold; thus the amount of cocaine sold was not an essential element of the crime. Smith v. State, 973 So. 2d 1003 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for forcible rape was upheld where the indictment gave a clear and concise statement of the elements of the crime with which defendant was charged; the fact that defendant was indicted for violation of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-65(3)(a), which provided the penalty for statutory rape, rather than subsection (4)(a) which listed the elements of forcible rape, was of no consequence. Robinson v. State, 966 So. 2d 209 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 401 (Miss. 2009).

Indictment charging a person with money laundering under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-101(1)(b)(ii)(1) was required to specify the "unlawful activity" from which the illegal proceeds were alleged to have derived, and violation of this requirement may be cured only where the prosecution demonstrated that it otherwise provided timely notice to defendant of the alleged illegal activity, and that the notice clearly and sufficiently provided defendant a fair opportunity to prepare a defense to the charges; the omission of the "specified unlawful activity" in defendant's indictment was harmless error which did not render the trial fundamentally unfair. Tran v. State, 962 So. 2d 1237 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 553 U.S. 1054, 128 S. Ct. 2472, 171 L. Ed. 2d 769, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 4212, 76 U.S.L.W. 3619 (2008).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied to petitioner who was sentenced to death for murder committed in the course of a robbery where, although the aggravating circumstances which invoked the death penalty were not charged in the indictment, the fact that the capital murder statute listed the possible aggravating circumstances refuted the contention that petitioner had inadequate notice. Thong Le v. State, 967 So. 2d 627 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 552 U.S. 1300, 128 S. Ct. 1747, 170 L. Ed. 2d 547, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 2913, 76 U.S.L.W. 3528 (2008).

Defendants complained that an indictment was unconstitutionally vague for not naming an insurance company to which defendants failed to forward payments; however, defendants were accused of taking money that should have gone to an insurance company, and under the circumstances the indictment was sufficient to notify defendants of the nature of the charges against them. Salts v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 513 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 7, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 984 So. 2d 1050, 2008 Miss. App. LEXIS 199 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Although a typographical error existed concerning the subsection number, the substance of the indictment read that defendant was charged with forcible rape, specifically it read that defendant did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and knowingly have forcible sexual intercourse with the victim; this was sufficient to provide notice of the crime charged and the indictment satisfied Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06. Wright v. State, 958 So. 2d 158 (Miss. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 964 So. 2d 508, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 501 (Miss. 2007).

Indictment against defendant described the charge of attempted burglary by citing the burglary statute, providing the details of the alleged attempted burglary, and supplying the details concerning the failure to complete the burglary; thus, the indictment against defendant stated the essential facts, and fully notified him of the nature and cause of the charges brought against him, and therefore the trial court did not err in denying the motion to quash the indictment. Brown v. State, 961 So. 2d 720 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

If an indictment reasonably provided the accused with actual notice and it complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06, it is sufficient to charge the defendant with the crime; there was no question that defendant received actual notice of the crime with which he was being charged. Garner v. State, 928 So. 2d 911 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 929 So. 2d 923, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 252 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1060, 127 S. Ct. 677, 166 L. Ed. 2d 528, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 9138, 75 U.S.L.W. 3283 (2006), remanded by 944 So. 2d 934, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 921 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant's indictment was not defective under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 where defendant's assertion that the indictment needed to mention a particular quantity of drug was flawed, and cocaine was a Schedule II drug that was made criminal by Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(c), and a particular quantity was not specified; thus, the amount of cocaine that defendant sold was not an essential element to the crime. Mosley v. State, 941 So. 2d 877 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Trial court did not err in not dismissing an indictment against defendant charging him with breaking and entering a dwelling as a habitual offender where defendant was informed of the charges against him, including when and where the crime was committed. The failure to list the specific address of the dwelling, when the person from whom the property was taken was named in the indictment, was not error. Roach v. State, 938 So. 2d 863 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 937 So. 2d 450, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 600 (Miss. 2006).

Inmate's indictment was not defective even though the indictment allegedly improperly characterized his weapon as a deadly weapon; although in one robbery, he represented to his victim that his finger was a gun, the indictment gave the inmate notice of the crime with which he was charged, armed robbery. Garner v. State, — So. 2d —, 2005 Miss. App. LEXIS 695 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 27, 2005), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 928 So. 2d 911, 2006 Miss. App. LEXIS 119 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Indictment explicitly stated that the defendant was being charged with motor vehicle theft under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-42; there was no evidence presented that defendant was surprised or that he did not not know, to his prejudice, that he was being prosecuted under § 97-17-42 for motor vehicle theft; therefore, there being no prejudice or surprise, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting an on-the-record amendment of the indictment. Mixon v. State, 921 So. 2d 275 (Miss. 2005).

Defendant maintained that the indictment was insufficient because it omitted the allegation that she had concealed the merchandise and it failed to fully notify her of the nature and the cause of the offense charged. However, the indictment sufficiently informed her that she was charged with taking the steaks with the intent of converting them to her own use without paying for them; moreover, her defense was that she had not concealed the steaks but only had them under her arm and, it was apparently clear to her that the State was relying upon the provisions of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(2)(a) (presumptive intent). Evans v. State, 919 So. 2d 231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Indictment was not fatally flawed because it charged defendant for attempted kidnapping under two statutes, nor was it fatally flawed because it failed to state which kind of kidnapping defendant intended to commit because defendant was on sufficient notice of the charge against him as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06. The indictment against defendant stated the essential facts and fully notified him of the nature and cause of the accusation. Hersick v. State, 904 So. 2d 116 (Miss. 2004).

Indictment charging defendant with sexual battery of a child was not flawed because it named the instrument used to injure the child as a "foreign object." Indictment reasonably provided defendant with actual notice of the charge. Renfrow v. State, 882 So. 2d 800 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Indictment had to state all essential elements; where the indictment against defendant for aggravated assault stated all the essential elements of the crime, defendant's petition for postconviction relief was without merit. Mason v. State, 867 So. 2d 1058 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Indictment was sufficient to put defendant on notice that he was being charged with attempted rape, and the indictment specifically set forth the conduct the State planned to use as evidence. Purnell v. State, 878 So. 2d 124 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Language of the indictment explicitly mirrored the burglary statute of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-33 as it stated that defendant did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously break and enter into a trailer having the intent to commit an assault therein and burglarize; the language of "intent to commit assault" was held to be valid in an indictment to depict the predicate crime for burglary, and it was not necessary for the State to supply the elements of assault, as it was used as the underlying intent crime of burglary. Lancaster v. State, 878 So. 2d 140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 125 S. Ct. 1406, 161 L. Ed. 2d 196 (2005).

Where an indictment includes the seven items enumerated in the rule, it is sufficient to provide the defendant with notice of the charge against him. Since all seven requirements of the rule were met by an indictment charging the defendant with sexual battery on a three year old child, since the indictment reasonably provided the defendant with actual notice of the charge against him, and since use of the term "foreign object" in the indictment gave defendant sufficient notice that an object used in the crime would be introduced into evidence, the indictment was not flawed and his conviction was affirmed. Renfrow v. State, 863 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant alleged, in his claim for post-conviction relief, that the indictment was defective as it failed to specify the amount of cocaine allegedly sold; however, the amount was not an essential element of the crime. Campbell v. State, 878 So. 2d 227 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 66 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant's conviction for the burglary of a dwelling was proper where the indictment was sufficient because it set forth the essential facts constituting the charge; defendant and his counsel were able to ascertain the nature and cause of the accusation, Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06. Henderson v. State, 853 So. 2d 141 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

Armed robbery indictment stated the essential facts constituting the offense charged as required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.06 even though the inmate never took and carried away the property of another, as under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79, the inmate could be convicted of armed robbery while attempting to complete the crime. Putnam v. State, 877 So. 2d 468 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 878 So. 2d 67 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant was properly apprised of the nature and cause of a homicide by an indictment, despite the fact that the manner and method of the crime were not disclosed; the jury instructions sufficiently informed the jury that the act committed by defendant involved asphyxiation. Starns v. State, 867 So. 2d 227 (Miss. 2003).

There is no requirement that the indictment cite to a particular section of the code, so long as the charging portion contains a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged. An indictment against defendant was sufficient to charge him with violating Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-59 even though it erroneously referenced Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-53, where the indictment contained a sufficient description of the offense charged, where defendant waived any alleged error by pleading guilty, and where defendant was fully informed of the maximum sentencing range that could be imposed on his guilty plea consistent with the offense that should have been named in the indictment. Walker v. State, 861 So. 2d 354 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant was adequately informed by the indictment of the nature of the escape charge against him and the supporting facts, where the State offered proof that defendant had been convicted of vehicular homicide and sentenced to the custody of the Mississippi Department of Corrections that pending transportation, he was housed at the county Jail, and that he escaped from the jail. Jenkins v. State, 881 So. 2d 870 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Manslaughter is not a lesser-included offense of murder; therefore, a trial court was not permitted to enter a limited directed verdict on a murder charge and allow a jury to consider the unindicted offense of manslaughter because defendant did not receive notice of the manslaughter charge in the murder indictment. State v. Shaw, 2003 Miss. LEXIS 525 (Miss. Oct. 9, 2003), subst. op., 880 So. 2d 296 (Miss. 2004).

Prosecution was required to draft an indictment that contained a plain statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged; since the indictment did not contain a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged, failing to set out with any certainty defendant's overt act, which was intended to aid a felon's escape, the indictment was rendered void, and because of the nature of the defect in the indictment, it could not be the subject of waiver by failure to raise the issue prior to trial. White v. State, 851 So. 2d 400 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

That an indictment's caption identified the charge as "driving under the influence (DUI) manslaughter" rather than "DUI negligent death statute," and referenced the wrong subsection of Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30, was immaterial, as the indictment made it clear that the inmate was charged with causing the death of his passenger while feloniously and negligently operating a vehicle under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and his guilty plea waived all non-jurisdictional defects in the indictment. Turner v. State, 864 So. 2d 288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

Where the indictment against defendant tracked the language of Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-19(1)(b), stated the essential facts, and fully notified the defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation, the indictment was sufficient. Montana v. State, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 172 (Miss. May 9, 2002), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at 822 So. 2d 954, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 220 (Miss. 2002).

Indictment charging defendant with capital murder while in the commission of armed robbery did not have to state the elements of armed robbery. Swann v. State, 806 So. 2d 1111 (Miss. 2002).

Convictions under a multiple count indictment which accused defendant of 22 separate incidents of sexual misconduct over a three-year period in identical paragraphs without specifying dates or specific acts required reversal because the indictment failed to specifically inform the defendant of the offenses with which he was charged; furthermore, convictions on six counts that the trial court permitted to be tried under a forcible rape statute once it was determined that the alleged victims were not underaged minors on the dates of the alleged sexual misconduct required acquittal. Moses v. State, 795 So. 2d 569 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Although an indictment for escape was defective where the word "escape" was omitted from the sentence "[the defendant] . . . having been previously confined in the Mississippi State Penitentiary at Parchman, Mississippi, on or before March 20, 1995 did unlawfully, wilfully and feloniously escape from said penitentiary . . .," the defendant's guilty plea waived such defect. Jones v. State, 770 So. 2d 578 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

An indictment for capital murder was sufficient where the indictment charged that the defendant committed the murder while in the commission of felonious abuse and/or battery of a child; it was not necessary for the indictment to specifically set forth the elements of the underlying felony used to elevate the crime to capital murder. James v. State, 777 So. 2d 682 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

An indictment for receiving stolen property was insufficient since it failed to describe the allegedly received stolen property with sufficient particularity where it merely stated that the defendants "received 114 items, including televisions, C.D. players, VCRs, cameras, tools and microwaves." Khang Son Nguyen v. State, 761 So. 2d 873 (Miss. 2000).

An indictment fairly placed the defendant on notice that he was charged with conspiring with others to defraud a conservatorship where the time period was stated, four of the alleged co-conspirators were named, and the offense was clearly described. Farris v. State, 764 So. 2d 411 (Miss. 2000).

In a prosecution for motor vehicle theft, defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced by the mistaken inclusion in the indictment of the dollar amount of the vehicle that is required under § 97-17-41(a) for grand larceny; nor did he show that he was unaware of what crime he was charged with committing or that he was unable to prepare an adequate defense because of the indictment. Richmond v. State, 751 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. 1999).

An indictment was sufficient which charged the defendant, in plain language, with the crime of unlawful possession of cocaine; the indictment's failure to narrowly focus onto a particular subsection within the allegedly violated statute was not necessary to inform the defendant of the essential elements of the crime. Carroll v. State, 755 So. 2d 483 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Time of offense.

Defendant's conviction for fondling a child under the age of 18 was appropriate because his indictment sufficiently apprised him of all of the charges against him. Further, there was nothing indicating that time was an essential element of the offense, and there was nothing in the record that indicated that defendant planned to assert a time-sensitive defense, such as an alibi. Sellars v. Walgreen Co., 971 So. 2d 1278 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant was not prejudiced by the last-minute amendment to the indictment accusing him of a drug sale when the change was merely a change of the date on which the transaction allegedly took place. Alexander v. State, 875 So. 2d 261 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

An indictment for fondling a child under the age of 14 years of age was sufficient as to the time of the alleged offenses where the indictment charged that the offenses occurred "on or about and between the 21st day of May, 1998 through the 10th day of August, 1998" and "on or about and between the 11th day of August, 1998 through the 2nd day of September, 1998" since the indictment fully and fairly apprized the defendant of the charges against him. Davis v. State, 760 So. 2d 55 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Variance between the indictment and the proof.

Amendment to the indictment did not materially alter any fact that was the essence of the offense on the face of the indictment as it originally stood, and the amendment did not materially alter defendant's defense so as to prejudice his case. Leonard v. State, 972 So. 2d 24 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Because defendant's indictment failed to charge the essential elements of armed robbery, the circuit court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over the offense of armed robbery, but the indictment properly charged defendant with the crime of simple robbery; however, defendant's guilty plea was involuntary because he was not informed of the true nature and consequences of the charge. Garner v. State, 944 So. 2d 934 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 534 (Miss. 2007).

Appellate court affirmed that there was no fatal variance between the indictment and the proof due to the failure of the indictment to identify the confidential informant (CI) as the purchaser, and the videotape made clear that the CI was the purchaser. Griffin v. State, 918 So. 2d 882 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a business burglary case, the indictment, despite misspelling the name of the store where the burglary took place, was sufficient. Cridiso v. State, 956 So. 2d 281 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 957 So. 2d 1004, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 285 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant argued that due to the indictment's failure to specifically identify the confidential informant listed, his defense was unduly prejudiced and therefore the verdict should have been overturned. However, a review of the record showed defendant did not object to the contents of the indictment at the trial level, thus waiving this issue for appeal; in any event, such a variance between the indictment and the proof presented at trial was not considered a fatal variance, and the State thoroughly demonstrated that the subject individual purchased cocaine from defendant while acting as a confidential informant. Jerninghan v. State, 910 So. 2d 748 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed by 933 So. 2d 303, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 306 (Miss. 2006).

Rule 7.07. Multiple count indictments.

A. Two (2) or more offenses which are triable in the same court may be charged in the same indictment with a separate count for each offense if: (1) the offenses are based on the same act or transaction; or (2) the offenses are based on two (2) or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan.

B. Where two (2) or more offenses are properly charged in separate counts of a single indictment, all such charges may be tried in a single proceeding.

C. The trier of fact shall return a separate verdict for each count of an indictment drawn under subsection (A) of this rule.

D. When a defendant is convicted of two (2) or more offenses charged in separate counts of an indictment, the court shall impose separate sentences for each such conviction.

E. Nothing contained in this rule shall be construed to prohibit the court from exercising its authority to suspend either the imposition or execution of any sentence or sentences imposed, nor to prohibit the court from exercising its discretion to impose such sentences to run either concurrently with or consecutively to each other or to any other sentence or sentences previously imposed upon the defendant.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general.

Where defendant was charged with armed robbery, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm as a convicted felon and where the trial court denied defendant's motion to sever the latter charge, the trial court erred in not permitting defendant to stipulate to the prior conviction and permitting the State to present evidence regarding the conviction because evidence of the prior conviction was a necessary element of the crime for which defendant was on trial but evidence of the specific nature of the crime for which defendant was previously convicted was not an essential element of the crime for which defendant was on trial. Because the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming, however, the error was harmless. Williams v. State, 991 So. 2d 593 (Miss. 2008).

Dismissal of the inmate's motion for postconviction relief was proper in part under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.07(A) because there was nothing that prohibited the state from indicting the inmate for murder and manslaughter in the death of the same individual; in any event, the inmate had already entered a guilty plea, which procedurally barred the issue. Truitt v. State, 958 So. 2d 299 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial judge, in ruling on defendant's motion for severance, recognized that the offenses had occurred at the same place, that the entire incident was over in a matter of minutes and that the offenses were so interrelated that telling the story of what happened would be much harder if the offenses were severed; defendant did not show how each offense was separate and distinct, so severance was not warranted. Riser v. State, 845 So. 2d 720 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

There was no violation of the rule where, in an attempt to prove a single violation of § 41-29-139(f), the indictment included five acts which constituted a common scheme to deal in a controlled substance, but the record revealed that the state was not attempting to secure convictions on each of the five transfers. Lewis v. State, 765 So. 2d 493 (Miss. 2000).

Rule 7.08. Joinder of defendants.

Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment upon which they are to be tried when:

1. Each defendant is charged with accountability for each offense charged; or

2. Each defendant is charged with conspiracy and some of the defendants are also charged with one or more offenses alleged to have been committed in furtherance of the conspiracy; or

3. Even if conspiracy is not charged and all defendants are not charged in each count, but it is alleged that the several offenses charged were part of a common scheme or plan.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Joinder improper.

Defendant was entitled to separate trial, where he did not testify in his own defense and co-defendant's testimony tended to exculpate him at defendant's expense, and thus there was a conflict of interest by which defendant was prejudiced by his co-defendant's testimony. Hawkins v. State, 538 So. 2d 1204 (Miss. 1989).

Joinder proper.

In a murder case involving defendant and codefendant, defendant's brother, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to grant a severance motion, because codefendant's testimony did not attempt to exculpate self at the expense of defendant, there was no conflict of interest between them, and the balance of the evidence did not go more to the guilt of one than the other. Adams v. State, 851 So. 2d 366 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002), cert. denied, 849 So. 2d 899 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Rule 7.09. Amendment of indictments.

All indictments may be amended as to form but not as to the substance of the offense charged. Indictments may also be amended to charge the defendant as an habitual offender or to elevate the level of the offense where the offense is one which is subject to enhanced punishment for subsequent offenses and the amendment is to assert prior offenses justifying such enhancement (e.g., driving under the influence, Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30). Amendment shall be allowed only if the defendant is afforded a fair opportunity to present a defense and is not unfairly surprised.

In general.

In a case in which a pro se inmate appealed the circuit court's denial of his post-conviction motion as being barred as a successive writ, the inmate argued unsuccessfully that the enactment of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09 should allow him to overcome the successive-writ bar. He relied on the exception to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6); however, since he had pled guilty, he waived the complaints he had with his indictment. Sanders v. State, 34 So. 3d 1200 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Indictment, which was amended from four counts to one count, of aggravated DUI, Miss. Code Ann. § 63-11-30(5), was proper even though a defendant caused four deaths. Lepine v. State, 10 So. 3d 927 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Indictment was sufficient under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.06 because it listed the state, court, and county in which the indictment was being brought. Furthermore, because the weight involved in a charge of possession of cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139 only affected the penalty imposed, not the crime itself, there was no problem with the amendment of the indictment. Harris v. State, 5 So. 3d 1127 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 181 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant offered no evidence to show unfair surprise or that the amendment to the indictment prejudiced his ability to defend the case; defendant did not contest or dispute the prior charges against him. Wynn v. State, 964 So. 2d 1196 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Although rape required forcible sexual intercourse, and sexual battery required sexual penetration without consent, the indictment specifically put defendant on notice that he was charged with forcibly inserting his sexual organ inside the victim's rectum; his defense to that charge was not that it happened and was consensual, but that it did not happen, and therefore his defense to the original indictment was equally applicable to amended indictment, which changed a charge from rape to sexual battery. Goodin v. State, 977 So. 2d 353 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), affirmed in part and reversed in part by, remanded by 977 So. 2d 338, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 143 (Miss. 2008).

Amendment of an indictment on the day of trial to charge defendant as a habitual offender was permissible under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09 and Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83 because defense counsel had notice of the state's intentions, and defendant was given additional time to consult with his attorney about a plea agreement. Jackson v. State, 943 So. 2d 746 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Amendment to defendant's indictment was harmless where defendant gave no evidence to prove that the evidence or his defense was changed by the amendment, such that there was no prejudice as a result of this amendment; defendant's indictment did include in the heading "aggravated assault" and the word "serious" and actually stated the elements of the crime and not only the code number. Brown v. State, 934 So. 2d 1039 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Indictment charging defendant alleged that she embezzled property "owned by an individual d/b/a a named engineering business." At the close of the State's case-in-chief, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict alleging that the indictment was fatally defective because it failed to identify or prove the identity of the person or entity claiming ownership of the embezzled property; the trial court properly granted the State's motion to amend the indictment to name the "corporation" as the owner of the embezzled property as the matter was one of form, not of substance. Montgomery v. State, 891 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 2004).

Indictment may only be amended at trial if the amendment is immaterial to the merits of the case and the defense will not be prejudiced by the amendment. Neal v. State, 879 So. 2d 1111 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Supreme Court of Mississippi finds that Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. R. 7.09 is constitutional. Willie v. State, 876 So. 2d 278 (Miss. 2004).

An amended indictment changing the charge against defendant from an "attempt" to obtain a controlled substance by fraud to one of "obtaining" a controlled substance by fraud was not defective and defendant was not prejudiced by the amendment, as the proof of the charge and defenses available to defendant in the amended indictment remained the same. Irons v. State, 886 So. 2d 726 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 887 So. 2d 183 (Miss. 2004).

In a prosecution of defendant for the unlawful sale of cocaine, the trial court did not err in granting the State's motion to amend the indictment; the amendment did not change the nature of the crime defendant was charged with. Martin v. State, 832 So. 2d 611 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Amendment of an indictment charging possession of cocaine to add a count of second or subsequent offender was proper under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09, as the State filed its motion to amend six months before trial, and the amendment went to form and not to substance since defendant had the same defenses available to him whether he was a repeat offender or not. Cagler v. State, 844 So. 2d 487 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's case was not prejudiced by an amendment to the indictment, where the amendment affected the penalty only; defendant's theory of defense was a general denial of possession of cocaine, and this general denial defense was equally available to him in his defense to the indictment in its amended form as it was in its original form. Oby v. State, 827 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Defendant did not err in allowing the State to amend an indictment charging defendant with murder to add an allegation that defendant was a habitual criminal; defendant was on notice of the State's intention to add habitual criminal charges upon receipt of the needed documentation and the amendment neither surprised defendant nor prejudiced his defense. Smith v. State, 835 So. 2d 927 (Miss. 2002).

Where defendant claimed that his indictment was not properly amended, defendant never offered any evidence to show surprise at the attempt to charge defendant as a habitual offender; further, defendant failed to show how his defense was adversely affected by the amendment, thus, the amendment was proper. Craft v. State, 832 So. 2d 467 (Miss. 2002).

There is no inconsistency between this rule and Rule 11.03; Rule 11.03 states that an indictment must include certain habitual offender information, and this rule merely allows the state to comply with Rule 11.03. Hawthorne v. State, 751 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998); Hawthorne v. State, 751 So. 2d 1090 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Amendment added no element.

Denial of appellant inmate's motion for post-conviction collateral relief was proper because the original indictment charging appellant with manufactuing a controlled substance referred to the substance as marijuana but cited the statute section referencing ibogaine, and amending the indictment to correct the citation did not alter the essential facts of the offense, nor did it prejudice the inmate's defense. Brown v. State, 12 So. 3d 586 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

In defendant's armed robbery case, the court properly denied a motion to quash the indictment because, during the motion hearing, defense counsel only argued that defendant's opportunity to present an alibi would be removed if the indictment were amended, defendant declined the court's offer for continuance, and defendant was well aware of the charge against him and stood ready to defend that charge. Jones v. State, 993 So. 2d 386 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 503 (Miss. 2008).

State's amendment of the indictment resulted in no change to the identity of the property which was the subject of the burglary offense; it simply added an additional owner. Thus, the amendment of the indictment did not change the substance of the offense charged, nor did it compromise defendant's ability to present a defense; therefore, the trial judge was satisfied that defendant was not unfairly surprised or prejudiced by the amendment, and it properly allowed the State to amend the indictment. Harris v. State, 907 So. 2d 972 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 910 So. 2d 574, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 453 (Miss. 2005).

In a sexual battery case, the indictment was properly amended by the removal of the phrase "without her consent," because the defense to the charge did not change, and although defendant might have asserted that he was surprised, his surprise could not be characterized as unfair; the net effect of the amendment was that defendant only had to defend one claim, rather than two. Lee v. State, 944 So. 2d 35 (Miss. 2006).

Defendant was not prejudiced by the last-minute amendment to the indictment accusing him of a drug sale when the change was merely a change of the date on which the transaction allegedly took place. Alexander v. State, 875 So. 2d 261 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a prosecution for sexual battery of a five-year-old child, the trial court did not err in allowing the indictment to be amended at the end of the trial at the request of the state by the elimination of certain language because the testimony of the child and the therapist assigned to the child's case, who had interviewed her, pointed to acts of fellatio rather than the digital penetration mentioned in the indictment because (1) the opening statement of the defense expressed as its trial strategy a general denial that the defendant had sexually abused the child in any manner and nothing in the record indicated that he intended to present evidence specifically defending himself against digital penetration, and (2) the amendment did not change the offense with which the defendant was charged and added no elements to the offense charged in the original indictment. Chandler v. State, 789 So. 2d 109 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Amendment to correct date.

Amendment of defendants' embezzlement indictment was proper because the amendment as to time was an amendment of form and was allowable, defendants showed nothing to indicate that the amendment as to the dates negated a defense they would otherwise have had before the amendment, and defendants could not claim surprise that the State sought to prove that they embezzled lesser amounts of money, as defendants knew from their indictment that the State would attempt to prove embezzlement of at least those amounts. Salts v. State, 984 So. 2d 1050 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 334 (Miss. 2008).

State was properly allowed to amend the indictment to change the date of the alleged burglaries where defendant's alibi defense, though not asserted, remained available after the amendment. Logan v. State, 987 So. 2d 1027 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 45 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court did not err in allowing the indictment against defendant to be amended as to its form, substituting specific dates for the offenses for a time period in which the offenses occurred, because defendant made no argument as to how the difference in the dates and times appearing with the nude photographs would exonerate defendant or become essential to defendant's defense. Evans v. State, 984 So. 2d 308 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 984 So. 2d 277, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 289 (Miss. 2008).

Amendment of an indictment, which charged defendants with embezzlement, with respect to time was an amendment as to form, and it was allowable; as to an amendment pertaining to the reduction of money, the most defendants could argue was the reduced amount of money that they were charged with embezzling lessened the penalty that could be imposed. Salts v. State, — So. 2d —, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 513 (Miss. Ct. App. Aug. 7, 2007), opinion withdrawn by, substituted opinion at, remanded by 984 So. 2d 1050, 2008 Miss. App. LEXIS 199 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

In a possession of a firearm by a convicted felon case, while an indictment alleged an incorrect date for a prior felony conviction, defendant clearly had access to and was aware of the proper date of the judgment; furthermore, because the change of the date in the indictment did nothing to prejudice defendant and was not material to the charges against him, the trial court was correct in allowing an amendment. Hatten v. State, 938 So. 2d 365 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Amendment to correct name.

Trial court properly denied an inmate's petition for postconviction relief alleging that his name was incorrect on the indictment. The name in the indictment had been corrected at the time of the plea. Neal v. State, 879 So. 2d 1111 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Habitual offenders.

Defendant's enhanced sentence as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83 was vacated as allowing the State to amend the indictment to allege that he was a habitual offender after his trial and conviction but before his sentencing amounted to an unfair surprise under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09. Gowdy v. State, 56 So. 3d 540 (Miss. 2010).

In a federal habeas proceeding involving a state inmate convicted of third-offense felony shoplifting under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-23-93(6) and sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole, trial counsel was not ineffective because on several occasions he unsuccessfully objected to an amended indictment that added an habitual offender sentencing enhancement; under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09, amendment of the indictment was proper. Sumrell v. Mississippi, — F. Supp. 2d —, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30798 (N.D. Miss. Apr. 9, 2009), opinion withdrawn by 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39162 (N.D. Miss. May 8, 2009).

Because the prosecution filed two motions to amend appellant's indictment to reflect his status as a habitual offender a few months before he was sentenced, appellant was not unfairly surprised by the amendment to charge him as a habitual offender and any defense he wished to raise concerning the amendment of his indictment could have been prepared in the interval between the first motion and the sentencing hearing. Spencer v. State, 994 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellant inmate's motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because the inmate could not claim that he was unfairly surprised by the amendment of an indictment to charge him as a habitual offender because appellee State's motion to amend the indictment against the inmate and charge him as a habitual offender was not granted until almost six months after it was filed, and the interval was sufficient time for the inmate to file a motion in opposition or, in the alternative, to prepare to oppose the motion at the hearing where the motion was granted and where he entered his plea of guilty. Jones v. State, 994 So. 2d 829 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 659 (Miss. 2008).

There was no merit to appellant's argument that an indictment was improperly amended and that he was never formally indicted as an habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 because there was no evidence of surprise, under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. 7.09, because (1) a trial court entered an order amending the indictment to charge appellant as an habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83; (2) at the sentencing hearing, appellee State agreed to reduce § 99-19-83 habitual to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81 habitual; and (3) appellant had been notified of the motion to amend the indictment early in the proceedings against him to charge him as a Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83 habitual offender. Sowell v. State, 970 So. 2d 752 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Amendment of an indictment to charge a defendant as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, rather than Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83 (which would have imposed a greater sentence), was permissible under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09 since the amendment affected only the sentence and not the underlying offenses for which the defendant was tried. Smith v. State, 965 So. 2d 732 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court did not err in granting state's motion to amend an indictment to include an habitual offender status because this did not surprise defendant, and it did not result in prejudice to defendant. Rayborn v. State, 961 So. 2d 70 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Record showed that well before defendant's August 2005 trial he was served with notice of the state's motion to amend the indictment to charge him as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83; there was no indication in the record that defendant was unfairly surprised or prejudiced by the amendment, and therefore defendant did not show error in amending the indictment pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09. Evans v. State, 957 So. 2d 430 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a possession of cocaine case, defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel when his attorney failed to object to the jurisdiction of the trial court after the State amended the indictment to include the habitual offender charge. The trial court had jurisdiction under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09, and the evidence showed that defendant was afforded a fair opportunity to present a defense and was not surprised with the habitual offender amendment, as required by Rule 7.09. Troupe v. State, 922 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Defendant charged with armed robbery was indicted as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, having been convicted previously for grand larceny and bank robbery; the trial court did not err in amending the indictment to charge defendant as a habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83; it was not necessary for defendant to prepare a defense based on the amended indictment because the habitual offender status did not affect the crime with which he was charged. Wilson v. State, 935 So. 2d 945 (Miss. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 549 U.S. 1348, 127 S. Ct. 2047, 167 L. Ed. 2d 780, 2007 U.S. LEXIS 4088, 75 U.S.L.W. 3554 (2007).

Trial court did not err by allowing the prosecutor to amend the indictment to reflect defendant's status as an habitual offender under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 7.09 as the amendment did not affect the substance of the crime charged, but only the sentencing; thus, defendant's defense to the armed robbery charge was unaffected by the amendment. Madison v.

State, 923 So. 2d 252 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

In a criminal prosecution for uttering forgery, the trial court did not err in allowing the untimely amendment of the indictment to charge defendant with a habitual offender status. While the State's motion to amend was filed beyond the date required by the scheduling order, the amendment did not interfere with any substantive defenses which were available to defendant; he acknowledged the four prior felony convictions. Berry v. State, 907 So. 2d 1011 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari dismissed by 921 So. 2d 344, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 706 (Miss. 2005).

Trial judge did not commit reversible error in allowing defendant's indictment to be amended to charge him as an habitual offender because amendments to charge habitual status were not viewed as a matter affecting the substance of the offense and were allowed under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09. Cannon v. State, 918 So. 2d 734 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 2005 Miss. LEXIS 537 (Miss. Aug. 25, 2005), affirmed in part and reversed in part by 919 So. 2d 913, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 764 (Miss. 2005).

It was permissible to amend the indictment on the date of trial and to charge defendant as a habitual criminal under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83, because defendant was clearly aware of the State's intention to amend the indictment and of the penalty which the amendment would carry, and because his defense was not prejudiced by the amendment. Forkner v. State, 902 So. 2d 615 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 901 So. 2d 1273 (Miss. 2005).

Amendment to indictment, pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09, in order to sentence defendant as a habitual offender, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81, was proper where, at trial, defendant did not contest or dispute the prior felony sentences introduced by the State at the hearing to amend the indictment. Torrey v. State, 891 So. 2d 188 (Miss. 2004).

Upon remand of defendant's sentence for capital murder, the State was permitted to amend the indictment to charge defendant as a habitual offender pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-81. When defendant was sentenced the first time, he only had one prior felony; however, at the time defendant was resentenced, he had two prior convictions. Willie v. State, 876 So. 2d 278 (Miss. 2004).

Trial court did not err in allowing the State to amend an indictment charging aggravated assault, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm by a felon to charge habitual offender status because the amendment went to form, and not to substance. Crosby v. State, 856 So. 2d 523 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 1223 (Miss. 2003).

Where counsel was given an opportunity to present an argument that might justify denying an habitual offender amendment, there was no error merely because the amendment might have been allowed before the hearing was held. Sims v. State, 775 So. 2d 1291 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

An indictment charging possession of cocaine was properly amended to include the details of a prior conviction for drug possession in order to lay the groundwork for an enhanced penalty where, although defense counsel stated that the amendment was being used to coerce a guilty plea, he acknowledged that there was no surprise or compromise to his ability to present a defense. Williams v. State, 766 So. 2d 815 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

An amendment to an indictment to charge the defendant as an habitual offender is not viewed as one of substance and is allowed; such an amendment affects only the sentence imposed and does not affect the substance of the offense for which the individual was originally indicted. Anderson v. State, 766 So. 2d 133 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The trial court did not err when it allowed the state to amend an indictment charging the defendant as an habitual offender under § 99-19-81, rather than under § 99-19-83, where the defendant failed to show surprise and did not ask for a continuance. Stewart v. State, 760 So. 2d 810 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Although it would affect his sentencing, amending the indictment to charge defendant as a habitual offender was proper because (1) it did not affect the substance of the crime of which he was charged, (2) he was given a fair opportunity to present a defense, and (3) he was not unfairly surprised. Newell v. State, 754 So. 2d 1261 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

The amendment of an indictment of a defendant as an habitual offender under § 99-19-83 is not unconstitutional since it does not amend substance of the offense charged. Burrell v. State, 726 So. 2d 160 (Miss. 1998).

Service.

There was no error in the state serving the inmate's counsel with the motion to amend the indictment under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 7.09; the inmate was represented by counsel and this was not the initial pleading or indictment, and thus it was proper for counsel to be served in the inmate's place under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 2.06. Sneed v. State, 990 So. 2d 226 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 994 So. 2d 186, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 468 (Miss. 2008).

Statute citation.

The state was properly permitted to amend the indictment of the defendant for burglary where (1) former § 97-17-19 was repealed and replaced by § 97-17-23 in 1996, (2) the offense at issue occurred in 1997, and (3) the original indictment mistakenly cited former § 97-17-19. Terry v. State, 755 So. 2d 41 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Rule 8.01. Arraignment.

Arraignment, unless waived by the defendant, shall be held within thirty (30) days after the defendant is served with the indictment. At or within sixty (60) days of arraignment (or waiver thereof), the court shall enter an order setting a date for trial. Unless good cause be shown, and a continuance granted by written order setting forth the reason for the continuance, an accused shall be brought to trial no later than two hundred seventy (270) days following arraignment (or waiver thereof).

Arraignment shall be held in open court, and shall consist of (i) reading the indictment to the accused; and, (ii) calling upon the defendant to plead to the charge in the indictment. Prior to arraignment a copy of the indictment shall be served on the defendant. Defendants who are jointly charged may be arraigned separately or jointly within the discretion of the court. If codefendants are arraigned at the same time and charged with the same offense, the indictments need be read only once, with stated identification of each defendant.

In all cases waiver of the reading of the indictment may be permitted if the defendant is represented by an attorney. Arraignment is deemed waived when the defendant proceeds to trial without objection. (Adopted effective May 1, 1995; Amended effective July 1, 2008, to provide that the matter shall be set for trial at or within 60 days of arraignment. Effective as to all arraignments on and after July 1, 2008.)

Rule 8.02. Review of bond and setting of deadlines for pretrial motions.

At arraignment, the court shall review the amount of bond previously set, and, if the bond is not binding until the date of trial, the bond may be continued until the date of trial. At arraignment or thereafter, the court may set a reasonable deadline for the filing and hearing of all pretrial motions. Pretrial motions shall include, but are not limited to: motions to dismiss, to suppress evidence, to request discovery, for continuance, for severance, for appointment of experts, for mental examination, or any other motions addressed to matters which may delay the trial.

Rule 8.03. Defendant's presence at plea.

The defendant, charged with the commission of a felony, who wishes to enter a plea of guilty is required to plead personally. The defendant's personal appearance may be required by the court when the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor.

If the defendant, on arraignment, refuses or neglects to plead, stands mute, or pleads evasively, the court will enter a plea of not guilty and will proceed to trial.

If the defendant is released on bail, and does not appear to be arraigned, or as required by the bond, the court may in addition to forfeiture of bail, direct the clerk to issue a capias to bring the defendant before the court.

Rule 8.04. Entry of guilty pleas, plea bargaining, withdrawal of guilty pleas.

A. Entry of guilty pleas.

1. A defendant may plead not guilty, or guilty, or with the permission of the court, nolo contendere.

2. Entry of guilty plea. A person who is charged with commission of a criminal offense in county or circuit court, and is represented by an attorney may, at his/her own election, appear before the court at any time the judge may fix, and be arraigned and enter a plea of guilty to the offense charged, and may be sentenced by the court at that time or some future time appointed by the court.

3. Voluntariness. Before the trial court may accept a plea of guilty, the court must determine that the plea is voluntarily and intelligently made and that there is a factual basis for the plea. A plea of guilty is not voluntary if induced by fear, violence, deception, or improper inducements. A showing that the plea of guilty was voluntarily and intelligently made must appear in the record.

4. Advice to the defendant. When the defendant is arraigned and wishes to plead guilty to the offense charged, it is the duty of the trial court to address the defendant personally and to inquire and determine:

a. That the accused is competent to understand the nature of the charge;

b. That the accused understands the nature and consequences of the plea, and the maximum and minimum penalties provided by law;

c. That the accused understands that by pleading guilty (s)he waives his/her constitutional rights of trial by jury, the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses, and the right against self-incrimination; if the accused is not represented by an attorney, that (s)he is aware of his/her right to an attorney at every stage of the proceeding and that one will be appointed to represent him/her if (s)he is indigent.

5. Withdrawal of plea of guilty. It is within the discretion of the court to permit or deny a motion for the withdrawal of a guilty plea.

6. Sufficiency of motion. In order to be sufficient, a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty must show good cause.

7. Inadmissibility of withdrawn guilty plea. The fact that the defendant may have entered a plea of guilty to the offense charged may not be used against the defendant at trial if the plea has been withdrawn.

B. Plea bargaining.

1. The prosecuting attorney is encouraged to discuss and agree on pleas which may be entered by the defendant. Any discussions or agreements must be conducted with defendant's attorney, or if defendant is unrepresented, the discussion and agreement may be conducted with the defendant.

2. The prosecuting attorney, defendant's attorney, or the defendant acting pro se, may reach an agreement that upon an entry of a plea of guilty to the offense charged or to a lesser or related offense, the attorney for the state may do any of the following:

a. Move for a dismissal of other charges; or

b. Make a recommendation to the trial court for a particular sentence, with the understanding that such recommendation or request will not be binding upon the court.

3. Defense attorneys shall not conclude any plea bargaining on behalf of the defendant without the defendant's full and complete consent, being certain that the decision to plead is made by defendant. Defense attorneys must advise defendant of all pertinent matters bearing on the choice of plea, including likely results or alternatives.

4. The trial judge shall not participate in any plea discussion. The court may designate a cut-off date for plea discussions and may refuse to consider the recommendation after that date. After a recommended disposition on the plea has been reached, it may be made known to the court, along with the reasons for the recommendation, prior to the acceptance of the plea. The court shall require disclosure of the recommendation in open court, with the terms of the recommendation to be placed in the record.

In a post-conviction relief case, a pro se inmate argued unsuccessfully that he was denied due process of law because the trial court failed to inform him that he could seek a direct appeal of his allegedly illegal sentence. The Court of Appeals of Mississippi had previously addressed that issue in the Coleman decision, in which it held that, pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(4), the trial court was not obligated to inform him of his right to appeal his sentence. Diggs v. State, 46 So. 3d 361 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 49 So. 3d 636, 2010 Miss. LEXIS 561 (Miss. 2010).

In a post-conviction proceeding, defendant argued unsuccessfully that he was denied due process of law because the trial court failed to advise him of how to appeal his sentence independent of his guilty plea. While he was correct that he had the right to appeal his sentence, Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(a)-(c) did not require that the trial court explain the appeals process. Burris v. State, 18 So. 3d 321 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Defendant's guilty plea to armed robbery as charged in a criminal information rather than an indictment was proper under U.S. Const. amend. V and Miss. Const. art. 3, § 27, because defendant waived the indictment requirement. The trial court was not required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04 to discuss with defendant the mandatory nature of his sentence or whether he was entitled to early release. Berry v. State, 19 So. 3d 137 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for post-conviction collateral relief, seeking to set aside his conviction and sentence for burglary of a dwelling house, because neither the trial court's decision to sentence defendant to the maximum amount allowed by Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23, nor its subsequent decision to deny his plea-withdrawal request was an abuse of discretion; prior to accepting defendant's guilty plea, the trial court thoroughly queried him with regard to the voluntariness of his plea, carefully explained to him that whatever sentencing recommendation the State offered would not have to be accepted, and informed him that the trial court could impose any sentence allowed by law, and defendant willfully acknowledged that he fully understood that the State's promise to recommend a sentence carried with it no guarantee that its recommendation would bind the trial court to a particular sentence upon a plea of guilty. Burrough v. State, 9 So. 3d 368 (Miss. 2009).

Trial judge engaged in a colloquy with appellant that clearly met the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A) by informing him of the consequences of his plea to burglary as a habitual offender, including the fact that, as a habitual offender, the trial court had to sentence him to the maximum sentence of 25 years. Spencer v. State, 994 So. 2d 878 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

None of an inmate's proffered allegations of deficiency evinced ineffective assistance of counsel, given that (1) the trial court had no duty under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04 to advise the inmate of the right to counsel, and thus counsel's lack of an objection to a nonexistent duty was not deficient performance, (2) counsel's failure to advise the inmate that he had the right to an attorney if he chose not to plead guilty could not be said to have evinced deficient performance, (3) his guilty plea petition told him that if he chose not to so plead, he was guaranteed the right to counsel, (4) in any event, the record contradicted the contention that the inmate was not advised of his right to counsel, and (5) as the inmate's plea was voluntarily entered, which included an understanding of the charge and the sentence, the court could not say that counsel was deficient in allowing the inmate to plead guilty. Thompson v. State, 990 So. 2d 265 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for postconviction relief after defendant pled guilty to the sale of cocaine where Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4) did not require that the trial judge inform defendant that defendant had the right to appeal the sentence; in any event, defendant's eight-year sentence was well below the maximum sentence for the sale of cocaine. Coleman v. State, 979 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly summarily denied in a case where defendant entered a guilty plea to a drug charge because there was no showing of ineffective assistance of counsel where defense counsel fulfilled his duty by advising defendant to plead guilty after viewing a tape of the drug transaction; moreover, defendant was unable to show that the outcome would have been different if counsel had investigated and found out that defendant had a prior felony conviction. Middlebrook v. State, 964 So. 2d 638 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for postconviction relief was properly dismissed without an evidentiary hearing in a case where a guilty plea was entered to the charge of burglary of an occupied dwelling because defendant offered no proof of what advice he was given about parole, other than the assertions made in the motion, and he was not eligible for such due to his conviction; also, defendant was told by a trial court that he was required to serve the full term of his sentence when he entered a guilty plea. Edge v. State, 962 So. 2d 81 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied without an evidentiary hearing where defendant pled guilty to a drug charge because the trial court informed him of the consequences of the plea, despite an attorney's prediction that he would receive less time; moreover, a 34-year sentence was not disproportionate since it was within the limits of Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-313 and Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-147. Bridges v. State, 973 So. 2d 246 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where a guilty plea was entered to the charge of sexual battery because there was no ineffective assistance of counsel; defendant indicated at his plea hearing that he was satisfied with the attorney's investigation of the case, the attorney was not deficient in advising defendant that he would probably not prevail at trial due to the confession, defendant never told the attorney that there was anything wrong with the confession, and the attorney was not deficient for failing to file an appeal since this right was waived by the guilty plea. Parkman v. State, 953 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Because defendant was not informed of the elements of the charge as to his guilty plea, the appellate court reversed and remanded for a hearing as to whether defendant had the elements explained to him prior to pleading guilty, and whether there was a factual basis for the plea. Jones v. State, 936 So. 2d 993 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Court rejected an inmate's claim that his plea colloquy had been defective because he did not then understand that the State had to prove premeditation or malice aforethought beyond a reasonable doubt; the information, which the trial court read to him, charged him with having the deliberate design to effect the death of the victims, and the inmate said he understood the offenses to which he was pleading guilty. Hearvey v. State, 887 So. 2d 836 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

As an inmate had two prior felony convictions, one of which was for aggravated assault, he could have been indicted as an habitual offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-83; therefore, his counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by warning him that this would occur unless he pled guilty. Hearvey v. State, 887 So. 2d 836 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant alleged in his postconviction relief petition that his guilty plea was not voluntary because of his reliance on his attorney's faulty advice regarding the possibility of parole; therefore, he was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on the question of voluntariness, and his allegations were uncontradicted by the record. Thomas v. State, 881 So. 2d 912 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Although it was better practice for a trial judge to state each of the defendant's rights to the defendant during the plea colloquy, failure to do so was not reversible error. Dock v. State, 802 So. 2d 1051 (Miss. 2001).

While the rule requires the trial court judge to inform the defendant of the nature of the charge and the consequences of the plea, the rule does not dictate that the judge must advise the defendant of every "but for" consequence that follows from a plea of guilty. Smith v. State, — So. 2d —, 1998 Miss. App. LEXIS 1053 (Miss. Ct. App. Dec. 18, 1998), reversed en banc by, remanded by 742 So. 2d 1146, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 260 (Miss. 1999).

The defendant was properly advised about the nature of the crime charged against him and the consequences of his guilty plea where (1) he was questioned by the trial judge regarding his understanding of his constitutional rights, the consequences of a guilty plea and his competency to enter a plea, and (2) he was in fact advised of each constitutional right he was waiving by pleading guilty. Goss v. State, 730 So. 2d 568 (Miss. 1998).

Defendant's guilty plea was not involuntary as a matter of law, where his plea stated that he knew the possible sentencing range that could result, his attorney signed a certificate acknowledging that he explained the maximum and minimum penalties and considered defendant competent to fully understand them, and transcript of defendant's arraignment and guilty plea reflected defendant's understanding of his constitutional rights. Banana v. State, 635 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1994).

Effectiveness of counsel.

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where appellant inmate contended that he received ineffective assistance of counsel under U.S. Const. Amend. VI because, even if the inmate was given hope of a lesser sentence, counsel filed more than 20 pretrial motions and secured a plea that avoided a death sentence for capital murder; moreover, the inmate stated under oath that he was satisfied with counsel. Even if the second prong of the ineffective assistance of counsel test had been analyzed, the inmate did not demonstrate that the allegedly deficient performance prejudiced him such that, but for the belief expressed by counsel, there was a reasonable probability the inmate would have insisted on going to trial rather than pleading guilty. Kambule v. State, 19 So. 3d 120 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 488 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 3354, 176 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4511, 78 U.S.L.W. 3700 (U.S. 2010).

Factual basis.

Indictment's failure to charge venue was a facially apparent defect that petitioner waived by not objecting before trial. The indictment's apparent venue defect did not void petitioner's guilty plea because sufficient evidence established that the crime occurred in Lafayette County. Pegues v. State, 65 So. 3d 351 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Post-conviction court did not err in finding there was a sufficient factual basis for appellant's guilty plea, as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3), because the indictment, which was read in open court, set forth the charges against appellant and listed the elements of the charged offense; when questioned by the circuit court, appellant answered in the affirmative to reading the indictment, understanding the indictment, and discussing the charges with his attorney. Williams v. State, 64 So. 3d 1037 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Inmate's indictment was specific as to the crime of aiding and abetting armed robbery and there was a sufficient factual basis to support his conviction for armed robbery. Cherry v. State, 24 So. 3d 1048 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Defendant's claim that the circuit court erred, pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3), in accepting his guilty plea to the charge of sexual battery because no factual basis existed was without merit because the State presented substantial evidence to the circuit court of how it would prove that defendant committed sexual battery against the minor child, and defendant admitted to the circuit court that he had committed sexual battery against the minor child and that he was satisfied that the State could prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he committed the crime. Walton v. State, 16 So. 3d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

There was no factual basis under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3) for defendant's guilty plea to exploitation of a child; while defendant admitted to positioning a blanket that was covering the child and taking pictures of the child's clothed buttocks while the child slept, the child did not engage in lascivious conduct. Carreiro v. State, 5 So. 3d 1170 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Trial court erred in accepting defendant's guilty pleas to possession of methamphetamine and manufacture of methamphetamine because an insufficient factual basis existed to support the pleas. Aucoin v. State, 17 So. 3d 142 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 434 (Miss. Sept. 17, 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 17 So. 3d 99, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 435 (Miss. 2009).

Where appellant voluntarily entered of a plea of guilty to capital murder and aggravated assault after being advised of the consequences of her plea, she waived her right to have the State prove the elements of the defense beyond a reasonable doubt; therefore, appellant could not call into question the sufficiency of the evidence against her. Based on the State's evidence that appellant drove to the victims' home, pulled a .22 caliber pistol, and shot the victims, there was a factual basis for appellant's plea, as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3). Wilbanks v. State, 14 So. 3d 752 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 382 (Miss. 2009).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where appellant inmate had pled guilty to the offense of statutory rape because there was a factual basis for the plea under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3); a child stated that she had sexual intercourse with the inmate, a relative saw the inmate and the child exiting a house together before the child was taken to the hospital, and the inmate admitted that his biological evidence was found inside the child's vagina. Kimble v. State, 2 So. 3d 688 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 94 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 557 U.S. 909, 129 S. Ct. 2801, 174 L. Ed. 2d 300, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 4498, 77 U.S.L.W. 3678 (2009).

Factual basis existed for defendant's guilty pleas where the factual summary expressed by the State, and agreed to by defendant, satisfied all elements of both crimes of manslaughter, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-35, and armed robbery, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79; it showed that defendant intended to take the victim's automobile through the exhibition of a deadly weapon and it further demonstrated that defendant did, in fact, take the victim's automobile by shooting the victim and the victim died as a result of his wounds. Keith v. State, 999 So. 2d 383 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. 2009).

Trial court required the State to demonstrate what it would have proved had defendant elected to go to trial; after the State's offer of proof, defendant's attorney agreed that the evidence proffered by the State would have been sufficient to get the case before a jury. Nichols v. State, 994 So. 2d 236 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Record contained a sufficient factual basis under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3) to support defendant's conviction for the sale of cocaine where defendant admitted committing the crime; the indictment was also sufficiently specific to establish a factual basis for the guilty plea. Coleman v. State, 979 So. 2d 731 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where appellant pleaded guilty to two counts of sexual battery, the trial judge explained the rights appellant would have if he did not plead guilty and appellant responded that he understood; the trial judge asked appellant if his plea was voluntary and appellant responded that his plea was voluntary. There was a factual basis for his plea because appellant told the trial court that he had committed the crimes; the trial court complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3) before accepting appellant's guilty plea. Kimble v. State, 983 So. 2d 1069 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where appellant entered guilty pleas to the sale of a controlled substance and to conspiracy to commit capital murder, during the plea colloquy appellant was informed of the charges, the effect of the plea, what rights he would waive if he pleaded guilty, and the possible sentence he could receive; appellant indicated that he understood everything and that he entered into the guilty plea of his own free will. In postconviction proceedings, appellant did not show that the trial court failed to conduct a proper hearing pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3); because the State was prepared to present evidence that appellant was involved in a murder and that he sold drugs to a narcotics agent, there was a factual basis for the guilty pleas. Davis v. State, 973 So. 2d 1040 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied where defendant entered a guilty plea to possession of cocaine because there was a factual basis for his plea under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R.

8.04(A)(3) based on the plea itself and the testimony of an officer about drugs, cash, and other items found in a car where defendant was a passenger. The fact that defendant was riding in a rental car and crossing state lines was enough to show that he had dominion and control over the items. Ealey v. State, 967 So. 2d 685 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In an armed robbery case, there was a sufficient factual basis for the plea under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04 based on a specific indictment that alleged that defendant and his associate took property from persons at a bank, and they were in fear of immediate injury due to the exhibition of deadly weapons; after a reading of the indictment during the plea hearing, defendant stated that he committed the crime. Robinson v. State, 964 So. 2d 609 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant's suspended sentence for statutory rape was revoked because he waived issues relating to a speedy trial and defects in an evidence sample due to a guilty plea, there was no evidence that an indictment was manufactured, and the revocation of the suspended sentence was permitted under Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-34 and Miss. Code Ann. § 47-7-37 where defendant had already served a portion of a five-year sentence after the guilty plea was entered. Davis v. State, 954 So. 2d 530 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

There was a factual basis to accept defendant's plea where the state was prepared to show that defendant sold an informant cocaine and that this transaction was captured on videotape; defendant subsequently admitted that he had committed the crime. Turner v. State, 961 So. 2d 734 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 627 (Miss. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied where was a factual basis for a plea to sexual battery under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-95(1)(a), (d); defendant confessed to police that he penetrated a 13-year-old when he was 25, the victim stated that she was the victim of forcible intercourse, and the medical evidence showed that she had been vaginally penetrated. Parkman v. State, 953 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Trial court complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3) by making sure that there was a factual basis for petitioner's guilty plea to sexual battery; the district attorney had stated that the state was prepared to prove that petitioner and her husband engage in sexual penetration with a child who at the time was at least 14 years old but under 16 years old. Staggs v. State, 960 So. 2d 563 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 413 (Miss. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied because a guilty plea was knowingly and voluntarily entered, despite a trial judge's failure to specify which rights were being waived under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04; the trial judge confirmed that a guilty plea videotape was viewed, and a document was signed acknowledging such. Knight v. State, 956 So. 2d 264 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), substituted opinion at 959 So. 2d 598, 2007 Miss. App. LEXIS 444 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Even though an inmate did not admit to killing a victim, there was still a sufficient factual basis for a plea where he entered a plea of guilty to manslaughter and stated the plea was in his best interest. Hull v. State, 933 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Because an inmate who sought postconviction relief from his guilty plea to two counts of murder had admitted during the plea colloquy that he had shot both victims, and that he knew this was against the law, there was a factual basis for the plea. Hearvey v. State, 887 So. 2d 836 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied in a D.U.I. case because there was a factual basis for accepting the driver's guilty plea, as the driver acknowledged that he had entered a sworn petition that requested that the trial court accept his guilty plea, and he testified that he had been drinking beer when he ran over children with a vehicle. Lawson v. State, 882 So. 2d 783 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

An abundance of evidence supported the charge of armed robbery by the exhibition of a deadly weapon, including defendant's confession to the trial court that he had possessed a handgun during the robbery, the victim's testimony at the plea hearing, and two other witnesses who were available to testify that defendant had admitted to robbing the store with a handgun. Therefore, defendant's guilty plea was valid notwithstanding defendant's post-sentencing denial of possession of a handgun, and defendant's assertion that defendant only simulated having a weapon. Ray v. State, 876 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Appellant was properly denied postconviction relief, because there was a factual bases for his guilty plea for murder and aggravated assault, as, even though appellant raised a possible basis for self-defense, there was evidence mentioned by the State that the murder victim was walking away from appellant at the time he was shot, and appellant's intent could be inferred through his actions, as he came to the apartment carrying a gun and shot at the victims. Jackson v. State, 872 So. 2d 708 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Inmate's petition for postconviction relief failed, as a factual basis for the charge of driving under the influence (DUI) manslaughter had been established by the inmate's acknowledgement on the record that he had been driving the vehicle, that he was involved in an accident in which his passenger was killed, that his vehicle was in the wrong lane, and that a test revealed that his blood alcohol level was .29 percent. Turner v. State, 864 So. 2d 288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 864 So. 2d 282 (Miss. 2004).

Sufficient factual basis existed to support defendant's guilty plea to transfer of cocaine despite the fact that the cocaine defendant sold to a private individual was not recovered or available for chemical analysis; factual basis was provided by defendant's statements and other evidence considered by the trial court during proceedings leading up to the plea. Boddie v. State, 850 So. 2d 1205 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Denial of the prisoner's post-conviction relief motion without an evidentiary hearing was proper where the appellate court found there was no defect in the factual basis for the prisoner's guilty plea to uttering a forgery, as the prisoner understood the charge and also signed a petition to enter a guilty plea, agreeing that the attorney had explained the charges. Moore v. State, 830 So. 2d 1274 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Where defendant pled guilty to murder, the trial court elicited from defendant that defendant and defendant's codefendants planned the robbery, that the cab was called for the sole purpose of robbing the driver, and that use of the gun defendant provided to codefendant had been discussed; defendant's own testimony provided a factual basis for defendant's guilty plea. Bolton v. State, 831 So. 2d 1184 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Reading of an indictment alleging armed robbery and aggravated assault, along with defendant's statement that he understood the charges against him and that he knew what he was doing in pleading guilty, provided a sufficient factual basis under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 804(A)(3) to support defendant's pleas. Drake v. State, 823 So. 2d 593 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

The defendant's guilty plea to the crime of armed robbery was constitutionally invalid and unenforceable as the defendant did not provide an adequate factual basis for the guilty plea where (1) it was evident from the record that, throughout the plea hearing, both the trial court and the defendant were under the impression that the defendant was pleading guilty to assault with a deadly weapon rather than armed robbery, and (2) the defendant's account of the events giving rise to his prosecution did not adequately describe either the crime of armed robbery or an attempt thereof. Stevens v. State, 784 So. 2d 979 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

There was a sufficient factual basis for the defendant's guilty plea where there was a sufficient evidentiary suggestion of guilt so that the state may well have persuaded a jury to convict, and the defendant decided not to risk that and made a plea arrangement instead that led to a suspended sentence. Hover v. State, 773 So. 2d 421 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The trial judge properly accepted a guilty plea on a charge of sexual battery, notwithstanding that the defendant only admitted to attempting to penetrate the victim, while a sexual battery charge requires actual penetration, since the defendant's admission was sufficient to constitutes a "bare admission of guilt." Myers v. State, 770 So. 2d 542 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The law does not require that a defendant admit every aspect of a charge against him; instead, a guilty plea will be considered valid even though the defendant makes only a bare admission of guilt. Gazzier v. State, 744 So. 2d 776 (Miss. 1999).

Without a factual basis, a guilty plea should not be accepted by the court. Gaines v. State, 736 So. 2d 433 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Improper inducement.

Where defendant agreed to plead guilty to a charge of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute in exchange for the district attorney's recommendation of house arrest but where house arrest was not a permissible punishment for that offense, the district attorney's promise was illusory. Because no valid contract was formed, the agreement was an improper inducement to plead guilty in violation of Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3), and defendant should have been allowed to withdraw his guilty plea. Littleton v. State, 3 So. 3d 760 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 102 (Miss. 2009).

In a case where defendant entered a guilty plea to possession of cocaine, post-conviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel was denied because there was nothing to support this other than defendant's own bare assertions; moreover, the record did not demonstrate that defendant was coerced into pleading guilty. Ealey v. State, 967 So. 2d 685 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's allegation that he was threatened with 20 years' imprisonment, a punishment below the maximum for the charged crime of sale of cocaine under Miss. Code Ann. § 41-29-139(c), if he did not enter a plea of guilty, did not make his guilty plea involuntary. Morgan v. State, 966 So. 2d 204 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Inmate's petition for post-conviction relief was denied under Miss. Code Ann. 99-39-11 because a transcript of a plea hearing failed to establish that counsel induced him into pleading guilty; there was a strong presumption of the validity of the statements made by the inmate during the actual plea hearing, and as such a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed. Hull v. State, 933 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Court erred by refusing to allow defendant to withdraw guilty plea where the attorney misinformed defendant about his rights regarding the withdrawal of the plea, and therefore, defendant's counsel was ineffective. Harris v. State, 806 So. 2d 1127 (Miss. 2002).

Notwithstanding the assertion that defense counsel threatened and coerced the defendant into pleading guilty so that he would not have to face the death sentence, there was substantial evidence to indicate that counsel did not force or improperly induce him where counsel denied that they told the defendant to lie under oath and also denied that they forced or improperly induced him to plead guilty in any way, and, in fact, even the defendant's family members admitted that counsel did not force him to plead guilty. Rochell v. State, 748 So. 2d 103 (Miss. 1999).

Judicial participation.

The trial judge did not actively participate in plea bargain negotiations when, during a pretrial motion hearing, the judge stated to the defendant (1) that if pretrial motions were presented to the court, then the defendant would not be allowed to enter into any plea bargain agreement, (2) that the defendant might be required to proceed to trial on the merits of the case, and (3) that if convicted, the defendant would be sentenced to serve life imprisonment without parole; the judge merely ensured that the defendant was fully informed of what he would be facing if he chose not to go forth with plea bargain negotiations. Goss v. State, 730 So. 2d 568 (Miss. 1998).

Knowing and intelligent.

Although a prisoner argued he unwillingly pleaded guilty to manslaughter, the prisoner's motion for post-conviction relief was properly dismissed because according to the plea colloquy, the trial court thoroughly advised the prisoner of his rights, the nature and elements of the charges, as well as the consequences of the guilty plea; the colloquy also showed the prisoner expressly indicated to the trial court's satisfaction that he understood each of the trial court's advisements, and he wished to waive the rights ordinarily due a criminal defendant. Henderson v. State, 89 So. 3d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 2012 Miss. LEXIS 283 (Miss. June 7, 2012).

Defendant's claim that his plea of guilty was not intelligently and voluntarily made pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3) was without merit because given the totality of what was made known to defendant in the petition to plead guilty and at the plea qualification hearing, he was made aware prior to entering his guilty plea that he could not expect to receive parole or early release as a result of his plea of guilty to the sex offenses. Walton v. State, 16 So. 3d 66 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

That defendant was not informed of the fact that he would have to register as a sex offender under Miss. Code Ann. § 45-33-25(1) prior to entering his guilty plea did not equate to a failure to advise defendant of the maximum or minimum penalty of the crime of sexual assault or to a waiver of his rights because the registration requirement was merely a collateral, rather than punitive, consequence of his guilty plea. Magyar v. State, 18 So. 3d 851 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), affirmed by 18 So. 3d 807, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 388 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant was not entitled to post-conviction relief on the ground that his attorney coerced his guilty plea by misinforming him as to the possible sentence he faced, because the record was clear that defendant was informed as to the possible sentence as required under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b). Thomas v. State, 10 So. 3d 514 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 240 (Miss. 2009).

Defendant's guilty plea was knowing and intelligent based on his awareness of the maximum and minimum sentences, although there was initial confusion among the attorneys and the circuit judge. The sentences were explained to defendant, he initialed a form that contained the sentences, and he was given time to consult with his attorney and family members before he decided to enter his guilty plea. Hynes v. State, 987 So. 2d 496 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's guilty pleas were intelligently and voluntarily entered where an otherwise voluntarily and intelligently entered plea of guilty may not be invalidated by a defendant's reliance on his trial counsel's accurate advice. Defendant was never given any information regarding the prospects of parole in relation to his guilty pleas, and he made no claim that his trial attorney made any claims regarding parole other than if defendant proceeded to trial, he may receive life without parole. Keith v. State, 999 So. 2d 383 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 999 So. 2d 852, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 52 (Miss. 2009).

Record of the plea colloquy contradicted the inmate's argument that his guilty plea was not knowing or voluntary where it showed that the circuit judge had fully explained the inmate's rights, the inmate had waived those rights, and the inmate had said that no one had promised him anything or threatened him to get him to plead guilty. Duhart v. State, 981 So. 2d 1056 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

A defendant who received the maximum non-habitual-offender sentence, after entering a "blind" plea of guilty to a charge of burglary of a dwelling in exchange for avoiding a habitual-offender sentence, pled knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily because, among other factors, he notified the trial judge that, as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b), he understood what his maximum sentence could be. Lockhart v. State, 980 So. 2d 336 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Defendant's guilty plea was voluntarily and intelligently entered because he had signed a petition to enter a guilty plea that clearly stated the minimum and maximum sentences, and in which he indicated that his physical and mental health was satisfactory and that he was not under the influence of any drugs or intoxicants at the time of the document's signing. Madden v. State, 991 So. 2d 1231 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 997 So. 2d 924, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 507 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's assertion that his plea of guilty was unknowingly and involuntarily entered was both barred by statute and without merit, because defendant pled guilty on August 13, 2002, and the motion for post-conviction relief was filed on December 14, 2006, and the trial court made a finding that the guilty plea was intelligently, understandingly, freely and voluntarily made and there was a sufficient factual basis for the entry of the guilty plea, and there was nothing in the record to suggest otherwise. Defendant was asked if he understood the charge against him and if he was, in fact, guilty of the crime, the trial court specifically told defendant what the minimum and maximum sentences were for the crime, and defendant was asked if anyone had threatened him, promised him anything or made any threats. Hull v. State, 983 So. 2d 331 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Despite defendant's contention to the contrary, defendant's plea was knowingly and intelligently rendered; when the nature of the plea agreement was described to defendant by the trial court, defendant said that the description was accurate. Brown v. State, 989 So. 2d 882 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 993 So. 2d 832, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 384 (Miss. 2008).

Where defendant had already filed one post-conviction relief motion raising the same issues, a successive writ was barred under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6); at any rate, his guilty plea waived any speedy trial issue, and defendant was not allowed to recast the issue under the guise of ineffective assistance of counsel. Myers v. State, 976 So. 2d 917 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 977 So. 2d 343, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 112 (Miss. 2008).

Because a prior motion for post-conviction relief (PCR) had been denied, a second motion was denied as impermissibly successive under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23(6); defendant did not show any applicable intervening case law or newly discovered evidence that would have excepted his claim from the procedural bar. Riggs v. State, 967 So. 2d 650 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied in a case where defendant contended that a plea was involuntarily given due to diminished mental capacity; defendant stated that he understood the charges against him and the consequences of a plea under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b) and defense counsel stated that it was his opinion that defendant was able to enter into the plea. Nichols v. State, 955 So. 2d 962 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

During the entry of defendant's guilty plea, defendant acknowledged the range of penalties for possession of child pornography and for failing to register as a sex offender; the record did not support defendant's contention he involuntarily and unintelligently entered into his guilty plea. Peckinpaugh v. State, 949 So. 2d 86 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 949 So. 2d 37, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 112 (Miss. 2007).

Appellate court affirmed the denial of an inmate's motion for post-conviction relief as the inmate was informed under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b) of the charge against him, the possible sentence and fine that could be imposed, and the rights he gave up by pleading guilty. Hill v. State, 935 So. 2d 416 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 942 So. 2d 164, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 766 (Miss. 2006).

Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(3) required that the circuit court conduct a hearing on the record to ensure that the defendant's plea was voluntarily and intelligently made; the record reflected that Rule 8.04(3) was satisfied in the case where defendant's guilty plea was intelligently and voluntarily made. Beene v. State, 910 So. 2d 1152 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Defendant's argument that his plea was involuntarily and unintelligently entered because he was only 16 years of age at the time his plea was entered, his parents were not present at the court proceedings, and he had been misled as to the length of the sentence he would receive if he pled guilty, was rejected. The circuit court had original jurisdiction since defendant was charged with armed robbery, and being properly before the circuit court, his infancy did not prevent him from entering a valid plea of guilty without parental accompaniment; moreover, the record showed defendant responded in the affirmative that he understood there was no minimum sentence, but that the maximum sentence for armed robbery was life in prison. Haynes v. State, 906 So. 2d 762 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

In a possession of marijuana case, the trial court did not err in accepting defendant's guilty plea as the record reflected that defendant was informed of and said he understood the constitutional rights he was waiving by pleading guilty and the maximum and minimum sentences for his crime. Hughes v. State, 901 So. 2d 1274 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Circuit judge fully explained the nature of the charges and the consequences of petitioner's guilty plea, and the record also contradicted petitioner's claim that petitioner was under the impression that the plea was of guilty to manslaughter rather than murder; indeed, the judge talked to petitioner about the crime of murder, not manslaughter, informing petitioner that the maximum penalty for murder was a life sentence and that there was no minimum sentence, and the transcript showed that petitioner's plea was knowing, voluntary, and intelligent. Brown v. State, 876 So. 2d 422 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Newly discovered evidence.

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because appellant inmate's guilty plea to manslaughter under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04 negated any claim of newly discovered evidence. Jenkins v. State, 986 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 987 So. 2d 451, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 369 (Miss. 2008).

Parties.

The only governmental officer with authority to enter into plea negotiations is the prosecuting attorney. Evans v. State, 725 So. 2d 613 (Miss. 1997), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1097, 143 L. Ed. 2d 34 (1999).

Post-conviction proceedings.

Although a prisoner argued the trial court failed to conduct a mental evaluation and a competency hearing under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 9.06, a post-conviction court properly dismissed the prisoner's motion for post-conviction relief because the prisoner indicated in his plea petition that he did not have a mental impairment and responded to the trial judge during the plea colloquy that he had never been treated for a mental disorder. Henderson v. State, 89 So. 3d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011), writ of certiorari denied by 2012 Miss. LEXIS 283 (Miss. June 7, 2012).

Trial court did not err in denying an inmate's motion for post-conviction relief because the record contained sufficient evidence that the inmate pleaded guilty to culpable-negligence manslaughter, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-47, and aggravated assault, Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-7, with knowledge and understanding of the elements of each crime when the prosecutor's on-the-record statement reiterated the charging language in the indictment and evinced an accurate showing that the inmate was informed of the essential elements of the crimes; factual bases existed for the pleas because there was substantial evidence that the inmate committed the crimes. and through his plea petitions, the inmate was specifically informed of the statutory maximum and minimum punishment that each crime carried. Williams v. State, 31 So. 3d 69 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

Where appellant was convicted on a plea of guilty to murder, he filed a petition for post-conviction relief claiming that his plea was not knowing and voluntary under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3), (4); however, appellant's bare allegations were insufficient to support the claim. Appellant failed to cite to any authority to support his argument that his guilty plea was not valid, because he did not have a copy of his plea transcript. Smith v. State, 1 So. 3d 937 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Recommendation Not Binding.

Increase in appellant inmate's sentence after he repeatedly interrupted the court did not require a second plea hearing under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04 because the inmate did not enter a separate guilty plea; the circuit court had already accepted the inmate's guilty plea as voluntarily and knowingly entered and he was specifically informed that the circuit judge had the authority to sentence him to the maximum sentence of twenty-five years. White v. State, 22 So. 3d 378 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Right to counsel.

After reviewing the inmate's plea hearing, it was apparent that he was fully advised of his rights, including those rights he waived, and while the trial court did not advise the inmate that had he decided to forego the option of pleading guilty and proceeding to trial he would have had a right to counsel, Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04 makes clear that such a duty is only placed upon a trial court if the accused is not represented by an attorney; the inmate was represented by retained counsel and thus the trial court had no duty to advise the inmate that he had the right to counsel, and there was no question that his guilty plea was knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently entered. Thompson v. State, 990 So. 2d 265 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Standards.

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where probation was revoked because a nolo contendere plea was entered; therefore, defendant waived his right to argue that the evidence was insufficient to convict him and that he was innocent. Welch v. State, 958 So. 2d 1288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 21 (Miss. 2008).

Where defendant entered a plea of guilty to the sale of cocaine, he waived his right to cross-examine the district attorney about comments concerning defendant's unrelated charge for aggravated assault; the comments were not improper or prejudicial. Vaughn v. State, 964 So. 2d 509 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 389 (Miss. 2007).

Once a defendant notifies the trial court of his intent to plead guilty, it is the duty of the court to address him personally and inquire to determine whether the nature and consequences of the guilty pleas are understood; and to advise him of the maximum and minimum penalties provided by law. Mitchell v. State, 795 So. 2d 620 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Defendant's sentence and guilty pleas were vacated, where neither his attorney nor trial judge advised him that he was facing a minimum mandatory sentence of thirty years without parole, and he was led to believe, and justifiably expected, that he would receive a lesser sentence if he cooperated with narcotics agents. Courtney v. State, 704 So. 2d 1352 (Miss. Ct. App. 1997).

The defendant was entitled to the vacatur of his guilty plea to manslaughter and to a trial where the court informed the defendant that malice aforethought was not an element of manslaughter, but did not discuss the precise elements of manslaughter applicable to his actions, and also failed to inform the defendant of the applicable minimum sentence. Austin v. State, 734 So. 2d 234 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Voluntariness.

Post-conviction relief was properly dismissed based on an allegation that a guilty plea was involuntary under Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3) because the record showed that appellant was fully informed and aware of what was involved in a drug court program, and he accepted its terms and obligations. Moreover, appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel when his defense attorney recommended a guilty plea. Thomas v. State, 65 So. 3d 341 (Miss. Ct. App. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying an inmate's motion for post-conviction relief because his guilty plea was not the product of coercion from his counsel; even if the inmate accepted a plea bargain entirely because he was afraid of the death penalty, the plea would nonetheless be voluntary. Barnes v. State, 51 So. 3d 986 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010), writ of certiorari denied by 50 So. 3d 1003, 2011 Miss. LEXIS 44 (Miss. 2011).

Where appellant was arrested for the sale of cocaine after an undercover officer purchased the cocaine from him, appellant requested the videotape of the transaction during discovery; the State complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 9.04 giving the tape to defense counsel who viewed it. The fact that appellant did not view the videotape before entering his guilty plea did not affect the voluntariness of his guilty plea to the sale of cocaine; the record showed that the judge informed appellant of the charges against him, the consequences of his plea, and the penalties provided by law, as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b). Gray v. State, 29 So. 3d 791 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 2010 Miss. LEXIS 139 (Miss. Mar. 11, 2010).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where appellant inmate contended that his plea was not knowing and voluntary based on counsel's alleged assertion that the inmate would not receive the maximum sentence; an appellate court gave significant weight to the statements that the inmate made during the plea colloquy. He stated that he was not promised favors or inducements to plead guilty and that no one tried to force or threaten him to plead guilty. Kambule v. State, 19 So. 3d 120 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 19 So. 3d 82, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 488 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 3354, 176 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4511, 78 U.S.L.W. 3700 (U.S. 2010).

Where appellant pled guilty to capital murder and aggravated assault after appearing before two different judges twice in two days, she was advised by the trial court of the consequences of pleading guilty, reviewed the case with counsel, and stated under oath that she understood her rights and that by pleading guilty she waived several of them. Appellant also stated that she was not pleading guilty because of any promises, threats, or other inducements; therefore, the post-conviction court did not err by finding that her plea was voluntarily and intelligently entered for purposes of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.04(A)(3). Wilbanks v. State, 14 So. 3d 752 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 15 So. 3d 426, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 382 (Miss. 2009).

Circuit court judge never told defendant that he would, in fact, be placed in the drug court program and the circuit court judge also asked defendant whether anyone had promised him anything to persuade him to plead guilty; defendant swore that no one had promised him anything to induce his guilty plea, and the circuit court informed defendant of the possibility that defendant would not be accepted into the drug program. Bliss v. State, 2 So. 3d 777 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009).

Court rejected defendant's contention that his guilty pleas were not knowingly, voluntarily, or intelligently given because his counsel deceived him regarding the recommended sentences and forced him to lie to the trial court regarding his knowledge of the guilty pleas. The transcript of the proceeding clearly contradicted this claim because it showed that the State specifically reported the recommended sentences at the hearing and that defendant understood those, and the trial judge specifically asked defendant whether he was threatened or promised anything in exchange for his guilty pleas, and defendant responded in the negative. Hamberlin v. State, 995 So. 2d 142 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellant inmate's motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because he failed to show that he received ineffective assistance of counsel based on a failure to object to the terms of a sentence; the inmate also failed to show that his plea was involuntary based on alleged misinformation given by trial counsel regarding sentencing. Garner v. State, 21 So. 3d 629 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2009 Miss. LEXIS 571 (Miss. Nov. 19, 2009).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where appellant inmate had pled guilty to the offense of statutory rape because the plea was voluntarily given under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3); there was no assertion that the plea was induced by fear, violence, or deception. Although an attorney explained to the trial court why the inmate felt he was not guilty, the inmate admitted that he was guilty of each element of the crime. Kimble v. State, 2 So. 3d 688 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 999 So. 2d 1280, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 94 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari

Guilty plea was voluntary under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3) because the inmate's attorney represented to the trial court and the trial court, during the colloquy, confirmed that the inmate was well aware of the charge to which he intended to plead guilty, including the amendment of the indictment. Swift v. State, 6 So. 3d 1108 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 11 So. 3d 1250, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 175 (Miss. 2009), writ of certiorari denied by 130 S. Ct. 100, 175 L. Ed. 2d 67, 2009 U.S. LEXIS 5184, 78 U.S.L.W. 3172 (U.S. 2009).

Where appellant pleaded guilty to grand larceny, the trial questioned him about his understanding of the charge and the consequences of entering a guilty plea as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4); nothing in the record raised a question as to appellant's competence and he declined an opportunity to withdraw his guilty plea. The post-conviction court properly found that his guilty plea was voluntary. Myles v. State, 988 So. 2d 436 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellant inmate's guilty plea was entered voluntarily because (1) the inmate signed and filed a petition to enter a guilty plea, which advised him of his legal and constitutional rights and the consequences of the plea; (2) the trial court took considerable efforts to ensure that the inmate entered his guilty plea voluntarily and intelligently; and (3) there was no evidence in the record that the inmate's plea was induced by coercion, under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3). Busby v. State, 994 So. 2d 225 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 998 So. 2d 1010, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 672 (Miss. 2008).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because appellant inmate's guilty plea to manslaughter under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04 was voluntary in nature where he testified that he was guilty, he was satisfied with his attorney, and that he understood the charges against him. Moreover, the entry of a voluntary plea waived speedy trial and confession-related issues. Jenkins v. State, 986 So. 2d 1031 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008), writ of certiorari denied by 987 So. 2d 451, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 369 (Miss. 2008).

Post-conviction relief was denied since guilty pleas entered to three counts of selling cocaine we revoluntary in nature under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04; appellant inmate made a sworn statement that he was mentally competent, he stated he was not under the influence, he waived his rights, and he admitted guilt. Ramsey v. State, 973 So. 2d 294 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Appellate court found no merit in defendant's argument that defendant's guilty plea was involuntary because the petitioner acknowledged that defendant understood the charges and knew and understood the maximum sentence for the crimes charged, and the record reflected that the petitioner fully understood the consequences of a guilty plea. Frith v. State, 984 So. 2d 316 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 2008 Miss. LEXIS 293 (Miss. June 12, 2008).

In an armed robbery case, a motion for post-conviction relief was properly denied because defendant's plea was not involuntary or coerced, in violation Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04, merely because counsel advised defendant to plead guilty or because defendant feared that he would get a life sentence under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-3-79. Robinson v. State, 964 So. 2d 609 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction motion should not have been summarily dismissed under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-11 where defendant entered a guilty plea to kidnapping and received 20 years in prison because, although the plea was facially correct, the evidence presented by defendant indicated that his attorney misrepresented the sentence as probation, and this was a proper attack on the voluntariness of the plea and formed the basis for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim; however, ineffective assistance of counsel was not shown regarding the attorney's representation that a victim was unable to testify at the plea hearing on the issue of guilt or innocence based on an incomplete transcript since no prejudice was shown. Mitchener v. State, 964 So. 2d 1188 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's motion for post-conviction relief was denied on the basis that a plea was involuntary because this issue was not preserved for review; notwithstanding the bar, defendant agreed to the recommendation of the prosecution, which was exactly the sentence that he received, and the fact that a suspended sentence was later revoked did not render the plea involuntary. Ausbon v. State, 959 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Defendant's motion for post-conviction relief was denied on the basis that an indictment was flawed because this issue was not preserved for review; notwithstanding the bar, the issue was meritless because the indictment stated that a crime occurred "at a certain dwelling owned and occupied," which was sufficient to reflect a burglary of an occupied dwelling, and the transcript of the guilty plea showed that defendant was pleading guilty to this crime, and that he knowing, understandingly, freely, and voluntarily entered a plea to such. Ausbon v. State, 959 So. 2d 592 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was denied in a case where probation was revoked because a nolo contendere plea was voluntary under Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3) since defendant knew the consequences of his plea; he gave contradictory statements regarding his knowledge of the terms of probation and whether the terms would have affected his decision to plead guilty. Welch v. State, 958 So. 2d 1288 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 973 So. 2d 244, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 21 (Miss. 2008).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where a plea was entered to burglary of a dwelling under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-17-23 because the record showed that defendant was indicted for this charge; all charges were contained in the same indictment and all offenses were part of a related series of events. Robertson v. State, 959 So. 2d 597 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Denial of the inmate's motion for post-conviction relief was proper because the judge's failure to explain each right during the plea hearing was not fatal to the voluntariness of the inmate's plea; the video and plea petition sufficiently explained the constitutional rights that the inmate waived if pleading guilty and the trial court had determined in a face-to-face exchange that the inmate understood the video and plea petition. Knight v. State, 959 So. 2d 598 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 964 So. 2d 508, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 538 (Miss. 2007).

Petition for postconviction relief was denied because a plea was not involuntarily entered due to the fact that it was open in nature; defendant was advised of the nature of the charges, and his signed and sworn guilty plea petition indicated that the plea would be open. Moody v. State, 964 So. 2d 564 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a hearing for post-conviction relief, a trial court did not err by changing a sentence imposed to reflect the amended sentencing range under Miss. Code Ann. § 97-21-33 where the facts showed that defendant entered a valid and voluntary guilty plea, but was sentenced illegally; it was an inadvertent failure of the trial court, the district attorney, and defense counsel to realize there was a change in the maximum sentence. Coleman v. State, 971 So. 2d 637 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 681 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 2007 Miss. LEXIS 684 (Miss. Dec. 6, 2007), writ of certiorari denied by 973 So. 2d 244, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 686 (Miss. 2007).

Record plainly showed that defendant was asked all required questions and expressed his understanding of the charges against him, the rights he was waiving in pleading guilty, and the fact that the court was not bound by the recommendation of the state. Callins v. State, 975 So. 2d 243 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), reversed by 975 So. 2d 219, 2008 Miss. LEXIS 106 (Miss. 2008).

Defendant's guilty plea was entered into voluntarily where, during the plea colloquy, defendant was informed of the charge against him, the effect of the plea, what rights he would waive if he pled guilty and the possible sentence he could receive; there was no evidence to support defendant's contention that he was pressured into pleading guilty because of the habitual offender language in the indictment. Turner v. State, 961 So. 2d 734 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari dismissed by 968 So. 2d 948, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 627 (Miss. 2007).

Where a guilty plea was entered in a sexual battery case, there was no way to later challenge based on an allegation that a confession was involuntary since the right to do so was waived by the entry of the plea; therefore, post-conviction relief was properly denied on this ground. Parkman v. State, 953 So. 2d 315 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

In a statutory rape case, defendant's plea was not involuntary or coerced based on his testimony during the plea hearing; defendant indicated that he understood the charges against him, the possible sentences, and the fact that he was waiving certain rights. Plummer v. State, 966 So. 2d 186 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 966 So. 2d 172, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 553 (Miss. 2007).

Request for post-conviction relief was properly denied without an evidentiary hearing under Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-11(2) where the record contradicted a claim that counsel mistakenly informed defendant about the charge he was pleading guilty to, a claim of coercion, and a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; the case number was in the heading of the document, defendant acknowledged an intent to nolle prosse a remaining charge, and the parties took notice of this agreement at the plea hearing. Hoyt v. State, 952 So. 2d 1016 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was denied in a case where defendant contended that a plea was not voluntary because this claim was was contradicted by her statements at the plea hearing; defendant acknowledged that she was waiving certain rights; moreover, she stated that she had been informed of the minimum and maximum sentences applicable to her case, pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(b). Jones v. State, 948 So. 2d 499 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied in a case where defendant pled guilty to the sale of cocaine, because the court asked defendant numerous questions during the guilty plea hearing, including whether he was entering his guilty plea freely, voluntarily, and knowingly, and defendant responded affirmatively to the question. Defendant also acknowledged in his guilty plea petition that he could receive a sentence of zero to 60 years if convicted for the sale of cocaine as an enhanced offender, and that by pleading guilty, he could receive a sentence of zero to 30 years. Morris v. State, 922 So. 2d 860 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Appellant sentenced to 30 years in custody upon his plea of guilty to the sale of cocaine was not entitled to post-conviction relief; there was a factual basis to support appellant's plea, and it was voluntarily made after appellant was advised of the charges against him and the sentencing consequences of a guilty plea. Vaughn v. State, 964 So. 2d 509 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied en banc by 959 So. 2d 1051, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 389 (Miss. 2007).

Defendant's guilty plea was voluntarily made where defendant was informed of all rights being waived, the nature of the charges against him, and the consequences of the plea; furthermore, defendant had 13 prior convictions, to some of which he had entered guilty pleas. Hubanks v. State, 952 So. 2d 254 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari denied by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 171 (Miss. 2007).

Denial of the inmate's motion for post-conviction relief was proper where the fact that the inmate had pled guilty to sexual battery because the State would have sought a life sentence at trial did not render his plea involuntary. Additionally, the record indicated that the trial judge explicitly informed the inmate that by pleading guilty he was waiving his right to appeal. Jones v. State, 922 So. 2d 31 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

Petitioner's guilty plea was voluntarily and knowingly made because the trial court clearly informed the petitioner that he had the right to a trial by jury, the right to cross-examine witnesses against him, and the right against self-incrimination, and the trial court conducted an examination into the petitioner's competence, inquiring about his level of education, ability to read and write, lack of intoxication, and understanding of the charges against him; the petitioner specifically testified that he was guilty of the charged offense, and he was entering his plea voluntarily, free from any threats, coercion or intimidation. White v. State, 921 So. 2d 402 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006).

During the plea hearing, defendant acknowledged that he was a participant in the armed robbery, and described the events of the robbery. Defendant's plea was not rendered involuntary because his petition was to the crime of simple robbery; during the plea hearing, the court interlineated the petition indicating "armed" robbery and initialed the modification; defendant offered no objection to the change. Baldwin v. State, 923 So. 2d 218 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 927 So. 2d 750, 2006 Miss. LEXIS 141 (Miss. 2006).

Record showed that defendant, his appointed counsel, the trial court, and the prosecutor were all under the impression that defendant had been indicted for armed robbery; therefore, defendant was never informed of the true nature of the charge against him or of the consequences of pleading guilty to robbery; thus, defendant could not have made a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary decision to plead guilty. Garner v. State, 944 So. 2d 934 (Miss. Ct. App. 2006), writ of certiorari dismissed by 951 So. 2d 563, 2007 Miss. LEXIS 534 (Miss. 2007).

Appellant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel that rendered her plea involuntary when her counsel allegedly told her that she would receive a more lenient sentence by pleading guilty as the trial judge informed her and she acknowledged during her plea hearing the appropriate sentencing range associated with her plea. Smith v. State, 919 So. 2d 989 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Where a twenty-one-year-old defendant entered a plea of guilty to charges of statutory rape, the trial court correctly admonished defendant that his sentence would be not more than thirty years imprisonment. The record indicated that defendant understood he was waiving his constitutional rights by pleading guilty; the appellate court rejected his claim that the plea was not voluntary. Carpenter v. State, 899 So. 2d 916 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 898 So. 2d 679, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 274 (Miss. 2005).

Transcript of the plea hearing reflected that the trial judge questioned defendant extensively to determine whether his pleas were knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently made where the trial judge inquired as to whether defendant fully understood the questions asked, whether he was able to read and write, and whether he was under the influence of any substance; defendant responded to the questions in such a manner that the trial judge determined that his pleas were intelligently made and defendant executed a petition to enter a guilty plea and acknowledged that his attorneys conferred with him regarding the information contained in the petition. Smith v. State, 910 So. 2d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005).

Inmate's due process rights were not violated when a district attorney sent a letter to a parole board objecting to parole because there was no breach of a plea agreement; the district attorney kept the promise of making a sentencing recommendation, and eligibility for parole did not affect a voluntariness analysis since there was no right to parole. Garlotte v. State, 915 So. 2d 460 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 921 So. 2d 1279, 2005 Miss. LEXIS 769 (Miss. 2005).

Where an inmate's sworn statements when entering his guilty plea contradicted the argument he made later that his guilty plea had been involuntary, the court properly denied inmate's postconviction motion without a hearing. Hearvey v. State, 887 So. 2d 836 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Dismissal of the inmate's petition for postconviction relief was proper where his guilty plea was voluntarily and intelligently entered. At his plea hearing, he stated that he was competent to enter a plea of guilty and stated that he understood the nature of the charge against him. Ryals v. State, 881 So. 2d 933 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Appellant's plea of guilty to two counts of arson was entered voluntarily and intelligently as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(3) because appellant signed the petition to plead guilty; the petition clearly and thoroughly enumerated appellant's rights under the United States Constitution; appellant stated at her plea hearing that nobody had threatened her, abused her, or promised her anything to cause her to plead guilty; and appellant stated at her plea hearing that she was pleading guilty because she was guilty. Smith v. State, 880 So. 2d 1094 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Defendant's petition to enter a guilty plea and the transcript reflected that he was aware that he would be pleading guilty to the amended charge of attempted possession of precursor chemicals, and that his attorney had gone over both the petition to enter a guilty plea and the amended charge with him. Thus, his assertion that his plea was unintelligent and involuntary was rejected, as was his argument that counsel was ineffective in failing to explain that an "attempted possession" conviction did not carry a lesser sentence. Even if that had been true, defendant received a favorable plea agreement (all but five years suspended), he had admitted guilt and that he understood the nature of the offense, and he failed to show the outcome of a jury trial would have been different. Green v. State, 880 So. 2d 377 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Record did not support defendant's claim that his guilty plea was involuntary, as the transcript from the plea hearing clearly showed that defendant was informed of his constitutional rights and those he was waiving by pleading guilty. The transcript also showed that defendant was told the maximum sentences he could receive and he also signed a petition to plead guilty, so he was adequately informed of the implications of pleading guilty. Ray v. State, 876 So. 2d 1032 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Appellant was properly denied postconviction relief, because, the procedural bar notwithstanding, appellant's stating under oath to having understood the consequences of pleading guilty and to not having been subjected to any representations regarding the sentence received, proved meritless the argument that appellant's plea to burglary and possession of cocaine had not been voluntary. Williams v. State, 872 So. 2d 711 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Before pleading guilty to manslaughter, petitioner responded to the trial court: (1) that petitioner had fully discussed the facts and circumstances of the offense with counsel, including a discussion of possible defenses and elements of the crime of manslaughter, (2) that petitioner was satisfied with counsel's representation, (3) that petitioner understood that by pleading guilty petitioner was waiving specific constitutional rights, (4) that petitioner committed the offense for which petitioner was charged, (5) that petitioner was not on drugs or other medications or being treated for a mental illness and (6) that petitioner was not induced to plead guilty by threats or intimidation or by promises of leniency. Thus, petitioner's guilty plea was knowingly and voluntarily entered. Jones v. State, 885 So. 2d 83 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004), cert. denied, 883 So. 2d 1180 (Miss. 2004).

Defendant argued that the guilty plea was involuntary because of diminished mental capacity, and that defendant was coached into entering a guilty plea by counsel. However, defendant had been advised of the nature of the charge and its consequences, as well as the maximum and minimum sentences. Defendant had in fact stated on the record that defendant's mental condition had not affected the decision to enter a plea of guilty, but that the plea was entered because defendant was guilty and for no other reason; thus, the record showed defendant entered the plea voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently. Herrod v. State, 901 So. 2d 635 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief upon asserting that the plea made was involuntary where the trial court questioned petitioner, in compliance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A), and petitioner responded that: (1) petitioner had fully discussed the case with counsel, including the elements of the offense and any possible defenses, (2) petitioner was satisfied with the services rendered by counsel, (3) petitioner understood the specific rights available and that a guilty plea waived those rights, and (4) petitioner had committed the charged offense. Petitioner's assertion of incorrect advice as to parole eligibility was inconsistent and conclusory and did not suffice as an ineffective assistance claim. Sutton v. State, 873 So. 2d 120 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Since the record did not include a plea transcript or a plea petition and there was no showing that a trial court had reviewed this evidence to determine whether or not a plea to drug charges had been voluntarily given, the case was reversed for further proceedings. White v. State, 867 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Inmate's petition for postconviction relief based on the alleged involuntariness of a plea was properly denied because the inmate was unable to establish that threats and coercion were used by defense counsel and law enforcement; moreover, the inmate had given sworn testimony to the contrary at the plea hearing. Steen v. State, 868 So. 2d 1038 (Miss. Ct. App. 2004).

Where defendant failed to show that a guilty plea was involuntary under former Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 3.03(2) [currently 8.04 (3)] and Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-23, and waived the right to object to the alleged illegality of the search of a vehicle, the trial court's findings were not clearly erroneous. Young v. State, 859 So. 2d 1025 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a guilty plea of manslaughter and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, defendant testified under oath that he understood what he was doing and that his mind was clear, and, additionally, he did not produce any supporting affidavits to the appellate court to establish his alleged mental deficiency, as required by Miss. Code Ann. § 99-39-9(e); thus, the trial judge did not abuse her discretion in not ordering, upon her own motion, a psychiatric evaluation of defendant pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 99-13-11 because she determined that the accused was competent to understand the nature of the charges as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(4)(a) and defendant's motion for post-conviction relief was denied. Richardson v. State, 856 So. 2d 758 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Where the trial court thoroughly questioned defendant in compliance with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(3) and defendant affirmed to the trial court that he was pleased with his attorney's representation, that he understood the charge, the minimum and maximum punishment, his constitutional rights, and had not been threatened or intimidated into pleading guilty, defendant's plea was voluntarily and intelligently given. Smith v. State, 845 So. 2d 730 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Petition for postconviction relief was properly denied because an inmate was unable to show that a plea to capital murder was involuntarily given; the inmate's fear of receiving the death penalty was insufficient to render the plea involuntary, and the evidence showed that the inmate had received all of the benefits promised in the plea bargain. Daughtery v. State, 847 So. 2d 284 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Plea transcript revealed that the trial court had determined that defendant's plea was voluntary based upon his responses to the court's questions regarding his plea; defendant indicated that there was nothing wrong with him and stated that he had not been threatened or coerced into pleading guilty, and therefore, defendant's plea had been freely, knowingly, and voluntarily entered. Sanders v. State, 847 So. 2d 903 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Defendant's plea of guilty was a knowing, intelligent and voluntary act as defendant was responsive to the trial judge's questions, was not mentally or emotionally ill, and was well advised of his rights by his attorney. Clark v. State, 834 So. 2d 747 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

In a case in which appellant sought postconviction collateral relief because he claimed, among other things, that his guilty pleas to drug charges were not voluntary, the trial court's finding that no promises were made to appellant was supported by substantial credible evidence in the record; appellant's guilty pleas were properly entered and accepted. Hentz v.

State, 852 So. 2d 70 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003), cert. denied, 860 So. 2d 315 (Miss. 2003).

Record affirmatively showed defendant's guilty plea to armed robbery was voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently made. Smith v. State, 845 So. 2d 703 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Inmate failed to establish that the inmate's guilty plea was coerced pursuant to Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(3), as holding the inmate without bail pending trial did not constitute coercion. Atwell v. State, 848 So. 2d 190 (Miss. Ct. App. 2003).

Record showed trial court fully and properly advised defendant prior to accepting defendant's guilty plea to assault of a law enforcement officer in 1980; defendant's motion for postconviction relief from the conviction on the grounds that the plea was involuntary was properly rejected. Blansett v. State, 841 So. 2d 165 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Defendant's plea petition in the record was unclear as to the minimum sentence for the charge of robbery, and during the plea hearing, the trial judge stated that the minimum term was three years when in reality it was zero; however, pleading under the assumption that the minimum penalty was three years when actually it was zero did not prejudice defendant, and defendant's plea was voluntary. Burnett v. State, 831 So. 2d 1216 (Miss. Ct. App. 2002).

Sufficient factual basis for defendant's guilty plea to robbery existed under former Miss. Unif. Crim. R. Cir. Ct. Prac. 3.03(2) despite defendant's allegations that he had not used force in taking three gold rings from his girlfriend where defendant repeatedly stated during the plea hearing that he had. Burks v. State, 821 So. 2d 844 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Although defendant could not read or write, trial court properly determined that defendant's guilty plea to sale of cocaine was voluntary. Carr v. State, 806 So. 2d 319 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 978, 123 S. Ct. 441, 154 L. Ed. 2d 338 (2002).

Trial court conducted a complete and thorough plea colloquy; defendant confirmed he understood the charges, possible penalties, and the rights he waived by pleading guilty. Brock v. State, 794 So. 2d 279 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Where there was no record of a plea made subsequent to the withdrawn plea, there was no way for the appellate court to determine whether the defendant's plea was voluntarily and knowingly made. Champion v. State, 792 So. 2d 329 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The guilty plea entered by the defendant was voluntary, notwithstanding a litany of examples which the defendant incorrectly claimed illustrated the involuntariness of the plea. Reeder v. State, 783 So. 2d 711 (Miss. 2001).

The defendant's guilty plea was not involuntary notwithstanding his argument that his attorney's threat to withdraw was coercive, where (1) defense counsel asked for leave to withdraw after the defendant asserted that he had not committed the charged crime when counsel had negotiated a plea bargain based on the defendant's multiple assurances that he wished to plead guilty, and (2) the defendant then did plead guilty after the judge inquired numerous times about his desire to so plead. Grimes v. State, 812 So. 2d 1094 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The court rejected the defendant's argument that his guilty plea was involuntary because he was not competent to enter a guilty plea, being only 14 years old, his parents were not present, and he was illiterate, as the defendant was 15 years old at the time of the hearing and testified that his lawyer had read every paragraph of the plea petition to him. Rush v. State, 811 So. 2d 431 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

The defendant's guilty plea was voluntary, notwithstanding that the trial judge misspoke at one point and stated that the defendant would have to serve 85% of his 20-year sentence, when the defendant had actually been sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment, where (1) the rest of the trial judge's lengthy explanation correctly stated that the defendant would receive two 15-year sentences, totaling 30 years and not 20, and that he would need to serve 85% percent of any sentence, and (2) the defendant did not raise this issue in his pleadings before the trial court or in his original appellate brief, and only mentioned the issue in his reply brief. Taylor v.

State, 766 So. 2d 830 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The record and the guilty plea petition evidenced the fact that the trial judge correctly determined that the defendant's plea was intelligently and voluntarily waived and that there was a factual basis for the guilty plea. Harris v. State, 757 So. 2d 195 (Miss. 2000).

A guilty plea was voluntarily made where the judge described the constitutional rights that the defendant was waiving by pleading guilty, and also explained each charge individually, asking the defendant if he understood the nature of the charges against him and whether he wished to plead guilty, and where, each time, the defendant replied in the affirmative. Garrette v. State, 763 So. 2d 177 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

The defendant was aware of his rights and his guilty plea was made voluntarily, notwithstanding that there were other defendants before the court entering pleas of guilty before the trial judge, and all them, including the defendant, were addressed as a group relative to whether they had been promised anything or threatened into pleading guilty, and if they were satisfied with the services of their counsel. Brasington v. State, 760 So. 2d 18 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Waiver of defenses.

Contrary to defendant's argument, a plea form signed by defendant and a transcript of the plea hearing demonstrated that defendant was informed of his right to remain silent as required by Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.04(A)(4)(c) and that the trial court would instruct the jury that it could not infer guilt from his silence. Johnson v. State, 987 So. 2d 501 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Post-conviction relief was properly denied in a drug case on the issues of the legality of a search and the sufficiency of the evidence because the entry of a guilty plea meant that these issues were procedurally barred. Ealey v. State, 967 So. 2d 685 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Motion for post-conviction relief was properly summarily denied in a case where defendant entered a guilty plea to a drug charge because that effectively waived certain issues that could have been raised at trial. Middlebrook v. State, 964 So. 2d 638 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Rule 8.05. Pro se defendants.

When the court learns that a defendant desires to act as his/her own attorney, the court shall on the record conduct an examination of the defendant to determine if the defendant knowingly and voluntarily desires to act as his/her own attorney. The court shall inform the defendant that:

1. The defendant has a right to an attorney, and if the defendant cannot afford an attorney, the state will appoint one free of charge to the defendant to defend or assist the defendant in his/her defense.

2. The defendant has the right to conduct the defense and that the defendant may elect to conduct the defense and allow whatever role (s)he desires to his/her attorney.

3. The court will not relax or disregard the rules of evidence, procedure or courtroom protocol for the defendant and that the defendant will be bound by and have to conduct himself/herself within the same rules as an attorney, that these rules are not simple and that without legal advice his/her ability to defend himself/herself will be hampered.

4. The right to proceed pro se usually increases the likelihood of a trial outcome unfavorable to the defendant.

5. Other matters as the court deems appropriate.

After instructing the defendant and ascertaining that the defendant understands these matters, the court will ascertain if the defendant still wishes to proceed pro se or if the defendant desires an attorney to assist him/her in his/her defense. If the defendant desires to proceed pro se, the court should determine if the defendant has exercised this right knowingly and voluntarily, and, if so, make the finding a matter of record. The court may appoint an attorney to assist the defendant on procedure and protocol, even if the defendant does not desire an attorney, but all disputes between the defendant and such attorney shall be resolved in favor of the defendant.

Circuit court did not err in allowing defendant to represent himself because the circuit court abided by the law and the requirements of Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.05; defendant made a knowing and intelligent waiver of his Sixth Amendment right to assistance of counsel, defendant knew that he had a right to counsel because counsel had been appointed to represent him, and defendant knew that his court-appointed counsel was representing him both before and after he elected to manage his own defense since he expressly agreed to counsel's continued assistance. Bradley v. State, 58 So. 3d 1166 (Miss. 2011).

Defendant's convictions for possession of more than 500 grams but less than 1 kilogram of marijuana with the intent to distribute within 1,500 feet of a church, and possession of more than 10 grams but less than 30 grams of cocaine with intent to distribute within 1,500 feet of a church were proper because the circuit court informed him that he had the right to the assistance of a court-appointed attorney and warned defendant of the dangers of proceeding pro se. Further, the circuit court also informed defendant that he should exercise his right to the assistance of a court-appointed attorney, but defendant refused based on his belief that a court-appointed attorney would be helping the State. Thompson v. State, 33 So. 3d 542 (Miss. Ct. App. 2010).

After the court informed defendant of each of the items set forth in Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.05, the court concluded, without making a specific finding on the record, that defendant had knowingly and voluntarily exercised his right to proceed pro se. While the court should have made the specific finding on the record, the court did in fact make the finding, although not on the record, and the substantive requirements of Rule 8.05 were met. Hairston v. State, 4 So. 3d 403 (Miss. Ct. App. 2009), writ of certiorari dismissed by 12 So. 3d 531, 2009 Miss. LEXIS 242 (Miss. 2009).

Trial judge adequately warned defendant that it was not in his best interest to proceed without counsel because (1) the trial judge stated that defendant had a good attorney, and (2) defendant would be bound by the same rules that everybody else who practices law had to follow. Jackson v. State, 1 So. 3d 921 (Miss. Ct. App. 2008).

Where defendant was convicted of robbery, the trial court complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & Cty. R. 8.05 in allowing defendant to represent himself; defendant was informed of every provision of the rule, and the trial judge also met with defendant in chambers and confirmed his understanding of the charges and the consequences of a conviction. Wallace v. State, 957 So. 2d 1047 (Miss. Ct. App. 2007).

Right to self representation.

Defendant's conviction for burglary of a dwelling was proper where the record showed that the trial court fully complied with Miss. Unif. Cir. & County Ct. Prac. R. 8.05 by thoroughly warning defendant of the dangers of self-representation, after which defendant unequivocally stated that he desired to proceed pro se with standby appointed counsel. Busick v. State, 906 So. 2d 846 (Miss. Ct. App. 2005), writ of certiorari denied by 2005 Miss. LEXIS 396 (Miss. June 23, 2005).

Trial court did not err in allowing defendant to proceed pro se on a kidnapping charge, and defendant could not allege ineffective assistance of counsel; record contained nothing to suggest that the trial court should have questioned defendant's claims to have a college degree and to have taken correspondence courses in law from Harvard while defendant was in prison. Brooks v. State, 835 So. 2d 958 (Miss. Ct. App. Jan. 28, 2003).

Rule 9.01. Pretrial publicity.

Prior to conclusion of the trial, no defense attorney, prosecuting attorney, clerk, deputy clerk, law enforcement official or other officer of the court, may release or authorize release of any statement for dissemination by any means of public communication on any matter concerning:

1. The prior criminal record of the defendant or the defendant's character or reputation;

2. The existence or contents of any confession, admission or statement given by the defendant; or the refusal or failure of the defendant to make any statement;

3. The defendant's performance on any examinations or tests, or the defendant's refusal or failure to submit to an examination or test;

4. The identity, testimony, or credibility of prospective witnesses;

5. The possibility of a plea of guilty to the offense charged, or a lesser offense; and

6. The defendant's guilt or innocence, or other matters relating to the merits of the case, or the evidence in the case.

Court rules.

Through the court reporter's repeated failure to complete trial transcripts in a timely manner, the court reporter had a serious negative effect on the efficiency of the Mississippi courts and the court reporter repeatedly ignored orders requiring him to complete transcripts and mandating that he turn over his tapes and notes to a replacement court reporter; thus, pursuant to Miss. Rules Governing Certified Ct. Reporters IX(A)(2), the court reporter was in willful constructive criminal contempt of the Mississippi Supreme Court for his repeated failure to comply with its orders and the Supreme Court revoked his court reporter certification, ordered him to pay all costs of the the contempt proceedings, including attorney's fees and court reporter's fees. In re Hoppock, 849 So. 2d 1275 (Miss. 2003).

Evidence.

A district attorney's comments to the press on the day prior to trial were improper and in violation of the rule, where the district attorney stated that the case was strong and would prove the defendant's guilt. Gulley v. State, 779 So. 2d 1140 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).
